It seems Gow has been at his theatre for four years, and during that period has never been able to get the schools to co-operate with him under any conditions until now.

Persistence, however, has been rewarded and to a point far beyond his expectations.

First of all he has been fortunate in placing "Study Guides" in high schools. Since this, they have formed a special class of forty to fifty students to study motion picture direction and production. One boy has been appointed to pick up a photo from Gow on each attraction, which is displayed on the school bulletin board in the auditorium.

On all historic attractions the students take the story and study it in advance of the play-date, they are asked to see the attraction and then they are queried by the principal concerning all angles, direction, production, sound, acting, etc.

The special class that has been formed is planning on attending in a body to see every attraction that they take for a study. Monthly programs are mailed to all principals and placed on the bulletin boards of their respective schools.

Perseverance rewarded? And how!

Terry C. W. Leung conveys the extremely interesting and gratifying news of the big business being enjoyed by theatres in Hong Kong, even though that city is in the midst of China's war for self-preservation.

Terry states that cinema business has improved on the whole, due to refugees from all parts of China patronizing the theatres. He reports that many smaller theatres are reaping big profits from the Chinese-taken war news which play to six or seven performances a day of an hour's duration each. Larger theatres have also been doing big business due to the newsreel shots.

We feel sure, Mr. Leung, that your friends across the sea are delighted to know of this and would like to hear from you often regarding cinema news in Hong Kong.

Round Table In Pictures

Described elsewhere in this issue is Lee Kline's eye arresting atmospheric front for "Alcatraz Island" at the Colonial Theatre, Germantown, Pa. Consisting of used boards repainted, display was replete with scene stills. Policemen were stationed at either side of box office.

Unusual, indeed, was use of Marx Brothers masks and horseshoes attached to seats of the Paris Theatre, Paris, France, for Elias Lapinere's date on "Day at the Races." Also described in this section is detailed account of sweepstake contest held in conjunction.

In advance of "A Damsel in Distress," R. W. Rhodes, Colonial Theatre, Akron, Ohio, tied up local dancing schools on a contest. Above is shown pair of Fred Astaire's autographed shoes secured from the Studios, which were awarded to best dancing couple so judged by representatives from two leading radio stations. Announcements were made daily over the air tieing in contest with the engagement at the Colonial and cooperating dance salons also plugged the date.

In a tieup with the Deputy Chief for Traffic Squads in Rochester, Art Krolick for the "Boy of the Streets" date at the Regent Theatre secured permission to distribute 200 cards as shown at left to all gas stations, parking spaces and road intersections in an advance campaign for the premiere engagement of the picture. Promotion was also arranged with local camera dealer whose newspaper ads included still of star, blowup of ad appearing in store window and theatre lobby.

On Atlantic City's famed Steel Pier, United Artists exploiteer Saul Renick for the engagement of "The Hurricane" there erected an immense electric sign which projected over the ocean front. Title letters measured eight feet in height with cast names listed directly below. Also planted in huge electric letters were wishes for a Happy New Year.

Quigley November Silver Plaque winner Lyle Harding, Sheridan Square Theatre, Pittsburgh, is awarded his plaque by Jock Sutherland, renowned coach of the University of Pittsburgh Panthers. Interested onlookers in the usual order are: All-American Marshall Goldberg; C. J. Latta, Warner Assistant Zone Manager; "Jock" Sutherland; All-American Frank Souchak, Lyle Harding and Joseph Feldman, Director of Advertising and Publicity for Warners' in Pittsburgh.

With one of the acts in "Manhattan Merry Go Round" featuring Max Terhune and his "dummy," Dave Jones, advertising manager Kerasotes Theatres, Springfield, Ill., located an amateur ventriloquist and planted him in front of theatre. Over public address system, man read script containing plugs about the picture to assembled crowd.

Here shown is "Hollywood Hotel" display created by Manager Rudy Kuehn and Assistant Bob Deitch, Stanley Theatre, Jersey City. Built of compo board with transparent windows, lighting effect was in series permitting various windows to light up at intervals.

QUICK REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

Kiddie Campaign

Concentrating on the children of Brandon, Vermont, Pearce Parkhurst, Brandon Theatre, distributed "Heidi" heralds, requesting each kiddie to have five friends sign their names and addresses in the space provided to prove they had read the picture copy. Pearce reports that the beauty of the idea was that each child in town was a walking ad for the picture and he also increased his mailing list as a result. To repay the children for their efforts, the manager distributed small Shirley Temple mirrors.

Through cooperation of school authorities, the picture was plugged in classrooms and teachers were urged to bring their pupils in groups. For the front of his house, Parkhurst used large cutout of Shirley atop his marquee with oversized cutout title letters.

Dance Contest

Through tieup with all local dance schools and the Akron Times-Press, R. W. Rhodes, Colonial Theatre, Akron, Ohio, for "Damsel in Distress" planted a Fred Astaire dancing contest. Promoted from studio, autographed shoes used by the star in making the picture were placed on display in the lobby two weeks ahead (see photo in Round Table picture section) and given to the best amateur dancer so judged by a committee which included representatives from WADC and WJW. As a result of the radio stations tying in, Rhodes was assured plenty of publicity over the ether.

Also promoted was distortion mirror from local amusement park, with the theatreman making up a "fun house" for his lobby. Paper came through with break, using two good pieces of art and story, plus a break in the Sunday roto page. Day ahead of opening, boy in tails and topper walked about town carrying sign reading, "You will be unfair to yourself if you don't see," etc., etc.

MAKES SCRAP BOOK CATALOGUE STYLE

During the past three years, Frank Ellis of the Del Rio Theatre, in Los Banos, California, has catalogued a scrap book from the MOTION PICTURE HERALD which gives him immediate access to the things most important to him, without going through a stack of books. Part of the titles in his scrap book are as follows:

THEATRE OPERATION:

Small Towns, Patrons' Rights, Fire and Emergency, Employees' Training and Kiddies' Clubs.

EXPLOITATION:

Seasonal Displays, Newspaper ads.

ROUND TABLE:

Good-Will, Passes, Hitting the Ball, Staff-Happy.

His other titles are: Maintenance Tabs, Reviews, Better Theatres, Theatre Law, Hollywood Scenes.

Barrett Wins Prize

Commonwealth Amusement Corporation closed its annual fall and winter managers' contest with Rex Barrett, manager of the Uptown, Columbia, Mo., winning the grand prize.

The contest this year was divided into a six-week steeplechase and an eight-week fall derby, with lap, race and grand prizes. Mr. Barrett led in the first, the six-weeks' campaign, with Jack Stevenson of the Gillioz Theatre, Monett, Mo., second, and Wendell Lenhart of the Plaza and Royal Theatres, Trenton, Mo., third. Prize winners in the last eight-week run were M. B. Smith, State, Garden City, Kan., L. W. Morris, Plaza and Strand, Great Bend, Kan., and Rex Barrett.

"Topper" Stuff

At a recent picnic and fishing contest, F. P. Larson, Paramount, Idaho Falls, Idaho, erected a large sign at entrance to grounds offering as a prize guest tickets to "Topper" to party making the largest catch for the afternoon. Every corner in business district was stencilled with picture title, all laundry bundles carried an insert card and thru tieup with chain grocer, all bags were imprinted. Bookmarks were planted in libraries and book stores and announcements made over address system at local dance hall.

Newspaper Contest

In connection with the recent showing of "High, Wide and Handsome" at the Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., Nat Silver planted a contest in local daily for which passes were awarded those submitting list containing greatest number of films in which the four leading stars had played. In addition to contest rules, paper ran stories and art work of Irene Dunne. Street photographer snapped pictures of crowds which were run in paper the following day, to those whose photos were circled guest tickets were awarded on proper identification.

Through tieup with local furrier, lucky numbered cards were distributed, beautiful fur coat going to winner. In connection with the giveaway, fashion show was held on theatre stage, mannequins modelling latest in fur fashions.

Street Ballys

For his "Topper" date at the Paramount, Waterloo, Ia., Bob Fulton put usher on street week ahead of opening dressed in high hat and tails who stopped pedestrians asking them to list cast appearing in picture. To those correctly responding, guest tickets were awarded. Another street bally was bannered car with chauffeur in livery and copy reading "reserved for the personal use of Mr. Topper."

Through tieup with 25 merchants, each store's window carried a lucky numbered card and to persons holding corresponding numbers, gifts were awarded by the individual stores.

Lost and Found

Day in advance of the premiere of "Shall We Dance," publicity head Lou den Hartogh, under the supervision of Manager Max Westebbe at the Tuschinski Theatre, Amsterdam, Holland, dropped 15,000 inexpensive purses about the streets, each containing herald plugging the picture. Coupon was also enclosed inviting finders to fill in their names and addresses, and to those presenting coupons at box office, tinted photos of Rogers or Astaire were presented.

Thus with the large number of names and addresses available, the first Dutch Fan Club was organized. Exploitation campaign was backed by a number of window displays in leading shops and a Gershwin hour broadcast over station AVRO, supplemented a week later with another broadcast over VARA.

DECEMBER PLAQUE CAMPAIGNS SHOW OUTSTANDING INITIATIVE

Lee Kline and Elias Lapinere, December Winners, Have Outstanding Creative Entries

Originality plus hard work is reflected in the campaigns which won the Quigley December Plaques for Lee Kline of Germantown, Pennsylvania, on "Alcatraz Island," and E. Lapinere of Paris, France, on "A Day at the Races."

Silver Plaque winner Kline, assisted by Al Zimbalist, had many civic tieups, including for the first time in Philadelphia, a talk on "Crime Does Not Pay," which was delivered by a City-State chief executive, in the person of E. M. Hackney, Chief Probation Officer. Special herald was issued to kiddies calling their attention to this talk to be delivered from the stage of the theatre. Its effectiveness is best proved by the fact that the theatre played to the greatest amount of children that matinee than any other in the past two years.

Huge full-size theatre front was used, giving a generous display to stills. See photo in Round Table Picture Section, and giant enlargements were used on massive truck display sent through the streets.

Station WTEL allowed complete spot announcements throughout the day for one complete week in advance.

Two excellent newspaper contests were planted in the Germantown Telegraph and the Germantown Bulletin. The Bulletin placed their contest on the Editorial Page, in direct opposition to their policy.

A special board was displayed showing photos obtained at the local Detective and G-Men offices. Also displayed entire full page of Philadelphia Enquirer, based on "Alcatraz" with photos furnished by theatre.

Special letter was sent to Business Men's Association and read at meeting and carefully edited letters also sent to practically every labor union in Philadelphia. These displayed on their bulletin boards.

The local Police Force marched to the theatre on a tieup conveying messages of careful driving to Captains of the school patrol squads.

First time worked in neighborhood theatre was securing cooperation of merchants on "Inquiring Reporter" stunt in the neighborhood, offering radio and passes as prizes.

Display of an electric chair, a flock of radio tieups, stamping of practically every paper bag in town, newspaper publicity in generous measure, stenciling of sidewalks in neighborhood, window displays, and other ideas were effected too numerous to mention.

Significant concerning the whole campaign, is the fact that this prize-winning entrant accomplished all this in a neighborhood theatre, at an amazingly low cost.

A Word Concerning Our Friend in Paris

For the release of "A Day at the Races" at Le Paris, well-known Champs Elysees theatre, the huge campaign executed by Elias Lapinere (Silver Plaque winner, June, 1936) was topped by a novel exploitation event at the premiere: The Marx Brothers Sweepstakes.

(Since racing is so popular in Paris, the main object of the campaign was to connect the Marx Brothers with the races.)

The principal of the Sweepstake was using the big race at the end of the picture as though it were a real one, with the result uncertain. Twenty horses were supposed to run in it, and each of the Sweepstake tickets bore a number from 1 to 20. All spectators attending the performance at the time the Sweepstake took place were given one of these numbers free of charge. Holders of tickets which bore the number 7 (the horse Harpo rides to victory) participated in a prize-drawing after the show, each receiving a prize of some sort.

Prizes were obtained at no cost to the theatre. These included an automobile, a week's holiday for two people at leading French winter resort, another holiday at a summer resort, radio sets, a suit of clothes or a costume by the greatest tailoring house, a dress by a famous couturier, a gold watch, field glasses, etc.

Advertising for this picture and the Sweepstake stunt started several months before playdate. Through a tieup with the State Lottery authorities, a poster was printed at their expense to advertise both the actual (official) Sweepstake Derby (which is connected with the French Derby, the Grand Prix de Paris) and "A Day at the Races." This poster was displayed in lottery bureaus all over Paris.

The press campaign also started many months in advance: articles with special drawings were sent out to the dailies, photomontages and illustrations to the illustrated weeklies.

By an arrangement with the PARI MUTUEL URBAIN (official State-controlled horse-race betting organization, known as the P.M.U.), a poster was displayed in the 250 P.M.U. offices in Paris. The slogan used was: "Horse-racing followers, this is your picture."

A special folder advertising both the picture and the Sweepstake was distributed in the big Paris cafes and restaurants.

On the opening day, a big Paris broadcasting station made a series of announcements of the premiere and the Sweepstake, adding that it would broadcast the prize-draw in the Le Paris lobby after the show.

Several other effects had helped to create a typical race-course atmosphere for the show. Special entrance tickets exactly reproducing race-course tickets in their shape, but with humorous changes in the text had been printed; many spectators wore them in their lapels. The stalls in the theatre were called "pelouse," meaning "course," while the balcony, more expensive, was termed "pesage," which stands for "enclosure," and these words were used on tickets and theatre signs.

RE-CHRISTENS MAIN STREET

Jack Hazlett of the Dickinson Theatre, Slater, Missouri, pulled a dandy as part of his campaign on "52nd Street."

A quote from one of the newspapers there will best describe it:

"On Friday night, December 31, at 7:15 o'clock in front of the Dickinson Theatre, the Hon. Mayor E. D. Riley will christen Main Street to its new name of "52nd Street."

In addition to this, Hazlett arranged for special ceremonies in front of the theatre, and also received permission to put up the new street signs and the local High School Band played in front of the theatre before the ceremonies, which were attended by city officials.

Let's Hear from You

"In Old Chicago" Opens At Astor

The world premiere of "In Old Chicago" was held Thursday, January 6th, at the Astor Hotel in New York midst excitement seldom, if ever, rivalled by any picture opening.

Publicity and Advertising Director Charles E. McCarthy's Twentieth Century-Fox forces staged a campaign so vigorous in attention-attraction that several new precedents were established.

Due to the huge 12-day advance advertising campaign, with the resultant thousands of inches of publicity and pictorial layouts in the newspapers and metropolitan magazines, the ticket agencies were besieged with requests for seats a week ahead.

For weeks in advance the production was heralded by extensive layouts in national magazines and metropolitan newspapers throughout the country. "Look" and leading fan magazines gave it huge spreads. The Chicago Tribune printed a full front-page color roto section of sets in the picture, and the New York papers carried an unprecedented amount of feature stories and art in advance of the opening.

Numerous radio plugs preceded the opening, including the Jimmy Fiddler and Rudy Vallee national network programs.

So much interest was created that it prompted the Associated Press, United Press, INS and other syndicates to cover the opening as a news story.

Wallpaper designed from authentic antique patterns, old gas fixtures wired for electricity, and an old-fashioned frieze were part of the decorations in the lobby.

The front of the theatre was enlivened by miniature montages, and hand-carved mouldings appeared over the entrance. Superimposed upon these was a five-part lunette, and spotlights of different colors were trained upon special pictures.

GOOD-BYE 1937!

HAIL the showmen champions of 1937! Noting the excellence of the campaigns which won Quigley Awards for them this past year, we invite every one of these gentlemen to stand up and take a bow!

Ray Bell of Washington "rang the Bell" in no uncertain manner in last year's Competitions, winning two Awards, the only man in the group to accomplish this feat.

It is with deep regret that we omit the picture of Hal Grady of Lubbock, Texas, winner of last January's Silver Plaque, due to his untimely decease last year.

Congratulations, showmen champions, on your magnificent work!

FURTHER AWARDS EXPRESSIONS

H. D. BUCKLEY

Vice President
United Artists Corporation

I note with interest that the Quigley Awards Competitions will be continued for 1938 and I am, of course, glad to again serve as a Judge on the Committee.

The Competition engendered by the Quigley Awards, in my opinion, is a very considerable factor in promoting better advertising and exploitation for the motion pictures of all producers and thereby a considerable influence for better grosses.

I have at times marveled at the efficiency and scope of many of the campaigns submitted and I am sure the men in the field are stimulated to greater effort in the hope of winning the recognition and rewards that go to the Quigley Awards winners.

I think the sponshorship of this enterprise by MOTION PICTURE HERALD is a service to the Industry.

AL ADAMS

Director of Advertising and Publicity
Republic Pictures

I shall be very happy to serve as a judge of the Quigley Awards during 1938. With all the top-spot stunts of the real showman brains of the business pouring across your desk weekly, I've always regarded a couple of hours spent in the offices of Manager's Round Table a liberal education.

CARTER BARRON

Division Manager
Loew's Theatres
Washington, D.C.

Experience has proved that sincere inspired effort on the part of showmen has always been a boon to the box office. Naturally any competition which brings about this inspiration and zest for added work must contribute extra dollars to the box office of this country. And, I sincerely believe that the Quigley Competitions have made their contribution, and I hope that in 1938 the showmen of this country will rally to the Competitions with renewed zest.

JOHN HICKS, JR.

Vice President
Paramount Pictures

I will be glad to serve as a judge on the Quigley Awards Competitions Committee for 1938. I consider the Quigley Awards an excellent stimulus, especially in foreign countries, particularly at this time when so many big pictures are on the market which need special handling in the way of advertising, publicity and exploitation.

ARTHUR FRUDENFELD

Divisional Director,
RKO Theatres, Cincinnati

I am glad to see that you are continuing the Quigley Awards for 1938. There is no question as to the value of this Competition as a stimulant to live and wide-awake showmen everywhere.

I shall be happy to serve as a Judge.

FEELS COMPETITIONS INSPIRATION TO MEN

I shall be very happy indeed to serve as a Judge on the Quigley Awards Competitions Committee for 1938.

You will find me at all times in full sympathy with your Quigley Awards plan because I realize the great amount of good they do year after year.

In recently examining campaigns submitted from all over the United States and from Europe on outstanding pictures developed by our Industry, I was amazed to see the extent to which theatre managers go in their efforts to get the greatest possible return out of each individual picture.

I feel that your Quigley Awards inspire theatre managers to give their best performances.—A. W. SMITH, JR., General Sales Manager, United Artists Corporation.

R. B. WILBY

President, Wilby-Kincey
Atlanta, Ga.

I should be very glad to serve on your Awards Committee. . . . I do not think that there is any question that the Quigley Awards do stimulate effort to exploit pictures.

HARRY LONG

Division Manager, Loew's Theatres
Cleveland, Ohio

I shall be happy indeed to serve on your Quigley Awards Competition Committee for 1938. We find that these competitions serve as an incentive for our publicity department to exert added energy in an endeavor to present an outstanding campaign in the interest of an attraction.

The Managers' Round Table should certainly be proud of its activities because it accords the men in the field an opportunity to become acquainted through the medium of your columns . . . observe what other managers and publicists are accomplishing in their respective localities and in a sense one feels that they know the others in the industry by reading the accounts of their exploits and viewing the pictures of stunts and ideas as published in your section of that weekly publication.

R. J. O'DONNELL

General Manager, Interstate Circuit
Dallas, Texas

I was very glad to get your letter advising me that the Quigley Awards Competitions would be continued in 1938.

I feel that these competitions are of great value to our industry, particularly from a theatre operating standpoint, as they stimulate the competitive spirit and individual initiative, and in the final analysis, that of itself is the essence of show business.

RICK RICKETSON

President, Fox Intermountain Theatres
Denver, Colo.

I will be very happy to serve again as a Judge on the Quigley Awards Competition.

I believe this is one of the best showmanship stimulators in the industry. One of my managers has won an Award and several have received Honorable Mention. On each occasion, the recognition of the Quigley Award has been accompanied by a special award from the Fox Inter-Mountain Theatres.

We want to cooperate with you in making the Quigley Awards for 1938 even more highly regarded among our managers and the theatre men of this territory. Real showmanship is needed more today than ever.

ARCH REEVE

Assistant Director of Advertising
20th Century-Fox Film Corporation

The Quigley Awards deserve the enthusiastic support and attention of every organization in the industry.

Through the stimulation of competition, recognition and reward, this activity has added considerably to the fund of sound exploitation knowledge and has uncovered a valuable source of advertising manpower for distributors as well as exhibitors.

Worthy of particular commendation for its fairness, is the new plan of Managers' Round Table, whereby only theatres of comparable size and location are in competition.

HARRY C. ARTHUR, JR.

Roxy Theatre
New York City

Thank you very much for again honoring me in allowing me to serve as a judge on the committee for 1938 Quigley Awards Competition.

The Quigley Awards have proven one of the most important factors in the continued progress made by exploitation and advertising men throughout the industry.

I am sure that their consistent efforts to distinguish themselves in the Quigley Awards Competition have done much to improve box office returns of the attractions which had the benefit of those strong exploitation campaigns.

GEORGE LIMERICK

Manager, Yale and Palace
Cleburne, Texas

Wish to state that on the Quigley Award and First and Honorable Mention certificates that we in Cleburne won in 1937, in each instance our box office has shown the result of our effort.

Besides being an added boon to box receipts, the enthusiasm which they have created among my staff, to me would be second in importance. On each of the four Awards we have won, my complete staff feels that they have a personal interest and it gives them renewed hope each time we have been able to win a plaque or First Mention in your competition.

MEN IN FIELD PRAISE AWARDS

RAY O'CONNELL

Manager, Capitol
Lancaster, Penna.

Quigley Awards stimulate box office grosses by giving the operator an opportunity to achieve recognition in the field as a whole.

A winner's prestige is enhanced by the fact that the Quigley Award is becoming recognized as a mark of distinction in the community at large, winning him the confidence of his patrons and enabling him to make a consistently better showing.

Manager, Lyceum
Clovis, New Mexico

Quigley Competition, when participated in with the idea in mind of profitably increasing the gross rather than the winning of an Award—with the advertising budget maintained with the possible gross considered—acts as a stimulant, a profitable one to business, and improves the standard of publicity.

Thus handled, the winning of an Award is an incentive to go out and sell again. I probably have gained prestige through winning in the Quigley Competition.

W-CLYDE SMITH

City Manager, Paramount, Central and Spa Theatres
Hot Springs, Ark.

The Quigley Awards Competition has always been a grand incentive to every showman and to those managers fortunate enough to have actually won a Quigley Plaque and Honorable Mention, its worth is even more evident.

Many of us can thank the Quigley Awards either directly or indirectly for the better positions we now hold. The value of the Quigley Awards competitions in building box office grosses is unparalleled. . . . And I might add that no greater thrill could come to me than to win one of those Grand Awards.

E. A. PATCHEN

Ad Chief, Lincoln Theatres
Lincoln, Neb.

The campaign which gave me the Bronze Plaque last year also gave me one of the best grosses of the year and the picture was not a box office champion nationally. That should prove that the effort put forth in trying for a Quigley Award actually pays off in dollars and cents.

MATT SAUNDERS

Manager, Poli's
Bridgeport, Conn.

The Quigley Competitions act as a strong stimulant for managers, assistant managers and publicity men.

Efforts to have an outstanding and unusual campaign are put forth and the result is increased box office grosses.

The younger men in the field get a wonderful opportunity to obtain recognition.

WINNING RECOGNITION BROUGHT SALARY RISE

Quigley Competitions provide an extra incentive for increased efforts and better grosses, in addition to giving added recognition to those managers participating from their superiors.

In my case my efforts in 1937 have brought me a very nice increase in salary, in addition to exceedingly good returns at the box office, each time a campaign was executed with the Quigley Award in mind. — WAYNE SWEENEY, Manager, LaPorte, LaPorte, Ind.

MELVIN L. GOLD

Manager, Calumet
Hammond, Ind.

I feel that the Quigley Awards are in a class by themselves in that they inspire showmen to reach a goal where national recognition is obtained for their endeavors. MOTION PICTURE HERALD and the Quigley Awards should have the unflinching support of every theatre owner for transfusing blood into what might otherwise be theatre anaemia.

JOE STRIBLING

Manager, Kiowa
Hobart, Okla.

There is little doubt that the Quigley Awards stimulate grosses. It is impossible to use a campaign good enough to win one of your Awards and not do good business. They also enhance a theatreman's prestige. I know how I feel about those who have won plaques.

C. E. McSWAIN

Manager, Granada
Plainview, Texas

I appreciate the chance to comment on the Quigley Awards and it is my opinion and belief that any showman would be as proud to have a Plaque as I am. The Quigley Awards have done a great service in the promotion of selling features and short subjects, and I am sure that during the next year the Quigley Awards will prove even more popular than ever.

J. H. ROBERTS

Manager, Star
Hereford, Texas

The best trade stimulus we have are the Quigley Awards. Any enterprising managers secretly covets one of plaques.

BILL BELL

Adv't. Manager, Majestic
Houston, Texas

Any man who works in the publicity field, dealing in originality as his main stock in trade, likes to feel that there is somewhere he can turn for a little modest recognition of his mental labors. Because of the nature of exploitation work a man makes a bragging fool of himself if he talks about what he has done, but in the case of the Quigley Awards competition, he is merely making a public record of his ideas and industry.

Personally, not being of the back patting clan, I like to know that there is a place where I can outline my work in a business-like manner.

WALTER F. DAVIS

Manager, Capitol
Regina, Sask.

I have never won a Quigley Plaque, but have six Honorable Mentions framed on my office walls. Anything of a competitive nature is bound to spur up the managers and directly or indirectly they are bound to receive recognition from their superiors.

ARLIE CRITES

Manager, Lindsey
Lubbock, Texas

While I have not been fortunate enough to win a Silver or Bronze Plaque, I have been awarded both a First and Honorable Mention Certificate during 1937, and I can definitely say that on each campaign our grosses were right at the top. This I attribute to the extra push given the pictures and of our decision in advance to enter each in the Quigley Competitions.

DAN KRENDEL

Manager, Tivoli
Toronto, Ontario

The Quigley Awards are definitely an invaluable incentive to theatre men to prove their worth not only to their superiors, but more important, to justify their own confidence in their ability to handle their current assignment with a view to stepping into bigger jobs with the knowledge that they are prepared to handle them in an expert manner.

PETE EGAN

Manager, Palace
Calgary, Canada

We believe the Quigley Competitions are one of the finest things in the theatre world, as it keeps a manager pepped up and gives him a chance to get ideas from other managers both in the United States and Canada to help put over his product. Having won a couple of First Mentions and Honorable Mentions in this competition, I can tell you it was quite a thrill and I am sure that our Company is always glad to see any of its managers mentioned in the Quigley Awards.

3. TRADE TERRITORY COVERAGE

Delivered every Friday morning with the Arkansas Gazette, Arkansas' largest and most circulated newspaper, to all towns and communities within a radius of forty miles of Hot Springs with special attention to tourists' camps and the immediate vicinity.

4. DISTRIBUTION

The distribution of MOVIE NEWS is perhaps its greatest value. The city is divided into seven routes. Each route has a supervisor and three boys, whose specific instructions are "do not miss a house and all copies behind the screen door." The supervisors are chosen for their honesty, integrity and ability to see that their job is complete. Weekly meetings of all supervisors tend to complete a harmony of which we are proud. Complaints are adjusted and suggestions are listened to in an effort to keep the morale above reproach. All hotels and rooming houses are delivered room to room with a few left in the lobby for convenience of all patrons. A special stand in lobby of each theatre reminds the patron that MOVIE NEWS is published for his interest and a sign invites him to take one home and any suggestion to further its appeal will be greatly appreciated. Trade territory coverage must be considered with this distribution.

VOL. 1 — NO. 40 HOT SPRINGS NATIONAL PARK, ARKANSAS—FRIDAY, S EPT 17, 1937 FREE EVERY WEEK

ONE OF THE LIGHTER MOMENTS IN "DOUBLE OR NOTHING" STARRING BING CROSBY AND MARTHA RAYE SCHEDULED TO OPEN SUNDAY AT THE PARAMOUNT THEATRE

How to win an argument with your husband is illustrated here for all wives by agile Miss Ames of the celebrated Ames and Arno comedy dance team, who come to the screen with Bing Crosby in Paramount's "Double or Nothing." The family fight (orthodox version) is under way. After some preliminary skirmishing, wifey sits on hubby and chews his ear. Then both fall on their ears. Refreshed by this pause, they go into the second phase, with hubby having his innings. But wifey will have the last word, never fear.

5. COST AND EXPENSE

The entire cost (including mats, cuts, materials, printing costs and distribution) runs approximately $50.00 weekly. Merchants' advertising pays all cost, with the theatres receiving 50 per cent of the entire paper for their attraction at no cost. The theatre offers readers guest tickets in the merchants' ads in an effort to stimulate interest (please note: in copies that make up of guest ticket offerings assure theatre an additional plug on the picture that we are showing).

6. FEATURES

A. "Previews and Reviews" of all coming attractions.

B. Weekly column on "Theatre Service, Operation, Personnel," etc., by staff editor.

C. "Sports Column" by local high school journalist.

D. "Radio Column," courtesy of NBC and Columbia network.

E. Local "Round the Town" column by V. Gage, local newspaperman.

F. "Timely Thought of the Day" by Reverend John Bendelow.

G. "Hollywood News and Gossip," courtesy of Paramount, RKO and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Film Studios, Hollywood, California.

H. "Local Stories" by staff editor.

7. SPECIAL FEATURES

Interviews with all screen, stage and national celebrities visiting in Hot Springs.

During Spring Race Meet MOVIE NEWS carries current morning line and MOVIE NEWS' selections for the day.

8. SOURCE OF MATERIAL

Mats, cuts and reading material received weekly from RKO, Paramount and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Film Exchanges in Hollywood, California. Radio and schedule programs received weekly from NBC and Columbia Broadcasting Companies. "Movie Spotlight" mat service received weekly from Columbia. Feature stories from regular theatre press books. All material gratis.

9. POSTAL TIEUP

Arrangements with local Postal Telegraph whereby any persons not receiving their MOVIE NEWS merely call Postal Telegraph and a messenger boy delivers a copy free. In return for this courtesy we run a special ad on the top of the front page, calling attention to this fact. The publicity derived is ample reward for this feature, this being the opinion of the Telegraph Company.

10. MISCELLANEOUS

A check up convinced us that the local newspaper failed to cover the city as we desired and it was to this end that our paper was aimed. We consider MOVIE NEWS the best medium of advertising that we have and owing to Hot Springs being a resort city, our News is read even more by visitors than the local newspaper. Our wide distribution affords us excellent opportunities for tie ups with all leading merchants for cooperative pages, etc.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures announced by the home offices of the distributing companies.

When a production is reviewed in Hollywood, the running time is as officially given by the West Coast studio of the company at the time of the review, and this fact is denoted by an asterisk(*) immediately preceding the number. As soon as the home office has established the running time for national release, any change from the studio figure is made and the asterisk is removed.

Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions may cause variations from the announced and published figures; repairs to the film may be another reason.

J C JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We are wondering if you readers have filled out your federal income tax report. If not you have something to look forward to with some degree of ecstasy—you would have if you had a carbuncle on your neck. We have just completed ours. We don't know whether it is completed correctly or not, and we doubt if anyone else will know. We go to fill out one part and we are referred to "1-2-3-4 of schedule C.

At another place we are referred to "7-8-9 of schedule D," and "less tax paid at source," etc., etc., and again referred to "other deductions authorized by law" and "Other deductions, see schedule C," and "Taxes paid. See schedule D." We have been "referred" back and forth for the past twenty-four hours, until we were about to refer the whole damthing to the waste-basket. But we finally got the thing filled out and we are going to send it in with the hope that the revenue office will employ the Chinese language to unravel it.

According to a press report they have moved the "Pork Barrel" from the bayous of the lower Mississippi up to the Missouri river and we understand that several millions will be used in dredging the "creek" for flatboat transportation. The public has been shouting for "progress" and here's the answer, and it seems that they have got the "Pork Barrel" on wheels. After they get through with the Missouri they can dredge out the Platte, which is dry about four months of the year. We hope they will finally locate the "Barrel" up here on the Elkhorn. This town would be an excellent place for it, for it's the "Gateway to the West" and the gate is always open; that's why we have so many cows feeding on Main Street. We hope our delegation in Congress will look into this matter, for we are paying the taxes and we want something to show for our money. Then, besides that, there are a lotta votes out here that ought to be gathered up, and there is nothing like a good pork barrel to gather them in.

If there wasn't a law against homicide we might be inclined to go down to Brownsville, Texas, and get in jail. J. C. Fanning of the Brownsville theatres sends us a card showing a photograph of himself holding up a big redfish, just to tantalize us. If that wouldn't make a man want to hit his grandmother over the head with a chair we don't know what would. We are glad, however, that J. C. sent us this picture, because it recalls the many fine times we had with him yanking these beauties out of the Ship Channel to keep them from getting soaking wet with salt water. Thanks, J. C., does that same Mexican operate your motor boat? If he does, he's a good one.

An exhibitor down in Oklahoma writes us: "Say, Colonel, why don't you some down and see us? My wife is yelling to see you all the while." Now listen to that. It seems that the ladies are unfamiliar with our age.

Frank H. Houston of the Minne Lusa theatre in Omaha must have been pretty well raised. Frank knows a good thing when he sees it, for he sends his check with a request that we have his subscription to the HERALD renewed. We are going to have this done, for we can't see an old friend like Frank trying to struggle along to make both ends meet with his theatre without the assistance of the HERALD. Thanks, Frank.

You may not know where Spalding, Nebraska, is; a lot of people don't. Well, Spalding is where Henry Carlin operates the Carlin theatre and also sells hardware, farm implements and a lot of other things and furnishes the Spalding folks with a lot of good advice. We have had the pleasure of calling on Henry several times and he has never yet notified the city police that we were in town. There are a lotta Irish folks around Spalding, which, no doubt, accounts for the excellent business that Henry enjoys. Then maybe, the HERALD helps some, too.

If they will locate the "Pork Barrel" here in our town and the grasshoppers will leave us alone, it looks like this country will come out all right.

If we ever go to San Marcos, Texas, again, we hope to go down to Red Wing lake with Mr. Zimmerman of the San Marcos theatre and catch some more "spawners" for the fish hatchery. The last time we were there Zim was so elated over the arrival of a baby at his house that he loaned us ten bucks to get us out of town.

If you have never driven the "Roosevelt Highway" (Teddy Roosevelt, if you please), which runs along the Pacific ocean in southwest Oregon and northwest California and through the redwood forest, you haven't traveled the most scenic route in the country yet.

All along this route you will find swell towns that have some swell theatres and managers who will show you a swell time. We would like to go out there again and meet the boys, and so would you, if you should go out there once.

When Congress appropriates $225,000 to pay their expenses home and back for the holidays, and for a junketing trip, we forget that we took this country away from the Indians and wonder just when they will take it away from the taxpayers.

When winter comes and the north winds blow
And the ground is covered up with snow
It is then perhaps you'd like to know
What we would wish.
We wish that we could leave and go
Down where the soft, warm breezes blow
And with J. C. Fanning we could go
Down to the gulf and fish.

Without changing the subject too abruptly, we might tell you that we have a yellow Persian cat as big as a Poland-China shoat, and our housekeeper puts him in the bathtub every few days and scours him with a brush, which reminds us that perhaps we should take a bath once-in-a-while ourself. What do you boys think about it?

THE "BUYING DRIVE"

EVEN Mr. Bergen's xylocarp, The McCarthy, observing the motion picture merchandising scene would by now see that the heat is on.

The scene is entirely pervaded by sales drives.

Some of these drives are named for companies and some for sales managers. The field forces are being exhorted either in behalf of the college or the coach, mostly the coach, in recognition no doubt of that principle so long apparent in Hollywood where everybody works for not the company but the boss.

And this season of sales drives takes its origin in Hollywood, too.

It seems that there is quite an accumulation of goods on hand which it is desirable to move. Examination of that living and continuously growing catalogue of the industry known as the "Release Chart" in Motion Picture Herald, together with the various and continuous presentations of its "Cutting Room," "Showmen's Reviews," its "Pictorial Previews" and the "Production Chart," in addition to the flow of general news about screen wares, tends to reveal that Hollywood has been distilling and bottling most extensively and expensively the last few months. And there is more in the making.

The movement of the goods is not complete until it has been consumed by the public. So far as drives are useful they can only function up to the point of encouraging and inducing the exhibitor to present the product.

In the present stage of the season, as remarked most recently on this page, the sales problems are now quite as much, or more, a matter of playing time and play dates as contracts.

The chief factor to influence dates is relative merit and anticipations of merit of the goods, and that means just exactly information about the product.

The exhibitor, facing rather a number of external conditions, is quite as anxious to buy the makings of box office success as the producer and distributor is to sell.

While we hear a deal about sales drives, there is a much more continuous one that is seldom noted—that is the "buying drive," the hungry urge for the stuff that pays the rent and makes the profits.

The special instrument of that buying drive is this publication itself with its specially and uniquely complete recording and reporting of the merchandise, as continuously as the flow of time itself.

In the pages of Motion Picture Herald, spread open on the desks of the showmen of the world, every week is a "better movie" week, a "greater movie season," a representation of both sides of the product drive, the seller and the buyer alike.

Significant, too, is the fact that this living service catalogue of the motion picture output, "the exhibitor's Bible" they say, lives long beyond the discharge of its function of purveying the developments of the week and stands substantially as a reference library on its own in a vast majority of the theatres of the land. A recent examination into the movements of the Herald among one thousand subscribers taken at random through all classes of theatres, revealed that in an overwhelming preponderance of instances the Herald was kept in file in excess of three months, almost as frequently six months, not in frequently for a period of a year and sometimes much longer.

It is to the recordings of those pages, indexed continuously through the "Release Chart," that showmen turn when salesmen call. From the day the story is bought until the picture has played through its working life, the facts of it and its career, are told in those references.

EDITOR AND BATHING GIRL

SOUTHBOUND your traveller emerges while the "Special" is iced at Jacksonville to find the morning papers of Miami banner-lined with "Snow Menaces East." The only subject that could please a Florida editor as well would be "Temblor Devastates Los Angeles," only it would be a temblor there and an earthquake in Miami.

The Miami Herald becomes editorially defensive under the title of "The Point of the Bathing Girl Ad." Its editor seems to feel that there has been some criticism of the lavish use of the bathing girl, commonly called "bathing beauty," in the merchandising of Florida, and he says: ". . . The rest of us seeing the picture . . . subconsciously realize that the climate must be delightful where she is, or she would have more clothes on. . . ."

This is obviously a bit of absurd, old foggy conservatism on the part of the Florida editor, luke warm as he is. He should know that if the climate were as perfect as he should be contending, and the Floridan point of view as pure as he insists, the lady would require positively no clothes at all. Plainly enough any clothes at all are an indictment of both mind and climate. He should see the sculptured candours of the RCA building in the Spartan snowswept canyon of Fiftieth street right across from our office.

If climate is all this Miami editor has in mind, a picture of a thermometer would be more direct, explicit.

FOR FEDERAL CONTROL

TO those who have observed the frequent enthusiasm for alien and leftist expressions of the screen from such factors of the National Board of Review as its Exceptional Photoplays committee, it will not be surprising to note that the Board's annual conference last week also afforded a rostrum for an advocacy of a backhanded federal control of the screen by one Mr. Herbert S. Walsh, a WPA person concerned with a movement for educational use of films. Mr. Walsh thought the government might "drop the film industry a hint" to become "a force for public good." Extending his remarks, he said he did not advocate government licensing but he talked pointedly of the Federal Communications Commission and its relation to the air.

This Week

Time and the Nazis

A unique situation with regard to the March of Time current release, "Inside Nazi Germany—1938," arose this week when Warner Brothers announced it would not show the film in its houses because it contained "pro-Nazi propaganda." The statement, issued by Harry Warner, president, followed reported protests by official representatives of Germany that the picture was anti-Nazi. The film was banned in Chicago but, after a storm of public protest, the censor board rescinded its order. March of Time officials were jubilant over the action in Chicago but the Warner statement brought curt replies from Louis de Rochemont, producer, and Henry R. Luce, president of Time, who declared the Warner assertions were "ridiculous."

These and other developments are reported on page 21.

Profit Sharing

Loew's stockholders, after listening to criticism from minority interests, this week ratified 11 profit sharing contracts for executives. Approximately 150 persons attended the session in New York City and heard David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer, explain that the contracts and the present employment contract held by Nicholas M. Schenck, president, have an aggregate value of $4,788,000 annually. The stockholders also reelected 12 directors. On Thursday the company issued an earnings statement for the 12 weeks ended November 25th, showing net profit of $2,917,409 as compared to $3,457,973 for a similar quarter in 1936.

Details are on page 34.

New Theatres

F. W. Dodge Corporation, a construction news service, this week reported that 885 theatres were constructed or substantially remodeled in 37 states east of the Rocky Mountains at an aggregate cost of $27,225,000. The figures, it was pointed out, do not include equipment installations or replacements. This is a six-year peak and indicates progressive improvement in the industry, the Dodge service announced. The expenditure was almost $10,000,000 more than reported by the Dodge corporation in 1936 for the same states and the same type of construction work. The Dodge company attributed the increase to a greater number of new theatres, being built. Activity, it was pointed out, slumped in 1932 and 1933, but for the last three years there has been an increase. In 1934 the total was $8,250,000, in 1935, $14,000,000 and in 1936, $17,500,000.

Bank Night Under Fire

Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., of Denver, originator and copyright owner of Bank Night, was expected on Wednesday to complete its defense of the enterprise from which post office attorneys said it made $1,250,000 in two years. If Postmaster General James A. Farley believes an offense has been committed, United Press reported, he may issue a fraud order denying the promoters' use of the mails. During the hearing in Washington 19 postal inspectors told the post office solicitor that they attended Bank Night in theatres all over the country without winning a penny. The promoters are charged with fraudulent use of the mails and violation of the lottery laws.

Ament Named Editor

Walter C. Ament, assistant to Frederick Ullman, Jr., general manager of Pathe News, has been appointed news editor to succeed Pete Hennig, resigned. Mr. Ament joined the organization last fall and has been serving in various departments since. Howard Winner, a ranking cameraman on the Universal Newsreel staff, resigned recently to join the Pathe staff.

Paramount Earnings

Paramount Pictures, Inc., this week estimated its combined consolidated earnings and share of undistributed earnings of partially owned subsidiaries for the fiscal year ended Jan. 1, 1938, at $6,650,000. Consolidated earnings were estimated at $6,030,000 after all charges, including interest, federal taxes [including provision for estimated undistributed profits taxes], depreciation and reserves. The estimated earnings, the company pointed out, do not include proceeds from settlement of litigation, approximating $1,650,000, nor a profit of $150,000 realized from the sale or real estate.

After deduction of $1,186,092 of dividends accrued for the year on preferred shares, the remaining consolidated earnings represent $1.96 a share on 2,465,900 shares of common stock. Computed on the aggregate of $6,650,000 of estimated consolidated earnings and share of undistributed earnings of partially owned subsidiaries, the earnings per common share would be $2.22. Estimated consolidated earnings for the fourth quarter, 13 weeks ended January 1st, were $754,000 after all charges.

Yamins Reelected

Independent Exhibitors, Inc., New England affiliate of National Allied, this week reelected Nathan Yamins as president. Mr. Yamins last week was renamed to the presidency of the national organization. Other officers reelected at the New England meeting are Max L. Levenson, first vice-president; Arthur K. Howard, business manager; Francis C. Lyden, second vice-president; Adolph Bendsley, secretary, and E. Harold Stoneman, treasurer. Walter Littlefield, who recently sold his theatre interests, resigned from the board of directors. The directorate now includes Edward Ansin, Wilbur Peterson, Charles W. Hodgson, Irving Isaacs, Samuel Resnick, W. H. McLaughlin, Daniel Murphy, Francis M. Perry, Morris Pouzzner, George Ramsdell, Richard B. Rubin, Philip Smith and William A. Viano.

Other exhibitor organization developments of the week appear on page 42.

Salaries and Taxes

Attempting to correct the generally considered unfair impression created by the salary figures released by the House of Representatives' Ways and Means Committee, the New York Sun this week published a list of gross salaries along with estimated Federal and State income taxes on the incomes. Included in the list were 40 names of persons associated with the motion picture industry.

Snow White and the 50%

The launching of the first feature length animated cartoon on a box office career which, its distributor estimates, will result in a gross of between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000, brought unprecedented speculation over coffee cups and cocktails, wherever the motion picture industry is a constant topic of conversation. "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" is now in its second week at the Radio City Music Hall and looming large in discussions were its $108,000 first week gross; an increase to $110,000 in the second week of its run, something no picture has done before at the theatre; the chance of a run of four or more weeks, a precedent; booking and clearance problems, and the fact that RKO has set preliminary rental demands at 50 per cent, an almost unprecedented figure.

Records and possibilities are on page 22.

Tax Plea

Exhibition's argument that raising the admission tax exemption level from 41 to 51 cents would enable theatre owners to raise prices and would result in increased revenue to both the owners and the Government was presented in full to the House Ways and Means Committee by Walter Vincent, circuit operator of New York, chosen by the industry as its spokesman. Mr. Vincent cited facts and figures to prove that the Treasury would receive additional revenue.

His argument is quoted in full on page 29.

Red's Roundup

Maurice Davilla Kann was rounded-up Wednesday night by friends in New York for an old-fashioned "Roundup and Barbecue," on the occasion of his recent association with Box-Office.

In determining upon a western flavor, the committee in charge took cognizance of Mr. Kann's weekend, spent last summer with Si Seadler at the Bar 2-X Ranch in the Coachilla Valley under spreading palms in lower California with ukulele. "Intrepid westerner," the barbecue committee called Red.

Because of the nature of the surroundings for the Barbecue—it was held in the Hotel Astor's Belvedere Room—the committee used extra precautions against any Ridin' of the Plains by any of the 400 Barbecuans present, specifically stating on the invitations to the guests, "Please don't wear spurs." None were visible but some were felt, nevertheless, particularly during the flippancies of Jay Flippen, hombre of ceremonies; the ribbings of ribber Vince Barnett and the nizerisms of Louis Nizer. Particularly appropriate in the entertainment division was Texas Jim Lewis and His Cowboys. John Wilde Alicoate was toastmaster general.

Buying Trends

The motion picture is an important instrument in the creating and changing of buying trends, Hal Hode, Columbia executive, declared when he spoke at an advertising Club luncheon in New York. Mr. Hode said that if he were head of a manufacturing company he would assign a man to cover all the sneak previews in and around Hollywood to determine what future trends would be. He also cited examples to show that the buying public follows the leadership of the motion picture industry.

His talk is covered in a story on page 36.

Reorganization Delayed

Completion of the RKO reorganization proceedings is not expected until next fall as a result of a one month's delay in starting hearings before William Bondy, Federal judge, in New York. The court granted a petition to adjourn the hearing until February 28th, but, at the same time, expressed impatience over the lack of progress being made.

No Responsibility

An echo of the opinion voiced by Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief and publisher of Motion Picture Herald, last August was heard at the 14th annual conference of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures when Mortimer J. Adler, Chicago University professor, declared the film industry has no educational responsibilities. Mr. Adler took issue with Herbert S. Walsh, technical supervisor of an educational project, who advocated the government and private educational foundations interest themselves in providing educational films. Mr. Walsh also called for closer cooperation between the motion picture industry and educators.

See page 17.

London Fog

The fog of uncertainty surrounding the proposed new quota provisions is blamed in England as being partly responsible for the doldrums into which the industry has fallen. Taking cognizance of the fact that prolonged debate over the new bill will bring further recession the Government laid plans to hasten action on the measure and hope was expressed that the House of Commons committee would conclude its deliberations in three sessions after hearings are resumed next week.

Preparations for the reopening are reported and the somewhat gloomy outlook described on page 64.

Organized Labor

The movement of labor toward organization, accelerated in recent months by court precedents giving life to the Wagner Labor Relations Act, has progressed so far in the film industry that at present more than 40 unions or guilds have contracts or are negotiating for them.

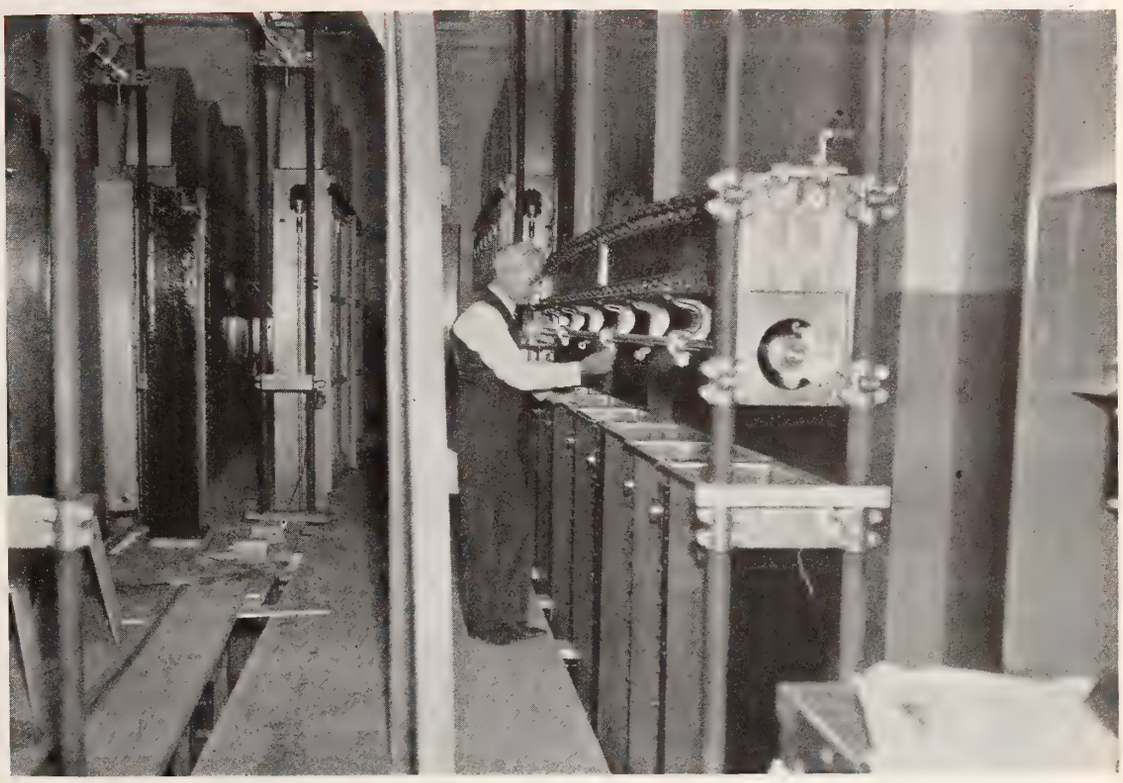
For the Fine Arts

The House Patents Committee, headed by William I. Sirovich, representative from New York, on February 7th will open hearings on a bill, proposed by Mr. Sirovich to create a new Government department and cabinet post to consolidate the Government's efforts on behalf of science, art and literature, including the industries in which their greatest commercial application is made, motion pictures and radio.

The preamble of the measure and Mr. Sirovich's views on the subject are presented on page 29.

This Week In Pictures

W. G. Van Schmus, above, managing director of the Radio City Music Hall, meets Bette Davis on the set of "Jezebel" at the Warner Brothers studios in Burbank, California. Mr. Van Schmus was at the studios to see firsthand what might be coming up for the Rockefellers' show place.



SONJA HENIE, below, Olympic skating champion and Twentieth Century-Fox star in New York for a week's engagement of her ice revue at Madison Square Garden, down the street from the Roxy where her picture "Happy Landing" was playing first run, exuberantly greets her mother and brother Leif who came from Norway to see his sister's revue. Miss Henie marked her first day in New York by missing an appointment with Mayor LaGuardia because at 10 o'clock she was still sleeping.

S. Charles Einfeld, at the extreme left, Warner Brothers director of publicity and advertising, backed against a wall in Grand Central Station, New York, by reporters for the trade and daily press who deluged him with questions concerning the company's contemplated transplanting of the advertising and publicity headquarters from New York to Hollywood. Mr. Einfeld, just arrived with Harry Warner from the coast, said that details had not been completed and intimated that the board of directors was considering further changes.

Satisfied with the results of John M. Nickolaus' experiments with a new platinum sepia toning process to bridge the gap between black and white and color films, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has completed construction of elaborate machinery at its Hollywood laboratories to make extensive use of the process. A. G. Wise, laboratory engineer, at right, examines a battery of developing tanks and the noncorrosive steel roller assembly especially built to withstand the action of the chemicals used in the toning. Prints of several features have undergone the process, first, and notably so, "The Good Earth," and the new apparatus will make possible a wider application.

H. Albán-Mestanza (second from left), new editor of Teatro al Día; Ray Gallo (left), advertising manager; Manuel Peña Rodriguez, motion picture critic of La Nacion of Buenos Aires, and Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief of Quigley Publications, during a visit by Sr. Peña Rodriguez to discuss the industry in South America with Mr. Quigley and the Teatro al Día staff.

The annual Will Rogers National Theatre Week this year will be organized by Major L. E. Thompson, RKO theatre executive, right, who was appointed to the chairmanship of the committee at a recent luncheon meeting of theatre executives.

Richard Sears, left, newsreel cameraman, whose work in covering the New England territory for Pathe has attracted attention for the last eleven years, this week joined Universal Newsreel following a decision by Pathe to cover the territory from its New York office. Mr. Sears started as a news photographer 34 years ago and went to Pathe from the Boston American.

TO the honor of Loew's, Inc., and the delight of statisticians, the length of service of company executives who gathered at a luncheon to honor the 25th anniversary of Charles C. Moskowitz, if computed on the familiar end to end from here to there basis, would total 454 years. Guests at the testimonial luncheon, above, in the Hotel Astor, New York, starting at the left of the empty chair in the foreground, are: Fred Mitchell, Edward J. Churchill, president of Donahue and Coe and the only non-Loew guest; Judge Isadore Frey, Mr. Moskowitz, David Bernstein, Edward Mannix, Edward Saunders, Oscar A. Doob, Howard Strickling, Silas Seadler, Arthur Moskowitz, Charles Sonin, Harry Bernstein, Dave Blum, Morty Spring, Joseph R. Vogel, J. T. Mills, Dorf Schadler, Marvin Schenck, Thomas Pettey, H. J. Cleary, S. H. Meinhold, and Ernest Emerling.

Louise Fazenda, Warner comedienne, arrives in New York for the opening of her picture, "Swing Your Lady," at the Strand and for the President's Birthday Ball on Saturday night. The actress, wife of Hal Wallis, Warner executive producer, is accompanied by her sister-in-law, the former Miss Minna Wallis.

THE UNION LABEL

MOTION PICTURE

With more than forty organizations holding, or seeking, bargaining contracts with the makers and sellers of screen entertainment, union activities in the industry now extend from the genesis of the story idea to fruition in the theatre in which the production is exhibited, and in Hollywood from the writer to the workers who daub paint upon backdrops, from the stars to the laborers who tear down the sets, from grips to horse wranglers. The heterogeneity of film unionism is shown for the first time in the following pages, in a chart compiled by Vance King of the Hollywood office of Motion Picture Herald, and translating into union terms the progress of a motion picture through five stages, Pre-Production, Production, Post-Production, Distribution and Exhibition.

NATIONAL BOARD OF REVIEW FACING TEST ON CONTINUANCE OF ACTIVITY

Civic Groups Relying More and More on Industry's Own Production Seal As Evidence—Film Meets Their Standards

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures appears to have reached its last stronghold. Providence, Rhode Island, now stands as the only remaining place where the Board has any legal status, where the law requires that motion pictures carry the seal: "Passed by the National Board of Review." But even in Providence the seal is necessary only for pictures that are to be shown on Sundays.

For that "privilege," the motion picture industry pays the board some $40,000 annually. And six of the eight distributors have concluded that it isn't worth it. The dues which the Board collects annually from club women in the field is another source of its revenue.

Origin of Board

In the days when state and city censorship was threatening on all sides, before the industry's voluntarily-adopted Production Code was established to create and maintain motion picture standards, before the Legion of Decency evaluated on screen morals, and before the largest civic and church and women's organizations of the country were rating films for the guidance of millions of their members, the National Board of Review was accredited with having had some value, both to the industry and to the public. Three-fourths of the distributors supporting the Board now believe that its former value has ceased to exist.

In the days when the motion picture had not yet evolved standards of art or morals or conduct for itself, Mayor George B. McClelland, of New York, acting on a report from Police Commissioner Bingham, issued an order, which became effective on Christmas Eve, 1908, revoking the licenses of all five-cent movie "peep" shows in New York, because of the alleged conditions of the theatres and nature of the films exhibited in them.

Panicky, the exhibitors, led by William Fox and Marcus Loew, organized to fight the order, contributing $5 a member. Before long they expressed a willingness to have the pictures submitted to a board of judges, or censors, prior to their public exhibition.

Accepted Expedient

The New York picture men were not eager for a censorship, but they were willing to accept any expedient to avoid closing their houses.

Charles Sprague Smith, who had founded the Young People's Institute, and thereby had inaugurated the community center movement in America, came forward to extend his cooperation. The records show that neither Charles Sprague Smith, John Collier, secretary of the Institute, nor their associates were exponents of censorship. But, early in 1909, a few weeks after the Christmas week New York exhibition disaster, the People's Institute, in cooperation with the newly formed Motion Picture Patents Company and its distributor members, formed the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures—thus giving the first tangible expression on record of the willingness of the embryonic motion picture industry to have its motion pictures reviewed by an outside board.

Terry Ramsaye, in his "Million and One Nights," observed, "The name of the newly formed organization was most unfortunate, even if expeditious, for it gave impetus to the censorship movement in many directions."

In 1915 the name was changed to the National Board of Review, which has continued in operation since, with Wilton A. Barrett, executive secretary, in charge.

Regulation Moves Follow

The efforts toward regulating motion pictures which followed in the wake of the first National Board of Censorship, on the part of club, church, civic, "reform" and other elements were almost countless.

Pennsylvania enacted a state censorship law in 1911, Kansas followed, in March, 1913, and Ohio in April of the same year. The state of Maryland created a censorship board in 1916, and New York State took similar action in 1921.

Reformers and clubs took up the movement, including the Reverend Wilbur Fish Crafts and his International Reform Bureau; the Reverend William Sheafe Chase, of the Protestant Church; the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and others.

The National Board started its "judging" of motion pictures at the outset, first charging each distributor $3.50 per reel on each review print, the distributor then, as now, receiving a "seal": "Passed by the National Board of Review," which was affixed to the main title on all prints distributed.

Policy Changed in 1919

Up to the time of the Armistice the Board did make certain recommendations for changes in pictures—it was still "censoring." Then, in 1919, a complete reversal was made on policy, the Board adopting a rigorous anti-censorship course, deciding to condemn nothing. And the Board has condemned nothing ever since. That change in policy in 1919 was also the occasion for raising the $3.50 per reel reviewing fee to $6.25.

During the first years of operations of the half-dozen state censorship boards, the National Board of Review's seal affixed to a motion picture was supposed to have had certain values in influencing the respective censors in behalf of passage of an individual picture when existing objections might otherwise have precluded the issuance of a permit.

In other places additional state or local censorship was averted by the passage of laws which required a picture to carry the seal of the National Board. Florida's law, now declared unconstitutional, was the most notable instance in this connection. The board's early evaluations of pictures were employed by clubs and women's organizations for the guidance of members in the selection of their motion picture entertainment. Providence remains the Board's lone legal hold, and that now appears to have been weakened by the recent discovery that the law there specifies that only Sunday showings require the seal.

Some of the distributors have learned that the Providence authorities have long since ceased even to depend on the National Board's evaluations of films, because they "recommend everything," and give no other gradings. Some of the authorities in Portland, Oregon, by informal agreement, are occasionally guided by the Board's evaluations, but the Board has no legal standing in the community.

The Florida Decision

It was Judge Worth W. Trummell, of the Circuit Court of Dade County, who sounded the doom of the National Board on Florida's statute books. In May, 1937, he specifically ruled unconstitutional the state law prescribing compliance with recommendations of the Board as the sole instrument of censorship control over motion picture exhibition in the state. Judge Trummell further held that the law is unconstitutional because it delegates legislative authority to an unofficial group in another state operating without any legal status whatsoever and without regulation.

It is now admitted at New York's home offices that more and more are church, club, civic and women's organizations relying on the motion picture industry's own Production Code seal for their guidance in selecting motion pictures for their members' entertainment, accepting it as a certification that the picture carrying the seal does not violate the concrete and specific provisions of the code in the matter of proper standards, that the picture has complied with that code, and that it was not judged merely by the somewhat obscure formula of the National Board.

Not a Participant

Through all of the movements of recent years, both within and outside of the motion picture industry, which have led up to Hollywood's voluntary adoption and maintenance of its Production Code, the establishment and continuance of the Legion of Decency, and the weekly first-hand studio evaluation of films by church, club and women's organizations for guiding members, the record shows that the National Board of Review has not participated in any of the improvements. Rather, the Board has been accused of being antagonistic to the new influences.

The National Board of Review has been proceeding down recent years with no outward manifestation of cooperation, service or benefit to the motion picture industry, except to delegate a group of workers to attend the home office showings of current releases and to collect $6.25 for every reel of feature and short subject material so reviewed, taking its $40,000 a year from the distributors. More than $1,000,000 has been paid into the Board's coffers since it started.

In all likelihood there will not be any outward concerted move by the distributors against the Board, but within two months it is expected that many feature and short subject pictures will be coming along without the "Passed by the National Board" seal. Twentieth Century-Fox Film's new "In Old Chicago" is one of the first features to go out without the Board seal. The distributors are expected to discontinue the old habit of submitting their prints

FEDERAL PROJECT INCLUDES THEATRE

The main topic of speculation among exhibitors in Milwaukee is in regard to whom will be granted the concession for a 650-seat theatre to be erected as part of a Federal housing project in Greensdale, which is in Milwaukee county, south of the city.

Bids have been opened for construction of the last section of public buildings, which will include the theatre, shops, a post office, a tavern and a garage and service station.

FILMS HAVE NO EDUCATIONAL DUTY, DECLARES CHICAGO "U" PROFESSOR

Stand of Mortimer J. Adler Parallels That Taken by Martin Quigley in Address Before Williamstown Institute

The film industry has no educational responsibilities whatsoever, Mortimer J. Adler, professor at the University of Chicago, declared before the annual conference of the National Board of Review, in New York, last week:

"To be concerned about educational movies when the schools and colleges are failing so miserably to give students an adequate liberal education is nothing short of farcical," he said.

Mr. Adler's stand was similar to that taken by Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief and publisher of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, at the Williamstown Institute of Human Relations last August 31st. Mr. Quigley pointed out that executives with responsibility for the motion picture industry "do not envision themselves as teachers, statesmen, churchmen or economists."

"They are showmen," Mr. Quigley said. He pointed out that "it is the industry's judgment and mine that the entertainment film belongs in the province of entertainment and nowhere else. If there are others who wish to use this medium for a message which they imagine the world is yearning to hear, the obvious course for them is to get a camera and go to work."

Mr. Adler, associate professor of philosophy of law, voiced his opinion at the Board of Review gathering, after Herbert S. Walsh, technical supervisor of an educational Works Progress Administration project in New York City, had advocated that the government and private educational foundations interest themselves in providing educational films.

The government might do well to "drop the film industry a hint" to become "a force for public good" by cooperating with the movement to provide educational films for school use, Mr. Walsh declared. Motion pictures, he said, escaped Federal control probably by coming along before the radio.

For the government to "suggest" to picture producers that they take an interest in educational needs would not be out of place, Mr. Walsh asserted.

Mr. Walsh charged that the use of motion pictures as an educational medium had been blocked by a "vicious circle" comprised of producers saying they would supply films if the schools would provide a market, and schools saying they would buy if the proper types of films were provided.

The speaker commended the work of the educational committee of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America that last summer reviewed short subjects for their educational possibilities. He said it was the first step toward breaking the jam. A second step, he said, would involve closer cooperation between the motion picture industry and educators especially trained in the technique of film production.

Mr. Adler, in his talk, declared that the home and the church have not measured up to their task of exerting "moral influence" upon the nation, so that to argue that the screen has a "moral responsibility likewise is futile."

This view was supported in part in the remarks made by Mark Van Doren, associate professor of English at Columbia University and film critic of The Nation, who said that to him films should have but one purpose—"to be entertaining."

Although in previous years resolutions condemning political censorship had met with some opposition, a similar suggestion this year was adopted unanimously.

The conference decided to take under advisement a proposal for a "national motion picture week," which was advanced by Mrs. Richard M. McClure, head of the Better Films Council of Chicago and formerly film chairman of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Wilton Barrett, executive secretary, later announced that no further action will be taken on the proposal.

Thursday night the delegates visited the exhibit on "The Making of a Contemporary Flm" at the Museum of Modern Art and Friday was devoted chiefly to reports from delegates from a number of cities.

Among the addresses given on Friday were those by Mr. Adler, Mr. Van Doren, Gilbert Seldes, author and critic; Alistair Cook, British radio and film critic, and W. Ward Marsh, film critic of the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Mr. Adler, after declaring that the screen has no education responsibilities, turned to a discussion of critics of motion pictures. He declared that "in general, criticisms are on as low a level as the public taste itself" and then expressed particular objections to the "sneering type" of critics.

Dr. Potter agreed with Mr. Adler's contention that "there are too many critics who actually hate the movies."

At the closing session of the conference, a luncheon, Paul Moss, New York City license commissioner, and Robert Edmond Jones, stage and color designer, were among the speakers. Mr. Moss, presenting the greetings of Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, described the mayor as "probably the most liberal, non-censoring mayor in the whole country."

"The last thing in the world he would do," Mr. Moss continued, "would be to appoint a license commissioner to be a censor."

"We in the license bureau are not in favor of censorship. I, for one, say most emphatically that I do not believe in censorship. A license commissioner, if he has any sense, does not go out and censor theatres. He must listen to the public opinion."

Mr. Jones predicted that within the next 25 or 50 years motion pictures will be produced that can be "felt" and "smelled" as well as seen and heard.

Joseph M. Price, member of the executive committee of the National Board of Review, presided at the luncheon. Other speakers and honor guests included Mrs. Mary K. Simkovitch, director of Greenwich House; Paul Rotha, producer of British documentary films; Ethel Merman, Dudley Digges, Wallace Ford, Dame May Whitty, Dame Sybil Thorndike, Al Shean and Mrs. J. Bertram Harvey of Philadelphia.

SCHOOL FILMS SEEN DELAYED

Although already approved in whole or in part by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America educational films committee, the 1,000 motion pictures chosen are not expected to be available for classrooms for several months, it was understood in New York.

Individual producer-owners of the approved films have not yet authorized their release to schools and, in the event they are made available, there is no distribution machinery set up for them at present.

Censorship Survey By Liberties Union

Censorship of film, stage and radio is the subject of a study being made by the American Civil Liberties Union in 1,000 cities of 10,000 population or more.

A questionnaire has been sent to public officials and others familiar with local conditions, to determine the relative standing of cities "in the practice of civil liberties." The union will present an emblem of recognition annually to the city receiving the highest rating.

Questions concerning 32 issues are asked in the survey, including the following:

1. Are films controlled otherwise than by court action. If so, how?

2. Can theatre licenses be revoked without awaiting a conviction or an injunction?

3. Do any local radio stations carry regular open forum programs on public issues? If so, what?

A committee headed by Richard S. Childs, president of the City Club of New York and a member of the union's board of directors, will rate the cities on the basis of the questionnaire returns.

Less than three per cent of some 1,500 films passed for Sunday showings in Massachusetts in the last fiscal year ran into difficulties, the report of the state's censor department shows. "Song at Eventide," a Samuel Cummins production, was cut the most, according to the length of eliminations printed. Eleven of the 47 films that were deleted were newsreels.

The license and public safety committees of the Seattle, Wash., City Council, at a meeting this week banned all strip-tease and semi-nude performances. The Board of Theatre Censors has been entrusted with enforcing the ban. Hereafter, all complaints from policewomen this year was adopted without a dissenting vote.

LEGAL STANDING IN ONLY ONE CITY

to the Board's reviewers and paying the $6.25 per reel for the "privilege."

The assertion has been made that even the presence of the seal is not noticed any longer by the public, what with the abundance of code numbers, state censorship permits, MPPDA membership insignia and credits to IATSE, the Society of Cinematographers and whatnot, adorning the main titles of nearly all pictures.

Reviewed Near Release Date

Distributors who have been supporting the National Board all these years point out that further ineffectiveness of the Board's evaluation of pictures is attested by the fact that in virtually all cases the Board reviews a picture almost on its national exhibition date, and its evaluation is, therefore, circulated well after a large part of the public has actually seen the film.

On the other hand, the 11 national club, church and women's organizations which now are evaluating pictures for the guidance of their vast memberships, preview pictures in Hollywood considerably before release and their affiliates and branches in the field receive the reports on selections well before the pictures reach exhibition.

Even the local "Better Films Councils" with which the National Board long had relations are understood to be now using the "preview" evaluations of the aforementioned organizations, in place of the National Board's belated lists.

The Board, by the way, collects membership fees of two kinds from its Better Films Council affiliates: associate membership at $2 per person per year, and cooperating membership at $10 per person per year. In addition, $1 per person annually is collected from those who belong to an affiliated or so-called "organized" group under the Better Films Council or under the "Motion Picture Study Club Plan" as concocted by the National Board.

Donations from Others

In explaining its position before Florida's Judge Trummell, last May, the Board admitted that it "is also open to donations from groups and individuals not connected with the motion picture industry."

The National Board of Review acts in no official or unofficial capacity for any national church, club or women's organizations, nor are its evaluations officially recognized by them. Its membership includes some persons belonging to such organizations, but the number is negligible. None of these 11 groups makes any charge whatsoever to distributors for its evaluating service. The construction of these previewing groups is admitted by the organized industry to be strong, with their memberships running into the millions.

The Eleven Groups

The West Coast Preview Committee is made up of representatives of specific groups, some national, some statewide. These groups are: the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, National Society of New England Women, General Federation of Women's Clubs, California Congress of Parents and Teachers, Inc., Los Angeles Section of the National Council of Jewish Women, Women's University Club of California, Southern California Council of Federated Church Women, California Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, and the California Chapter of the American Legion Auxiliary.

The National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution has a membership approximating 150,000.

The National Society of New England Women has an estimated membership of 5,000.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs has an estimated membership of 1,500,000 to 2,000,000.

The California Congress of Parents and Teachers, Inc., is a branch of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, but its previewing group in California has no connection with the national organization and does not officially represent it.

The Los Angeles Section of the National Council of Jewish Women is officially recognized as its previewing group by the national organization which has a membership of 40,000.

The Women's University Club of California, while it is connected with the American Association of University Women, is not the official previewing group for the national body, which has a membership approximating 40,000.

The Southern California Council of Federated Church Women operates its own previewing service. However, the National Council of Federated Church Women has an active motion picture department, so the Southern California Council might be considered the group which represents the national organization, whose membership exceeds 50,000.

The California Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs does not officially represent the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs. However, the national organization, which has a membership of 65,000, has shown interest in the work of the California Federation, and it seems reasonable to add the entire membership into the aggregate total.

There seems to be no way of knowing the membership of the California Chapter of the American Legion Auxiliary. The national organization with which the California Chapter is affiliated has approximately 444,000 members.

The East Coast Preview Committee operates in cooperation with the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the membership of which has already been mentioned. The members of the East Coast Preview Committee belong to practically every woman's organization of any consequence in the United States, including Catholic, Jewish and Protestant groups, patriotic, philanthropic and cultural clubs and organizations, and even the Junior League. It is estimated that the East Coast Committee members belong to organizations with an aggregate of at least 2,000,000 members.

"Arty" and "Radical" Viewpoint

Spokesmen in the American motion picture industry have frequently of late criticized the National Board of Review for its reputed tendency to turn from the business of observing entertainment for the American masses to a more "arty" and "radical" viewpoint. Specifically cited is the Board's promotion, by widespread publicity, of the laurels it gives to foreign pictures, some Soviet "Red," others highly questionable on moral grounds.

Too, the Board frequently gives its highest recognition to foreign players in foreign pictures over American performers. Typical is the Board's acclamation, this month, of Harry Bauer, for his part in "The Golem," made in Prague, as being "the most superior performance" of all given on the screen in America during 1937. The Board considered the performance of Nikolai Cherkassov in the Soviet-made "Baltic Deputy" as the fourth best performance of the year, and that of Mathias Wieman, in "The Eternal Mask," also foreign made, as another of the ten best performances. Practically the same situation exists every year, as the record will show.

Foreign Films Cited

Out of 20 of the "best" films shown in America in 1937, the Board has designated 10 from abroad. Some of the "best" foreign films so listed, with excerpts from the National Board of Review Magazine, follow:

"Eternal Mask," "a brilliant successful study in Freudian psychology," produced in Switzerland;

"The Lower Depths," "Gorki's classic of the submerged poor in Russia," produced in France;

"Baltic Deputy," "another of the fine pictures of the Russian revolution," produced in Russia;

"The Spanish Earth," "Joris Ivens' superb pictorial sketches of the war in Spain, eloquent with passionate sympathy and feeling," and "a vigorous commentary in behalf of the Spanish (Red) Loyalists," produced in Spain.

Subjects of Censorship Attacks

Last year, the so-called Committee on Exceptional Photoplays of the National Board of Review adjudged "La Kermesse Heroique" as the best film of the year made anywhere. "La Kermesse" is none other than "Carnival of Flanders," which was condemned in toto by the Legion of Decency.

Frequently, motion pictures selected by the National Board as being "exceptional photoplays," as the Board describes them, or adjudged by the Board to be the "best" of the year, are the subjects of censorship attacks and exhibition permit refusals, the most recent being "The Spanish Earth," which has been prohibited in various states because of its "Red" propaganda contents. More frequently, the Legion of Decency differs considerably with the Board's "recommended" films.

It has been said by the Board that it is rigorously opposed to governmental censorship; it has been said just as frequently by industry leaders that some of the motion picture subjects of the National Board's recommendations aggravate the censorship situation.

Wilton A. Barrett has been and still is the National Board of Review. He has surrounded himself with a group of educators and club women, headed by George W. Kirchwey, New York, who receive no salary. Mr. Barrett carries the self-named title of "executive secretary."

Called "Failure" by Harris

Probably the severest blow suffered by the National Board of Review within its own ranks came in July, 1936, when Dr. Louis I. Harris, well known as the former New York City Health Commissioner, resigned from the executive committee of the Board because, in his opinion, the Board "pulled hard on the oars but stood still"; because "it is top-heavy with

Now the master showman of them all brings an even more amazing hero to the screen in a thrill packed adventure romance, sure to be the box-office winner of 1938. For here, in sequence after flaming sequence, Mr. DeMille tells the thundering story of Jean Lafitte (Fredric March), that gay and gallant son of trouble who left off his duties as a buccaneer king long enough to help Old Hickory win the battle of New Orleans . . . the battle which, in twenty roaring minutes, saved the United States from becoming a colony of the British Crown, made a president of Jackson, a national hero of Buccaneer Jean Lafitte.

WARNERS CALL TIME FILM PRO-NAZI AND LUCE REPLIES, "RIDICULOUS!"

Meanwhile Chicago Police Board Censors Call Off Ban Which Followed Their Decision That Film Was "Anti-Nazi"

An anti-climax to the excitement created by German protests against the current March of Time release and by Chicago's short lived banning of the film, on the grounds it is anti-Nazi, was injected by Warner Brothers this week when officials refused to show the reel in Warner theatres on the ground that it was "thinly veiled" pro-Nazi propaganda.

The Warner announcement, made in a lengthy statement issued by Harry Warner, president, created a unique situation inasmuch as March of Time officials had gained the impression that unless they withdrew, censored or edited the production—"Inside Nazi Germany—1938"—they would be subjected to retaliatory action in Germany, Italy and Japan.

Both Henry R. Luce, president of Time, Inc., and Louis de Rochemont, producer of March of Time, issued formal replies to Mr. Warner's charges but the answers drew no further comment from the Warner company. Mr. de Rochemont expressed wonderment over the Warner statement; Mr. Luce characterized Mr. Warner's assertions as "ridiculous."

"Mr. Warner's assertion that the March of Time is 'pro-Nazi propaganda' is ridiculous," Mr. Luce declared. "Mr. Warner also says that movie audiences pay little or no attention to the sound that comes from the screen. This is an amazing observation to come from the man generally credited with introducing the talking picture.

"According to the Warner statement, the Warner screens are reserved for entertainment only. Evidently Mr. Warner does not believe the movie industry capable of any honest pictorial treatment of any matter of importance.

"Fortunately Mr. Warner does not control the entire motion picture industry."

David O. Selznick, president of Selznick International, praised the film in a telegram to Mr. Luce. "Heartiest congratulations," Mr. Selznick wired, "March of Time's 'Inside Nazi Germany' is one of the greatest and most important reels in the history of pictures. It is exciting to know that at long last someone has the courage to present such facts to the public in this medium and the intelligence and talent to present them so dramatically."

An About Face in Chicago

In Chicago, the board of censors did a complete about face on its decision to prohibit showing of the film in the city. But reversal of the order came only after a storm of public protest which was led by the Chicago Times.

March of Time capitalized on the Chicago decision by including in an advertisement a statement attributed to Chicago's Police Commissioner Allman. "The film is not censorable—I lifted the ban," Mr. Allman was quoted as saying.

The original decision to bar the picture from Chicago houses was based on the assumption that it contained material which was likely to create public ill feeling against a nation "friendly to the United States." Chicago's newspapers responded to the situation by declaring the censors' action "stupid and against the freedom of the press."

In the face of this controversy and despite the reported unfavorable action created by the film in German circles, Warner Brothers took an exactly opposite viewpoint.

"Considerable confusion among public and press appears to have followed our action in not showing 'Inside Nazi Germany—1938,' the current issue of March of Time," Mr. Warner's statement read. "At the time our decision was made it did not seem necessary for us to make any explanation. But since we have been asked for our reasons we feel no hesitancy in making our position clear. 'Inside Nazi Germany—1938,' in the opinion of the large number of company officials who have seen it, may be interpreted as pro-Nazi propaganda. I am informed that most of the portion of this film showing Nazi activities within Germany was made in the form of silent motion pictures with consent and necessarily with the approval of Doctor Goebbels' ministry of propaganda—as indeed must all motion pictures be that are made in Germany.

Cites Audience Reactions

"It is true that the remarks of the commentator, added to this silent film in this country, tend to counteract to some extent the effect of the silent film, but the effect and appeal of a motion picture is to the eye primarily. Careful analysis has proven that the words of commentators when used in connection with motion pictures have but a small effect as against the great effect of what is shown on the screen.

"In our opinion the film remains pro-Nazi propaganda. This film has already been shown in several motion picture theatres where portions of the audience have hissed and jeered the picture and others have applauded it. We do not intend to make our screens a medium for the dissemination of propoganda for Germany no matter how thinly veiled that purpose may be. Our screens are reserved for the presentation of entertainment of the highest quality."

The first reply to the statement came from Mr. de Rochemont, who said it was difficult to believe that Mr. Warner had made the statement, and then pointed out that the announcement was signed by Mr. Warner's publicity representative.

"A great many people besides Warner Brothers officials have seen this picture in theatres and at previews during the past week," Mr. de Rochemont continued. "Without a single exception they differ with the alleged statement of Mr. Warner and his associates. During the past 24 hours the German consuls in San Francisco and Buffalo have lodged protests with city officials asking that it be withdrawn from the screen because of its lack of sympathy with their political ideals. In New York City, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Father John LaFarge, associate editor of the Catholic weekly, America, and Rev. Guy Emery Shipler, editor of the Churchman, have praised it as an honest piece of pictorial journalism. The chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Key Pittman, saw the picture yesterday and said: "It is the kind of picture that shows aspects of life unknown in this country and exactly what happens when a dictator takes control of a nation. Every man, woman and child in this country should see it.'

"Ex-Ambassador Dodd, who returned from Germany less than two weeks ago, said of this picture: 'The members of every American family, young and old, who believe in liberty and democracy, should by all means see this issue of March of Time.'"

The widespread publicity given the production before its release resulted in New York City police taking precautionary steps against trouble when the film opened at the Embassy Newsreel Theatre on Broadway. Detectives from the Alien Squad were stationed in strategic points throughout the house, prepared to quell any disturbances, and uniformed officers were stationed outside the theatre.

The 16 showings on the opening day, however, resulted in no trouble. Part of the audience booed the film, others applauded; some shouted "Heil Hitler," and still others responded with "Heil Roosevelt."

In a statement issued by A. G. Rudd, general manager of the newsreel theatre, it was announced: "The film is decidedly controversial and the theatre already has received many protests from those who feel it was unfair to one side or the other."

As a preface to the showing of the film, the Embassy carried a trailer announcing: "The issue of March of Time you are about to see has caused much controversy. Our policy is to fearlessly present any worthy film released by a recognized American producer. We therefore present uncensored and impartially the following subject."

In Washington, it was first announced that the film would not be shown in RKO houses but this later was corrected with the announcement that the circuit would exhibit it.

Dr. Ben Paul Sandy, chairman of the Maryland censor board, rejected a protest against the picture lodged by Frederick F. Schneider, German Consul in Baltimore. The board approved the release.

Originally cancelled in New Orleans by Vic Meyers, manager of the Orpheum, the March of Time release finally was exhibited but, it was reported, only after a number of cuts. After seeing the picture at a private preview, Baron Edgar Von Speigel, German consul, remarked: "It makes me homesick for Germany."

Reports from the field indicated a big demand for the film, according to RKO exchanges. In Ohio the distributor sold to Warner opposition throughout the territory including the Schine houses which gave it special dates with an extra advertising campaign.

GERMANY TO HAVE MYSTIC RITES

The controversy over the propaganda and religious or lack of religious contents in the current March of Time release was raging in the United States when the New York Herald Tribune reported, in a dispatch from Berlin, that "mystical ceremonies before busts or pictures of Chancellor Adolf Hitler are to be performed in schools of the Reich in connection with the celebration January 30 of the fifth anniversary of the Nazis' Assumption of power."

A chant to be repeated by children was reported in condensed form as:

"We don't want rest. We loathe quiet. Waiting is death. He who is unfaithful and leaves the flag of Der Fuehrer shall lose honor forever. Unfaithful, be accursed! Fuhrer, we salute thee!"

FIRST FEATURE CARTOON SETS TEST RUN MARKS

'Snow White' Receipts Increase in Second Week at Music Hall and Carthay Circle; Record at Miami Sheridan Playhouse

The box office career of the world's first motion picture cartoon in feature length is now under way. Few motion pictures in the 40-year history of the screen have brought as much inner-trade speculation as Walter Disney's 7,380 feet of pen-and-ink animation of Grimm's 125-year-old fairy tale of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

Three trial-and-test runs are now being conducted to gauge its box office possibilities, the most important of which is the Music Hall performance at Rockefeller Center in New York. The Carthay Circle in Los Angeles and the Sheridan in Miami are the other two.

Out of these three runs comes the first factual evidence of "Snow White's" box office performance. In New York, the picture in its first week grossed $108,000, and in the second week brought $110,000. Only seven pictures exceeded those figures in all of the Music Hall's five-year history. Los Angeles ran up $80,793 in five weeks, playing to only two shows daily, averaging about $16,200 weekly, against a general weekly house average of $11,800. In Miami, $7,400 was grossed in the first week, against the house record of $4,700 for four days of "Follow the Fleet."

The second week's gross marked the first time that any picture had bettered its previous week's total at the Music Hall.

RKO Radio, distributing "Snow White" for Mr. Disney, is asking a rental of 50 per cent of the box office receipts, expecting more from some owners and less from others.

The picture is being sold on individual deals. Subsequent-run release dates, therefore, will differ in each zone, depending on the first run.

The first sample of clearance is the seven days' protection given the Music Hall over the RKO circuit which has first subsequent-run rights in New York. On the other hand, RKO is waiving three days of its seven-day protection over following runs, in order to expedite availability.

RKO will attempt to place "Snow White" on a single-bill policy generally, taking the lead at its own theatres.

RKO predicts a total world gross of between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000.

Still to be determined is whether the cartoon will set an all-time precedent with four weeks at the Music Hall, and the respective attitudes of both the Music Hall management and RKO in that connection, RKO having a considerable interest in any extension of playing time by the Music Hall in view of the position of RKO's own circuit in holding "Snow White" exhibition rights following the Music Hall.

The box office possibilities of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" have been subjected to argumentative speculation and estimation all the way from producers' cocktail tables in Hollywood cafes to sales managers' and circuit buyers' coffee corners in the Tavern in New York.

In between those two coastal motion picture round tables is that large community of motion picture exhibitors, styled the "subsequent runs," who, with their own box offices in mind, are expressing proportionate interest in "Snow White's" first performances and, for the same box office reasons, are equally curious over availability.

RCA's RECORDS FROM "SNOW WHITE"

Unusual is RCA Victor's arrangement with its affiliated RKO to put eight of the tunes from Disney's "Snow White" on Victor records, as performed in the film, and issued in a special album of three records, selling to the public at $2.25 the set. This is frequently done with music from operas, operettas, concerts, even stage plays, but it is the first time on record that an album was made from a film. RCA says that Victor dealers throughout the country are planning to tiein with theatres in their respective localities, arranging special promotions simultaneously with the showing of the picture.

Probably the first outside commercialization of Walt Disney's "Snow White," in the matter of the printed word, came this week with the conclusion of an arrangement between K. K. Publications (Kay Kamen, Disney licensor), and newsstands in New York for the sale of 250,000 copies of ten-cent "authorized editions" of colored and black-and-white cartoon reproductions from the picture.

Factual Box Office Performances

The picture's first week New York Music Hall gross of $108,000 was made despite the first two real snow-and-ice storms of the season, the season's first near-zero weather, the mid-term examinations in most of the city's elementary and high schools and an almost complete lack of exploitation campaigning directly tying in with the showing.

Not that long lines were not visible, some 175,000 persons buying tickets during the opening week, compared with the 185,000 who established the five-year house record for Fred Astaire and Gingers Rogers and "Top Hat," which, benefiting by a three-day Labor Day holiday, with milder weather, grossed $134,000. Evidence of "building" was seen later in the run, paid admissions recorded in the first 14 days running to 330,000, which is capacity attendance. But, lacking the advantages of increased holiday prices at the Music Hall the film could not parallel the house revenue record. Regardless, in the first four days of the second week, "Snow White" had taken $4,000 more than the same period in the first, for a gross of $68,000, finishing the second seven days with $110,000. No film at this house has ever bettered its previous week's gross.

In being held for a third week, the Disney cartoon equals the long-run Music Hall record, tying with only 10 other films that have played the extended engagement, among the 191 features used by the theatre in its five years. The ten films playing three weeks included: "Top Hat," "Nothing Sacred," "A Star Is Born," "Stage Door," "Swing Time," "Mary of Scotland," "Follow the Fleet" and "Little Women."

Bearing in mind that the box office receipts of "Snow White" at the Music Hall are claimed to have been affected somewhat by the winter elements, its $108,000 gross for the first week and its $110,000 gross for the second week, compared favorably with previous top-bracket Music Hall pictures, every one of which is said to have had the advantage either of extra-holiday increased admissions, or played Christmas or Easter school holiday weeks. Grossing in excess of $100,000 at the Music Hall were:

"Top Hat"	$134,000
"Prisoner of Zenda"	123,000
"Swing Time" (first week)	123,000
"Swing Time" (second wek)	120,000
"Top Hat" (second week)	113,500
"Stage Door"	113,000
"Little Minister"	110,000
"Nothing Sacred"	110,000
"Little Women"	109,000
"Rainbow on the River"	108,000
"Cavalcade" (first week)	107,000
"Cavalcade" (second week)	106,000
"Vogues of 1938" (first week)	104,000
"Vogues of 1938" (second week)	103,793
"One Man's Journey"	103,064
"Nana"	103,000
"Private Life of Henry the Eighth"	103,000
"Cardinal Richelieu"	103,000
"Little Women" (third week)	102,000
"Morning Glory"	101,249
"When You're in Love"	101,000
"A Star Is Born"	101,000
"Topaze"	100,956
"Mary of Scotland"	100,500
"Magnificent Obsession"	100,225
"My Man Godfrey"	100,200
"Love Me Forever"	100,019
"We Live Again"	100,000
"Broadway Bill"	100,000
"That Girl from Paris"	100,000
"Seventh Heaven"	100,000

"Snow White" surpassed 22 of the Music Halls' runs in the $100,000 class, and only seven pictures in all of the five year history of the theatre exceeded the cartoon in income.

The Music Hall's showing of "Snow White," opening on January 12th, was preceded by the world premiere on December 21st, at the Carthay Circle in Los Angeles, where, contrasted with a general weekly house average, of $11,800, "Snow White" has been playing as follows: First week, $19,300; second week, $20,479; third week, $14,800; fourth week, $13,214, and, fifth week (ending on Monday), $13,000. The Carthay is a 1,500-seat theatre, some 4,500 seats fewer than the Music Hall's 6,000, and shows twice daily, against the Music Hall's five.

Income from the Florida test is well over the house record of the theatre, the picture grossing $7,400 for a full week at the Sheridan at Miami Beach, where a four-day run had been the longest. This compares with the $4,700 record to date, made in four days by "Follow the Fleet," last February.

Sales Policies on "Snow White"

The determination of the RKO Corporation to set a rental of 50 per cent of the box office receipts as the point from which the company will bargain, brings the story of the merchandising of the world's first feature cartoon to another turn, and an important one. Very few motion pictures have been sold on a 50 per cent rental, and none, so far as the record shows, has been sold through to the last run on any arbitrarily predetermined rental.

RENTAL AXIS IS SET AT 50 PER CENT

While RKO has set the axis of "Snow White" rentals at 50 per cent, the management believes that the capabilities of exhibitors on expectancies go both over and under that figure, that some can afford to pay 60 per cent, while others cannot afford the 50 per cent. Forty per cent is the usual top industry sales rental.

The company's home office in New York said on Tuesday that some 60 per cent deals already have been signed, in the northwest.

This much is certain, says the management: 50 per cent rentals will prevail for the most part for the top runs, and from there on the rental will depend on the outcome of the usual bargaining between exhibitor-buyer and exchange-seller.

Interests close to the Music Hall, representing the key "Snow White" test run of the country, conceded Tuesday that 50 per cent would be an impossible rental figure for that theatre. Remembering a previously mentioned estimate by Nelson Rockefeller that the Music Hall pays on an average of some $50,000 weekly to put on its entire, film, stage and orchestral program, it is obvious that a 50 per cent split with RKO on "Snow White" would run the cost of "Snow White" alone up to $54,000, based on the $108,000 first week's gross, without figuring on any of the other parts of the Music Hall's program.

Investigation discloses that a rather unusual situation exists over "Snow White" among certain sales executives and circuit film buying heads. Some distributors reputedly hope that the picture will build at the box office to aid RKO in its request for a 50 per cent rental. Their reason lies in the potential benefits from the precedent thereby established, in support of any 50 per cent deals which they may launch for any of their outstanding productions in the future. The circuit buyers, on the other hand, desire no such 50 per cent rental precedent.

Outward expressions of exhibitor sentiment in the field of the 50 per cent "Snow White" rental question can be confined at this early date to the protest of the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners in Philadelphia against any kind of 50 per cent levies, regardless.

Warner Brothers' "Gold Diggers of 1936" and the United Artists-Charles Chaplin "Modern Times" are two of the few pictures of recent years for which 50 per cent was asked.

Release Date and Availability

The S. A. Lynch-Paramount circuit of 12 theatres in Florida will show "Snow White" in all of its houses, dating bookings to the end of the winter resort season, on April 1st. After finishing at the Sheridan in Miami Beach, it will move to the Colony, in Miami, for an extended run, Lynch-Paramount then giving the picture preferred weekend dates at the Olympia, Paramount, Flagler, Regent, Rex, Roxy, Tivoli, Community, Hialeah and Coral Gables of this Greater Miami Paramount Enterprises.

The only other date now set by RKO is for February 11th at Isadore Rappaport's Hippodrome theatre in Baltimore, but other bookings are expected for that date.

The reason for the slowness of dating is twofold, both having a definite relation to the picture's availability to subsequent runs. In the first place, the producer has been experiencing considerable difficulty in moving color prints out of Technicolor's plant in Hollywood. Quite some extra time is required for a color print over black-and-white. The Music Hall has been operating with two prints, shipped via air express direct from the coast. The theatre was not serviced by the local exchange, as is customary.

More problematical, however, in determining subsequent run availability, is the fact that "Snow White" is being sold by RKO entirely on individual deals, and the consummation of the local pre-release or first-run dating, together with the length of that individual engagement and the extent of the protection purchased by the first run, will, of course determine the available date for the local second and subsequent runs.

RKO expects to make public on or about February 11th a series of pre-release or first-run dates, by which subsequent-run exhibitors in the respective territories may be guided.

In the case of the Los Angeles territory, the length of the Carthay Circle run is still indefinite, thus affecting the available date for subsequents in that sector. In Miami, availability is to be governed on whatever clearance the Lynch-Paramount interests have over and above the April 1st date when their showings are expected to terminate.

The greatest interest over "Snow White" availability, however, is centered in New York, where, after finishing two weeks, and starting a third, the Music Hall management reports that there exists better than an even chance that the theatre will set a precedent and keep "Snow White" for a fourth week, perhaps a fifth week. That still was speculative, however.

RKO has no little interest in the length of the run at the Music Hall because 47 of that company's 51 theatres in the Metropolitan area, together with eight Skouras Circuit houses, have the first-run call on "Snow White" following its pre-release at the Music Hall.

With no general release date determined—nor will such determination be made for some time because of the individual selling of the picture—RKO's own theatres must wait seven days after the last showing at the Music Hall before they may play the picture. The Circuit, of course, is also prohibited by the terms of the Music Hall protection, from even advertising "Snow White" as coming to RKO theatres before the expiration of the Music Hall's seven-day clearance.

In the case of the clearance held by RKO, however, the company intends to expedite availability to subsequent-runs by waiving about three days of its own seven-day protection rights, thereby making the pictures available to second-runs in about four days after its finishes on the RKO circuit, instead of the seven to which RKO theatres are entitled.

The RKO circuit first-run in New York will be for a full week, the company extending the split-week policy prevailing at its two-score Metropolitan theatres. If, then, the Music Hall should hold "Snow White" for four weeks, the picture would be available to the RKO circuit one week later, on or about February 9th, and to New York subsequent-runs about February 20th to 23d. The Music Hall's holding for a fifth week, of course, would postpone these availabilities still another week, or to February 16th for RKO's circuit, and to February 27th to March 6th for the subsequents.

Seek Single Bill for "Dwarfs"

RKO's theatres in New York will abandon their standing double-bill policy for "Snow White." Very few features receive single attention at RKO houses, nor are many held for a full week by that circuit.

RKO's sales department will attempt to have "Snow White" single bills prevail generally, on the premise that the world's first feature length cartoon rates such treatment. However, where there is no alternative but to agree to a dual bill—"well, there is just no alternative," according to an RKO spokesman.

Before the completion of "Snow White," considerable speculation existed in the trade, in all branches, as to whether a feature cartoon would stand up alone on a theatre program. The general impression, existing within and outside of RKO, now seems to be that it will, despite RKO's circuit championing of duals.

Admission Prices Considered

The question of admission prices for "Snow White" is occupying the attention of RKO's sales department in New York, with a decision made to urge exhibitors to establish a uniform price both for adults and children, and not to charge the usual lower rate for children.

Some exhibitors are reported even contemplating increased admissions, RKO reports. On this particular matter, however, the company has decided to refrain from participating in any discussion, or other discussions now underway in still other exhibitor quarters pointing to the possibilities of running special shows at usual prices for youngsters during morning hours.

Test-Run Reactions Watched

Selling by the distributor to the exhibitor is one thing, but selling "Snow White" to the patron by the exhibitor is something else, as judged by the experiences of the Music Hall management in New York, where it was found that not only did apprehension exist at the outset among the public over the fact that the picture is a cartoon, but many had expected that "Mickey Mouse," "Donald Duck" and other of the more popular Disney characters were definitely a part of "Snow White," concluding that a Disney cartoon is a Mickey Mouse cartoon,

DISNEY'S DWARFS TO GO ON TOUR

One Broadwayite, moving in a light mood, observed that Walter Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" is one picture whose principals will not be seen on a personal appearance tour, a practice quite common these days in connection with the exhibition of outstanding productions.

However, some of Mr. Disney's "dwarfs" will most certainly tour the hinterlands, the stage show bookers of Fanchon and Marco having this week signed Adriana Caselotti, Roy Atwell and Pinto, "voices" of the cartoon dwarfs, for a stage act at movie houses.

MATINEES HEAVIEST

regardless of the subject. The Music Hall management also found that the reports of newspaper and radio critics, commentators and columnists quickly dispelled any misunderstandings, and word-of-mouth advertising did the rest.

It was found, too, by the Music Hall, that the question of turnover is a problem, what with both adults and youngsters sitting for second and third showings.

Matinees in the afternoon, particularly after school hours, draw the heaviest, considerably outdistancing the usually better business hours of evening. The reason advanced by the Music Hall was that the socalled "sophisticated" showdoing dinner crowds are less apt to be drawn to "Snow White" than the larger adult-and-children classes. Noticeably absent are the likewise reputedly sophisticated "Big Apple" and "Shag" dancing classes of the high schools.

Regardless, RKO's Ned Depinet holds that "the Disney feature has perhaps the widest appeal of any picture ever released, drawing not only the regular theatregoers, but appealing particularly to the thousands in each community who infrequently attend the movies."

One record established by the picture at the Music Hall was the $5 charged by itinerant sidewalk speculators in doorways in the vicinity of the Music Hall for regular $1.65 reserved seats. The $5 is a high of all time for a continuous run theatre.

That Fourth Week

Confining its contractual commitments at the start on all new bookings to two weeks, the Music Hall, as previously noted, has purchased a third week for only ten preceding pictures, and none has ever played longer. In order to hold over a film the Music Hall's requisite is that it must gross between $60,000 and $65,000 in the first four days of the week preceding. Now going into the third week, the theatre's management says that "the Walt Disney film shows no signs of diminishing."

"If 'Snow White' shows sufficient life to hold over for a fourth week, it will be held," said a Music Hall spokesman, who intimated further that the same would hold for a fifth week. The management was said to have no set policy against an extension beyond the three-week runs which up to now have held the house record.

RKO, however, desires to make the picture available to its own theatres and to subsequent runs as quickly as possible. There has been no determination of policy as yet by RKO on the matter of the Music Hall's requisitioning a fourth week because of the fact that it still is only a possibility.

Holding of "Snow White" for a fourth week, or longer, by the Music Hall, brings up the recurrent trade discussion of the possible effect on subsequent-run business of lengthy pre-release showings. In this matter RKO cites the three-week run of "Top Hat," which, after hitting the all-time high of $131,000 at the Music Hall, was said to have successfully performed subsequently at both RKO houses and following runs.

$4,000,000 Gross Expectation

RKO's home office makes the early prediction that "Snow White" will roll up a total world gross film rental of between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000. This compares with highlight grosses of earlier outstanding productions such as the $5,000,000 all-time sound-film record made by Warner Brothers' "Singing Fool," with Al Jolson, in 1928-29; and the $4,500,000 all-time silent-film record made by "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," in 1921-22.

Other record rental grosses were established by "Ben-Hur," silent, MGM, 1926-27, $4,000,000; "The Big Parade," silent, MGM, 1925-26, $3,500,000; "The Birth of a Nation," silent, Griffith-United Artists, 1915-16, $3,500,000; "Cavalcade," sound, Fox, 1933-34, $3,500,000; "The Jazz Singer," sound, Warner Brothers, 1927-28, $3,500,000; "Sunny Side Up," sound, Fox, 1929-30, $3,300,000, and "Broadway Melody," sound, MGM, 1929-30, $3,000,000.

No "Snow White" Cycle

The only word from other sectors of the industry on the matter of a possible "cycle" of feature cartoons came from the direction of Warner Brothers, where Leon Schlesinger, the Warner cartoon producer, was discussing with company officials in New York the advisability of making a feature cartoon available sometime in 1938-39.

Netoco Theatres Reduces Capital

Publix Netoco Theatres Corporation, a Delaware corporation operating in Massachusetts, reduced its capital from $2,161,400 to $1,000,000 represented by 20,000 shares of common stock without nominal value. A certificate of reduction in capital was issued by the secretary of state at Dover, Del.

Of the 20,000 shares, 10,000 were Class A common and 10,000 Class B common. The reduction was affected by canceling and retiring 11,614 shares of preferred stock issued and outstanding and owned by the company and by charging $1,161,400 against the capital account of the corporation. Samuel Pinanski is president of the corporation.

10 Topekans Oppose Duals In Press-Theatre Poll

Only 10 Topekans of the hundreds who participated in a contest conducted jointly by Fox Topeka Theatres and the Topeka Daily Capital, said they preferred double to single feature programs.

The favorite type of film was the musical, with the comedy-melodrama a very close second.

Tyrone Power was easily the favorite actor, Nelson Eddy second, Robert Taylor third and the following in the order named: Jeanette MacDonald, Myrna Loy, Shirley Temple, Clark Gable, Gary Cooper, Ronald Colman, Alice Faye, Fredric March, Loretta Young, Greta Garbo, Fred Astaire.

Hays at Farm Manager's Rites

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, who left New York Saturday for the coast, stopped off in Sullivan, Ind., to attend funeral services held there for Dan Gettinger, 45, the manager of Mr. Hays' farm in that township. Mr. Gettinger, a graduate of Purdue University and former member of the Indiana Assembly, was killed on Friday by a falling tree. Mr. Hays was accompanied to Chicago by Dirrelle Chaney of the MPPDA staff.

N. Y. Legitimate Theatres Hit by Two-Day Strike

A two-day strike of box office staffs, affecting nine legitimate theatres in New York City, was ended Tuesday night when representatives of the Theatrical Managers, Agents and Treasurers Union, the League of New York Theatres and the Theatrical Press Agents Association signed an agreement under which the union members returned to work, picketing ceased and the Press Agents Association agreed to join the union as a semi-autonomous chapter. Chief factor in the strike was the union's claim of jurisdiction over press agents.

Before the settlement was reached Jack McNevin, business agent of the union, said the organization's object was recognition from every legitimate theatre in the city, following which a drive would be started to organize house managers, press agents and treasurers in motion picture houses.

Recognition as the sole bargaining agent for its members is the union's only demand at present, Mr. McNevin said. Wages and working conditions will be taken up later.

The dispute began when the TMAT, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, claimed jurisdiction over press agents, already organized in the New York Theatrical Press Agents Association. The union's sole ally in the theatrical labor ranks was the teamsters' union, a combination which has held up several shows during the last week and which last week forced two members of the Press Agents Association to resign their jobs when George Abbott and the Mercury theatre decided to deal with the TMAT.

Mr. McNevin said he had conferred with officers of Actors Equity, but no action was taken by that organization.

Guild and AAAA in Dispute

An attempt to heal the breach between the Screen Actors' Guild and other member unions of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America over inter-organizational disagreements on policy and procedure resulted in an announcement that the Actors Guild would submit a program of proposed changes in the bylaws of the parent organization this week.

The changes, it was said, would be calculated to advance the Guild's ideas for simple and inexpensive interchange of union cards and a strong central jurisdiction for actors' organizations within the AAAA. The announcement followed weekend conferences between Kenneth Thomson, executive secretary of the Actors' Guild and Burgess Meredith, acting president of Actors' Equity. Mr. Thomson said previously a break between the two organizations was inevitable unless prompt consideration was given the Guild's views.

In Hollywood the Screen Actors' Guild expressed opposition to a proposed plan to fingerprint all motion picture workers, chiefly for a check on the large number of extra players. The plan was suggested after the Los Angeles district attorney's office investigated reports of racketeering among the extras.

J. C. Squier and D. D. King of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's London office, winners of a sales contest, arrived Tuesday on the Manhattan, en route to Hollywood. Archie Mayo also arrived on the boat.

LEO ETCHES MIAMI IN HOLLYWOOD'S BEST—BANDS, HOOPLA, JUDY GARLAND

Premiere Audience at Miami Beach Sheridan Stands and Cheers for Trouper Whose Parents Travelled in Stock

by TERRY RAMSAYE
in Miami Beach

"Everybody Sing" was reviewed in Motion Picture Herald of January 22, on page 38.

The audience at the Village Theatre in Westwood "responded to the film's smoothly flowing fun and music," wrote Gus McCarthy of the Hollywood staff.

It all started like this. Leo called me up and said, "I wish you'd come down to Miami and I'll show you my new etchings."

Came the dawn and St. Augustine and with the pines and palmettos flickering by the Florida Special, it seemed appropriate to turn to a review in Motion Picture Daily to discover what manner of etching this might be, under the title of "Everybody Sing."

"The elements of entertainment flow easily," said the reviewer, writing in the detached ease of our Hollywood office, "and the players give finely etched characterizations." Hollywood is great on etchings.

Even at that moment "the elements of entertainment" were indeed flowing easily.

Parades and Crowds

Came afternoon and arrival in Miami, bands, parade of usherettes, microphones, hoopla and the gaping multitudes, greetings, producer, Harry Rapf, star, Judy Garland, exhibition and promotion personages in platoons, New York, local and national.

There were police escorts, sirens, a swirling over to Miami Beach and everything done with that verve and dash of motion pictures on the move.

Receptions, interviews, autographs.

Then the Opening

Came night and the opening—at the Sheridan, Paramount's Miami Beach first-run, one of those boom day anticipations so far out it is called "a theatre for tomorrow," but still "downtown" in the optimisms of Miami Beach.

Again, lights, crowds, autographs, photographs, microphones.

The announcing was terrific. A-Mike Vogel was proclaimed as editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and Terry Ramsaye was thrown to the fans as "a pioneer."

Nicholas M. Schenck, accompanied by a number of guests of distinction, was able to slip by, but got mentioned eventually as one of the present.

[illegible] increased [illegible] would have risen to $2[illegible] ings before taxes woul[illegible] increase of almost $30[illegible]

The picture and Miss Garland had their way with the audience in the house, and with the attentions of the press of Miami, Florida and the South. The house stood and cheered for Judy at the end of the show.

The Miami premiere was one of those not-so-planned events. It seems that firstly Harry Rapf was a house guest of Nicholas M. Schenck at his Miami Beach home, just about when the picture was due, and studio reports, preview cards, etc., from Hollywood being promising, the idea was "why not" with a party for Mr. Rapf and Judy Garland.

And again there was another factor, this little Judy Garland.

Suggested by Mayer

It was along about the same time that two girls of like age and kindred promise were signed up by the Hollywood establishment of M-G-M, being Deanna Durbin and Judy. Miss Durbin's contract expired, with nothing especially important about her in sight, and she was permitted to stray away to other hands. The while Louis B. Mayer was abroad. When he got back to Hollywood and found Deanna gone, he made remarks, it was suggested as only he can suggest, that it would be just as well not to let the same thing happen to Judy.

Career Predicted

About then things began to break for Judy. She has been had on the screen a bit in "Broadway Melody," and again in "Thoroughbreds Don't Cry," and now on her own in "Everybody Sing."

Mr. Rapf and his MGM associates appear to be of the opinion she will be going much farther and faster.

After the show and about when "the elements of entertainment," as our Hollywood reviewer remarked, began again to flow easily, your correspondent began to look into the matter of howcome Miss Garland. She, and her mama and Mr. Rapf were at the head of a long table at the Royal Palm Club, hosts of a party of pressmen and pundits.

From Show Folks

Judy's mama is Mrs. Ethel Gumm, a widow now three years, and living in Hollywood some several years before her daughter's election to the screen.

The qualities of show folks always show, and observing the matter of fact trouper poise of Miss Judy, your correspondent remarked to her mama that there'd be showblood in her somewhere.

And then it came out. Her father, the late Frank Gumm, and Mrs. Gumm were, it seems, known in travelling stock as Jack and Virginia Lee. Also back yonder about 1915 Mr. Gumm became an exhibitor, with the New Grand Theatre in Grand Rapids, Minn., which is 'way up 40 miles above Hibbing in the Iron Range country. Pleasant to relate, Mr. Gumm, exhibitor, became a subscriber to the HERALD then and a contributor to "What the Picture Did for Me" ever and ever so long ago. They still read THE HERALD in the Gumm family.

The opening at the Sheridan brought into attendance a guest list which constituted practically a roster of all of the out-of-town showmen in the vicinity of this winter capital. Among the guests were:

Mr. and Mrs. Charles O'Reilly of New York
Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Sparks of Jacksonville
Mr. and Mrs. Carl Blanford of Asheville
Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Jenkins of Atlanta
Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Lynch –
Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Nathanson of Toronto –
Mr. and Mrs. Edgar B. Hatrick –

Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Jones of Chicago
Mr. and Mrs. Sailing Baruch of New York

Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Shanberg of Kansas City
Albert Warner of New York
Lord Beaverbrook of London
Harry Richman of New York
Fifi D'Orsay,
Roscoe Ates
A-Mike Vogel, editor of Motion Picture Daily.

The presentation at the Sheridan was under the attentions of W. R. Lynch of Paramount Miami Theatres, Jonas Perlberg, publicity manager of Paramount Miami Theatres, Rollin Stonebrook, manager of the house, with promotional endeavors by E. B. Coleman, Southern exploitation director for M-G-M, and by William Ferguson of the promotion staff of M-G-M's home office in New York.

Hope Springs Eternal

Miami made its bravest display of the event in a spirit of the eternal optimism that is Florida. The season is lagging and visiting transients who make the city's annual floodtide of fortune are estimated at about a half to a third their normal number.

Concurrently because of a certain misunderstanding as to whether New York or local talent are to control the chance concessions, the lid on gambling is on, further discouraging the commercial community, and added on to that this week were municipal scandals and indictments for graft conspiracy.

a variety of committees"; and was a "failure."

Dr. Harris charged publicly that the Board is "not doing anything significant, dynamic or progressive to give effect to its oft-expressed ideals."

"During my association [for ten years] with it the Board has failed to serve as a spokesman-body for the American community to help in realizing the recreational, educational and social possibilities of the motion picture," he said.

The letter of resignation further charged that "the executive committee luncheon meetings have concerned themselves with discussions of stereotyped details such as the annual conference of the Board, the annual bridge party, the discussion of finances, and other matters which to me seem unrelated to primary objectives of the Board as I was given to understand them."

Dr. Kirchwey, as executive committee chairman of the Board, answered Dr. Harris' charges with the conclusion, "Evidently he has expected too much of us."

Exhibitors Protest Shriners' Program

A committee of Cleveland motion picture exhibitors representing affiliated and independent theatres met last Wednesday with representatives of the Public Auditorium, the Citizens Committee and the Shrine, to protest against use of the Auditorium for stage shows with stars of the stage and screen. It was pointed out that taxpayers' money built the Public Auditorium and that its use in direct competition to the theatres, who claim to pay taxes on an investment of $40,000,000, is manifestly unfair.

Upon representation of the Shrine committee that the organization already is involved to more than $40,000 in guarantees, the theatre committee withdrew its protest, and the Shrine agreed it never would undertake anything of like nature.

The Shrine program comprises a series of nine shows, six of which will be presented at the Public Auditorium and three at the Arena. Tickets are being sold in books covering all nine shows, on the strength of presenting a big musical starring Eddie Cantor and Deanna Durbin. Name bands of stage and screen also are booked.

Theatre representatives at the meeting were Col. Harry E. Long, Loew division manager; Nat Holt, RKO Great Lakes division manager; Jess Fishman, Warner Brothers; Ernest Schwartz, president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, and G. W. Erdmann, association secretary.

William Slavens McNutt, 52, screen writer, fiction writer and newspaper man, died at his home in Hollywood Wednesday, after a bronchial pneumonia attack. He was under contract to RKO at the time of his death.

ARGENTINE THEATRES PROTEST CHILD BAN

by NATALIO BRUSKI
in Buenos Aires

Argentine exhibitors are voicing loud protests against new Government provisions regulating the attendance of children at theatres. Under the new law, which some criticisms have said is a violation of individual rights, children under five years of age are prohibited from attending at all times except when special programs are staged for them. Children between the ages of five and twelve may attend only matinees provided the films shown have been approved by the Government.

Theatre owners fear substantial losses at the box office, particularly in suburban houses, as a result of the regulations.

Republic Officials Confer on Coast

A conference at which routine matters were said to be discussed was held recently in Hollywood by Herbert Yates of Republic, Floyd St. John, western franchise holder, Grover Parsons of San Francisco and Francis Bateman of Los Angeles.

David B. Whalen, former publicity director for the Federal Theatre Vaudeville Project in Massachusetts, has been appointed publicity director for Republic in New England.

Bill Saal, home office executive, returned to New York Wednesday after conferring with franchise holders in the field. Herman Gluckman, New York and Philadelphia franchise holder, plans to appoint no successor to Jack Bellman, former branch head who is now sales supervisor. Mr. Gluckman appointed Max Gillis, former Columbia salesman, to succeed Harry LaVine as branch head in Philadelphia. Mr. LaVine is now eastern district sales supervisor.

The Republic film exchange in Philadelphia has moved into temporary quarters at 1226 Vine Street while new offices are being readied at 1232-4 Vine Street.

Silverstone Returns To London Office

Murray Silverstone, head of the United Artists British organization, was to sail on the Aquitania from New York Thursday, ending an American visit of more than two months. He denied reports that he was contemplating resigning.

A. C. Berman, former president and general manager of United Artists in Canada, has been named foreign sales representative of Selznick International, with headquarters in London. Mr. Berman is now in London, having completed a study of distribution systems abroad.

Paramount Promotes Smith

George Smith, branch manager for Paramount in San Francisco, has been named assistant to Myke Lewis, western division manager. Mr. Smith will be succeeded by H. Neal East, Seattle exchange manager.

Warner Board To Discuss Plan To Move Offices

With the arrival in New York this week of Major Albert Warner, the board of directors of Warner Brothers prepared for a series of meetings at which a proposal to transfer some of the home office activities from New York to the coast will be discussed.

Harry M. Warner, president, arrived in New York from the coast last Thursday and, when greeted at the station by reporters, announced: "We're moving the publicity department to the coast." He indicated the transfer of other departments also was under consideration, but he answered all queries on this score with "There's nothing definite."

When asked by one of the reporters if there was any studio opposition to the plan to move the publicity headquarters, Mr. Warner retorted: "There's no opposition to anything that's right."

Under the present plan, the move will affect Charles Einfeld, director of publicity and advertising, who will take three members of his department with him. There will be no reduction in personnel at the New York office, it was announced.

Both Mr. Harry Warner and Mr. Einfeld plan to spend six months of each year on the coast and the remainder of the year in New York. Mr. Warner was accompanied on the trip to New York by Mrs. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Einfeld and Mr. and Mrs. Sam Schneider, assistant to Mr. Warner. Mr. Albert Warner arrived in New York from Florida.

A total of $500,000 has been set aside for national advertising on a group of pictures to be released during the current Sears Drive, Mr. Einfeld announced.

One of the pictures to be released during the drive, "The Adventures of Robin Hood," has been named by the fan magazine, Screen Romances, as the winner of the April award for the best picture of the month.

Mae West and Goodman Break Opening Records

The conjunction of Benny Goodman and his swing band and Mae West's "Every Day's a Holiday" at the New York Paramount theatre Wednesday broke opening day attendance records, according to the theatre publicity department.

Advance advertising announced that the theatre would open at 8 A. M. and as early as 5 A. The staff was increased to 55 ushers and 12 doormen and police reserves were called to handle the overflow crowds.

The publicity department further noted, "Following the conclusion of Goodman's appearance the audience rose en masse and a score of couples clambered to the pit platform to swing to the rhythm of the swing master. Ushers had to stop other couples from wildly dancing in the aisles. . . ."

U.S. COMMITTEE HEARS ARGUMENT FOR REVISION OF TAX EXEMPTION

Walter Vincent, Speaking for Industry, Points Way to Increased Revenue for Theatres and Federal Government

A ten cent increase in the admission tax exemption would result in heavier expenditures for advertising and printing and improvements in theatre buildings, the opening of additional houses, and an increase in the corporation income tax revenues, members of the House Ways and Means Committee were told this week by Walter Vincent, of Wilmer & Vincent Theatres, New York.

Mr. Vincent, planning to appear on behalf of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, at the last minute was made the representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Allied States, Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, Independent Theatre Owners groups, ITO and exhibitors generally, following a conference of leaders at which it was decided to concentrate argument in one speaker. As a result, the material compiled by P. J. Wood, who planned to appear on behalf of the Ohio ITO, and other organizations, was turned over to Mr. Vincent.

In contrast with the representatives of many organizations who asked tax relief for the benefit of the public, Mr. Vincent told the committee frankly that the exhibitors wanted relief so they could raise prices and make a little money.

The Government might lose some revenue from the admission tax, he admitted, but it would recoup that loss and more by the increased income taxes which would result from a more prosperous condition of the industry. Out of every additional dollar taken in by the theatres, he figured, 15 cents or more would go to the Government.

In support of his contention that increased revenue would result, Mr. Vincent cited the actual experience of two first-run 40-cent-top houses and showed how net earnings would increase under a 50-cent top.

One case was that of a house in a New York city of 328,000 population which in its last fiscal year had 1,100,829 admissions at 10 to 40 cents, the admission revenue being $282,-718 and other revenue $4,180. Against this there were expenses of $252,909, and net earnings before Federal taxes were $33,989. With the same number of admissions in each classification, the admission revenue, on a 50-cent scale, would have been $336,610. Allowing for increased film rental charges, expenses would have risen to $277,397, but the net earnings before taxes would have been $63,393, an increase of almost $30,000.

The other house was in a Minnesota city of 101,000 population. It had 545,628 admissions returning $172,300, expenses of $157,661 and net earnings of $14,968. On a 50-cent top, admission receipts would have been $211,258, expenses $169,482 and net earnings $42,105, an increase of almost 200 per cent.

These increased earnings, the circuit operator said, would all be subject to five Federal taxes: the capital stock tax, corporation income tax, excess profits tax or increased capital stock tax due to increased valuation, undistributed profits tax, and taxes to individuals for corporate dividends estimated to be 15 per cent of any increase in corporate income.

Against this, such loss in admission tax collections as might result would be confined to a very few houses, only 106 of the 465 first-run houses in key cities now charging over 40 cents.

"The artificial ceiling on admission scales at motion picture theatres imposed by the Federal tax on admissions of 41 cents or over tends to hold the top admission charge at 40 cents as against the natural economic and competitive factors that would cause the theatre management to charge 50 cents," he explained to the committee, "for the simple reason that ordinarily, out of the ten cents difference in admission charge, five cents would go to the Government as tax and 3½ cents to the distributor for film rental, always based on gross receipts, leaving but 1½ cents for the theatre management out of the 10 cent increase.

"A change in the exemption figure would not only affect all theatres now charging 40 cents admission, on which no tax is now levied, but all of the subsequent-run theatres who follow 40 cents prior or first runs, as well as higher admission first-runs which have 40 cent matiness scales."

A 50-cent exemption, he pointed out, would broaden the tax field materially, affecting probably 16,000 of the 16,258 motion picture theatres operating on January 1st.

No admission tax revenue is derived from any theatre charging 40 cents or less, he pointed out, and at houses charging 55 and 65 cents, the tax applies only on tickets sold at those prices, and those houses almost invariably charge 40 cents or less for morning and afternoon admissions.

"A slight increase in admission would mean a very substantial increase in the net profit of the corporation which would enable it to spend more for advertising, lithographs and supplies, thus contributing to a general stimulation of the business of many other industries," Mr. Vincent contended.

"Consequently, it would appear that under the 1938 revenue act the Government would secure from 12½ to 16 per cent tax on most of the admission increase.

William A. Brady, appearing for stage producers, begged the committee to remove the 10 per cent tax on admissions. Making an impassioned plea for the legitimate theatre he said, "We don't want to go to the poorhouse. Please, please, help or try to save an institution whose record is magnificent—find a flaw in it—from bankruptcy and the sheriff."

Lifting the tax from legitimate theatres, he said, would help them reestablish themselves outside the large cities of the east.

OPPOSITION SEEN FOR CURFEW BILL

The opposition of the motion picture industry is expected to be voiced when the legal affairs committee of the Massachusetts legislature renews its hearings on two bills proposed by Francis X. Coyne, representative.

One of the bills would prohibit the use of fictitious or assumed names by film actors and the second would establish a nine o'clock curfew in the state.

Hearing Set on Sirovich Plan for Establishment of Federal Department to Control Films, Radio and All Applied Arts

A five-day hearing on legislation providing for the creation of a Federal Department of Science, Art and Literature, to care for the needs of the motion picture and radio industries and other branches of the arts, will be held by the House Patents Committee beginning February 7th, it was announced last week by Representative William I. Sirovich (Dem.) of New York, author of the measure and chairman of the committee.

A resolution calling for the new department was introduced by Mr. Sirovich last year. It is not provided for in President Roosevelt's plans for reorganization of the Federal establishment, nor is there any great probability that Congress would look kindly on the suggestion, if it were offered for vote, in view of the fact that it provides for the construction of a "suitable building", which the measure suggests shall be located on Capitol Hill "to balance" the many-million dollar Supreme Court Building.

Adoption of the Congressman's plan would add another member to the President's Cabinet—a Secretary of Science, Art and Literature. Three under-secretaries are provided for, one of whom would administer the arts, including films and broadcasting. All Government agencies and activities dealing with motion pictures, radio, painting and sculpture, and other art, would be transferred to the new department.

"Finance has its department in the Treasury Department, business in general in the Department of Commerce; artisans and workmen in the Department of Labor; agriculture in all its branches in the Department of Agriculture; defense of the Nation in the Departments of War and Navy; all matters pertaining to the public domain in the Department of the Interior; affairs of foreign and domestic state policy and functions in the Department of State; legal matters in the Department of Justice; commercial and social correspondence in the Post Office Department, the work of all these departments being divided up into divisions, sections, branches and bureaus," Dr. Sirovich said in the preamble of his resolution explaining the need for the department.

Ohio Passes Admission Tax

Enactment of the Ohio admissions tax for poor relief needs was completed by the state legislature this week with the passage by the Senate of the joint conference committee's report on the disputed measure. The measure allocates the admissions tax and reenacts a utilities excise tax and a beverage tax, estimated to be capable of yielding $4,050,000. The admissions tax is expected to raise $1,500,000 annually.

The threat of reintroduction of the amusement tax on theatres in Ontario province, Canada, was removed, it was believed in trade circles, by the abolishment by Premier M. F. Hepburn of the post of director of the amusements revenue branch of the provincial treasurer's department. The reason given was that repeal of the amusements tax last summer had made the office no longer necessary.

Fight in Academy Over Rules on Cartoon Entries

Leon Schlesinger, cartoon producer for Warner Brothers, who resigned from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences because of his dissatisfaction with the method of permitting entries in the cartoon awards divisions, this week, drew a sharp rebuke from Frank Capra, president of the Academy, who disclosed that Mr. Schlesinger took part in the setting of the awards rules, by a vote of 17 for and two against.

Mr. Schlesinger objected to the rules which permit producers to enter one short subject for each series they made. Mr. Schlesinger produces two series of cartoons, Looney Tunes and Merrie Melodies. Walt Disney, under the rules, is permitted four entrants when Donald Duck and Pluto subjects are designated as individual series in addition to Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphonies. Mr. Schlesinger's Looney Tunes are in black and white and he said no black and white product could fairly compete with color product in competition and his request to submit two Merrie Melodies was turned down.

Mr. Capra in a letter to the producer said: "Problems of defining the production series involved not only cartoons but also one and two reel subjects. It was discussed for nearly two hours before a vote was taken. You took part in both discussion and vote. The vote by secret ballot of short subject producers was decided 17 to two against your interpretation of the rules. It was assumed that this settled the matter and the meeting went on to other business in which you also took part. The Academy has done everything possible in this case to maintain good feeling and if, under these circumstances, you wish to resign there is no alternative but accept your resignation."

Mr. Schlesinger arrived in New York this week to talk about new product with Warner Brothers home office officials.

Meanwhile Warners has selected five short subjects as its nominations for the annual awards of the Academy. They are: "The Man Without a Country," for the award covering two reel subjects in color; "Playing With Danger" and "Puppets' Love," for the single reel black and white award; "Swing for Sale," for the two reel black and white award, and "September in the Rain," a Schlesinger production, for the cartoon division.

Grainger's Plans Indefinite

Replying to reports that he is considering a return to active duty in the industry, James R. Grainger said in Hollywood this week that, while he has listened to a number of propositions, no particular deal is being definitely considered.

Lefton's Silver Jubilee

Nat. L. Lefton, Republic Ohio franchise owner, is celebrating his 25th year in the show business as an independent distributor. In honor of the occasion his Cleveland and Cincinnati offices are inaugurating a 13-weeks sales drive, starting February 1st.

Martin Resigns Paramount Post

Manny Wolfe has been appointed temporary head of Paramount's combined story and editorial departments to succeed Quinn Martin, resigned.

Ken Whitmore, who with Terry De Lapp headed Paramount's studio publicity department, has resigned and has been succeeded by Bob Hussey, assistant to Mr. De Lapp.

Gaumont Raises Program to 16

Four features, including two reissues, have been added to the minimum program of 12 pictures announced at the beginning of the season by Gaumont British, Arthur A. Lee, vice-president and general manager, announced before leaving New York to visit exchanges in New Orleans, Atlanta and Charlotte.

The GB program and release dates, starting with "Non-Stop, New York" which was released November 15th, includes: "I Was a Spy," with Madeleine Carroll and Herbert Marshall, a reissue, January 1st; "Look Out for Love," starring Anna Neagle, January 15th; "Wife of General Ling," February 1st; "The Girl Was Young," the first Alfred Hitchcock production of the season, starring Nova Pilbeam, February 15th; "Sailing Along," the first Jessie Matthews musical of the season, March 15th; "To the Victor," with Will Fyffe, John Loder and Margaret Lockwood, March 1st; "Floating City No. 1," formerly released as "F. P. 1," April 1st, and "The Show Goes On," second Anna Neagle starring production, April 15th.

Pictures either in work or announced for production include: "Illegal Holiday," with John Lodge and Margaret Lockwood; "Asking for Trouble," with Jessie Matthews; "Empty World," a Hitchcock production with Nova Pilbeam; "Strange Boarders," "Unconquered Woman," "A Girl Must Live," and "Wedding Dream."

Clinton M. White, GB assistant general manager, returned to New York this week after a three-weeks trip through the middle west. Arthur Greenblatt, eastern division manager, recently visited exchanges in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Washington.

Chertok Confers on Government Films

Jack Chertok, head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's short subject department, this week conferred in Washington with Department of Justice officials on the possibility of producing pictures dealing with activities of that government unit.

He was accompanied by Robert Benchley, whose next picture will be about the intricacies of income tax.

NYU Offers Writing Courses

Three courses in writing for stage and screen will be given by Albert Maltz, author of "Black Pit," "Private Hicks," and other plays, and by Robert Gessner, who wrote the screen play "Massacre" from his own novel of the same title, in the spring term of the Washington Square Writing Center of New York University, New York City.

U. S. Companies Fight Proposed Tax in Poland

American distribution interests in Warsaw have threatened to close their offices and discontinue the importation of pictures if a proposed levy on foreign product is enacted in Poland.

There has been agitation from time to time for such an increase in rates, but in each instance the legislation has not been enacted.

The new tax would be 20 cents per meter on all films passed by the censor. Distributors contend the tax would be too burdensome. Foreign films in Poland already pay one of the highest tariffs in the world, $17 per kilogram, or approximately $500 for the average length film. For comparison it is pointed out that the Czechoslovakian tariff is 50 cents per kilogram.

In addition, the Government tax on admissions amounts to 37 per cent on theatres showing foreign films, 4½ per cent on theatres showing domestic product. The proposed new taxation, it is contended, would amount virtually to a ban on foreign films.

Foreign representatives at the home offices in New York said this week that the tax would make it prohibitive to send their product into Poland. American distributors already are harassed by the money restriction laws. It is possible that American pictures will be withdrawn from the country if the tax is imposed.

The foreign department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America said on Tuesday that the proposed Polish tax was, as far as it knew, only a rumor and one that has cropped up at intervals.

Newsreel films of the Panay sinking have been barred by the Polish censor on the ground that they might arouse unfriendly feeling in a friendly nation.

Doyle Conference Delayed by Illness

Stuart F. Doyle, who was scheduled to leave New York for Hollywood last week to confer with Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of United Artists, was delayed due to an attack of influenza, and left on Sunday instead. His conference with Dr. Giannini concerns Mr. Doyle's plans for building five theatres in South Africa, and of obtaining a 10-year franchise for distribution and exhibition of United Artists product there.

The William Morris Agency, which represents Helen Morgan, said this week in New York that Mr. Doyle is negotiating for the actress with plans to produce films in Australia.

To Produce Comedies

Frank Snell, formerly associated with Condor, and Nat Ross, former producer of Van Beuren short subjects, have formed a company in Hollywood and plan to produce a series of 13 two-reel comedies and 13 one-reel oddities. Asta, the wire-haired terrier in "The Thin Man," will be featured in the comedies.

ANTI-TRUST DRIVE THREAT REVIVED AS CONFERENCE HOPES DISAPPEAR

Jackson Refuses to Confirm or Deny Reports of Prosecution Plans Following Victory Over Oil Companies

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

Although officials of the Department of Justice informally denied last week that plans were being made for an anti-trust drive in the motion picture industry, new possibilities of proceedings against the industry were seen in Washington this week, following the Government's victory in the trial at Madison, Wis., of its case against a number of oil companies, charging price-fixing.

"There are two or three industries which I think should be taken care of before motion pictures are considered," one official said last week when asked about the situation. However, this week, Robert H. Jackson, assistant attorney general in charge of the anti-trust division, refused to either confirm or deny reports of imminent prosecutions. He said it would be unfair do discuss conditions in any single industry in view of the investigations which are being made in a number of lines. It was conceded, however, that the department has been actively investigating conditions in the film industry for some time.

Members of the new legislative committee of Allied States, association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, appointed at last week's meeting of the board of directors, visited the Department of Justice last Friday for a long conference with Mr. Jackson, at which they are understood to have urged immediate prosecution of the distributors, against whom numerous complaints have been filed.

Complaint Before Trade Commission

The film situation also was up for consideration at the Federal Trade Commission, where the commission was said to have before it for study a full report on the complaint filed several months ago by Allied States, charging Paramount had withheld certain pictures, which exhibitors thought were covered by their season contracts, and had offered them on contracts for the following season at higher prices than originally asked.

It is not expected, however, that the commission will announce for some time whether it will proceed with the complaint.

Confers at White House

The active head of anti-trust enforcement was at the White House, Monday and is understood to have discussed the projected anti-trust legislation with President Roosevelt. Although it was felt in some quarters that the successful oil suit demonstrated the enforcement possibilities of the present laws, Mr. Jackson said, following that conference, that he still wanted new legislation.

There are indications that the President's anti-trust legislation will be along the lines of the Borah-O'Mahoney bill, calling for the licensing of all corporations engaged in interstate commerce, rather than providing for new and involved regulations.

EMPLOYER TAX FORMS DUE BY JANUARY 31

All employers of eight or more persons during the calendar year 1937 must file their federal unemployment insurance tax returns on Form 940 on or before January 31st, or be liable to penalty for delinquency, as no general extension of time will be granted this year, according to Guy T. Helvering, commissioner of internal revenue.

The tax rate for 1937 is 2 per cent of the payroll.

All contributions to state unemployment funds also must be made before January 31st to permit recognition of them as a credit against federal liability, he said.

Old Biograph Studio in Bronx Offered for Sale

The Biograph studio in the Bronx, New York, built in 1912 and valued for tax purposes at $500,000, is being offered for sale. The present tenant is Biograph Studios, Inc., wholly owned subsidiary of Consolidated Film Industries, and the sale would be subject to the lease, which expires in October, this year.

Empire Trust Company, which owns the property, said this week that while the studio is not listed on the open market, it is ready to receive offers. Brokers have been making the rounds of film companies, attempting to interest them in buying the property, but no definite bids have been made, according to the bank.

H. J. Yates, head of Consolidated, has been renting the studio to independent producers of short subjects and commercial films and used it for musical sequences for Republic's "Manhattan Merry-Go-Round" last summer. At that time Mr. Yates said he planned to film musicals in the east to some extent, believing this was practical because of the talent available in New York.

Consolidated took a five-year lease on the studio in 1933 on terms calling for a percentage to the Empire Trust on the basis of rentals from sub-leases and occasional producers, according to the bank. The property is held in the name of Actinograph Company, a subsidiary of Empire Trust, which acquired it in a foreclure from the old American Biograph Company.

In 1930 the bank spent $200,000 to modernize the plant and installed Western Electric recording equipment. When Biograph built the studio in 1912 the cost was estimated at more than $1,000,000.

Pointless to Confer With Independent Association, Says Kuykendall, After Allied States Decides Against Joint Meeting

All possibilities of a joint trade practice conference disappeared this week when Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, declared in New York that it would be pointless for representatives of his organization to confer with officials of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York.

Originally the projected plan called for the attendance of officials of Allied States Association but the organization's board of directors, meeting in Washington last week, voted to concentrate on "legislative relief" for its members.

A similar stand was taken by Mr. Kuykendall who declared: "The MPTOA has its own trade practice program which it developed at great cost of time and effort and has never ceased working for its acceptance and hope eventually to obtain it. There is no point in our abandoning it at this stage without national exhibitor support for an alternative program."

Sees Hope for Program

Later Mr. Kuykendall declared his organization's 10-point trade practice program has a better chance of being adopted at this time than any time since it was drafted 18 months ago. He said the program would be in effect now "if it had the cooperation of certain socalled exhibitor leaders who for reasons beyond my understanding have consistently used every possible means to discourage its enactment."

He also declared that "some distributor interests which have declined to participate in any way in conferences on a trade practice program are showing a definite interest in it."

Acting on "Divorce" Law

Meanwhile, Paramount prepared to wage a fight against enforcement of North Dakota's circuit theatre "divorce" law which goes into effect March 15th. Legal papers asking a temporary injunction against enforcement of the measure were drafted in New York City last week and over the weekend Joseph W. Finley, Paramount's resident attorney in St. Paul, took them to Fargo for filing about February 4th.

A hearing on the injunction is expected to be held in St. Paul because of the illness of Judge Andrew Miller, who is convalescing in Florida and is the only Federal judge in the Fargo district.

Paramount is the only company having theatre affiliations in North Dakota, and with its operating subsidiaries, the Minnesota and American Amusement companies of Minneapolis, it is the only company affected.

Attorneys for the Morse and Rothenberg circuit, of Boston, this week obtained a deposition from Joseph Quittner, son of the late Edward Quittner, former Middletown, New York, theatre operator. The M & R circuit, charging inability to obtain product, is plaintiff in an anti-trust action against large distributors, the Maine & New Hampshire and M. A. Shea circuits. Mr. Quittner told of his father's buying difficulties which ended in an anti-trust action being filed against Paramount in the late 1920's. Paramount won that case.

LOEW PROFIT SHARING CONTRACTS RATIFIED

Resolution Made to Approve Plan Is Carried by Vote of 1,080,883 Shares to 5,390

Profit sharing contracts for 11 executives of Loew's, Inc., were ratified overwhelmingly in New York Tuesday at a two and a half hour stockholders' meeting. A resolution to approve the plan was carried by a vote of 1,080,883 shares for and 5,390 against.

David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer of the company, told the 150 in attendance that the 11 contracts and the present employment contract held by Nicholas M. Schenck, president, have an aggregate annual value of $4,788,000 in salaries and percentages of the net profit.

The new contracts cover periods of from four to seven years, starting Jan. 1, 1939, and they go to Louis B. Mayer, J. Robert Rubin, Al Lichtman, Edgar J. Mannix, Sam Katz, Harry Rapf, Bernard H. Hyman, Hunt Stromberg, Lawrence A. Weingarten, Benjamin Thau and Mervyn LeRoy.

12 Directors Reelected

Voicing of criticism of the contracts by a few minority stockholders and the explaining of the terms of the agreements by Loew's executives consumed most of the meeting time. The only other business conducted was the reelection of 12 directors. The directors were to meet Wednesday to elect officers but no changes were expected.

The directors are George N. Armsby, David Bernstein, Isidor Frey, Leopold Friedman, John R. Hazel, Mr. Lichtman, Charles C. Moskowitz, William A. Parker, William A. Phillips, J. Robert Rubin, Mr. Schenck and David Warfield.

Mr. Frey, a member of Loew's legal staff, presided at the session and Leopold Friedman, general counsel, was secretary. Others representing the management were Mr. Rubin and Mr. Bernstein.

While the personal service contracts were attacked by minority stockholders or their attorneys, some of the larger stockholders vigorously urged ratification.

A lone written protest was filed by Carl H. Fowler, attorney, who said he represented Charles M. Drew of Minneapolis, owner of 700 common shares. Mr. Fowler said the contracts were "improvident and extravagant" and warned that the directors and officers of the company and others participating in making them "will be held responsible for injury to the company and the stockholders." Another lawyer pointed out that contracts, when declared improvident in a legal action, have been held by the United States Supreme Court to be illegal.

Bernstein Contract Extended

"If MGM doesn't want the deal, give it to me," Pat Casey declared, speaking in favor of the plan. "I will guarantee I will go out and make more with it than they could."

The contracts were praised by Walter Reade, circuit operator, who termed them "the greatest piece of strategy in the history of the industry."

The profits which will be shared by the 11 executives, formerly went to three men, Mr. Mayer, Mr. Rubin and the late Irving G. Thalberg.

In addition to approving the 11 contracts, the stockholders voted a five-year extension of Mr. Bernstein's personal service contract at his present rate of compensation, $2,000 weekly plus 1½ per cent of the profits.

Mr. LeRoy's present contract, which runs for three years, from the date he reports to the studio, to be no later than March 15th, calls for a weekly salary of $3,500, plus $29,500 quarterly. Beginning Jan. 1, 1939, under the new agreement, he will receive 7/10th of one percent of the profits, this percentage to be no less than his present quarterly compensation.

The Other Contracts

The other contracts are:

Louis B. Mayer, executive and managing director of production, contract extended to Dec. 31, 1942, at $3,000 weekly, plus 6.77 per cent of the profits;

Al. Lichtman, executive, contract extended to Dec. 31, 1945, at $3,000 weekly, plus 1.05 per cent of the profits;

J. Robert Rubin, executive, extended to Dec. 31, 1943, $2,000 weekly, plus 1.4 per cent of the profits and additional compensation at the termination of employment, and the stock option agreement made Dec. 15, 1932, is unaffected;

Edgar J. Mannix, production executive and supervisor, extended to Dec. 31, 1945, $3,000 weekly including expenses, plus 1.4 per cent of the profits;

Sam Katz, executive and production supervisor, extended to Dec. 31, 1945, $3,000 weekly, plus 1.4 per cent of the profits;

Harry Rapf, production supervisor, contract extended to April 8, 1943, $2,200 weekly, plus 35/100th of one per cent of the profits;

Bernard H. Hyman, production supervisor, extended to Dec. 31, 1945, $3,250 weekly, plus 7/10th of one per cent of the profits;

Hunt Stromberg, production supervisor, extended to Dec. 5, 1944, $5,000 weekly, plus 1.05 per cent of the profits, with the provision that his present bonus of $15,000 for each picture over eight produced by him in any one year is canceled, effective Jan. 1, 1939;

Lawrence A. Weingarten, production supervisor, extended to Dec. 30, 1943, at $3,250 weekly, plus 35/100th of one per cent of the profits;

Benjamin Thau, executive, extended to Dec. 31, 1945, $1,750 weekly, plus 7/10th of one per cent of the profits.

Net Profit Decreases

A decrease of $540,564 in net profit for the 12 weeks ending November 25, 1937, as compared to a similar quarter in 1936, was reported Thursday by Loew's, Inc. Net profit for the 1937 quarter was $2,917,409 as against $3,457,973 in 1936.

The profit is equivalent to $21.34 per share on preferred stock and $1.69 on the average common stock. The figures compare with $25.29 and $2.14 respectively, for the 12 weeks ended November 19, 1936.

The company's share of operating profit after providing for subsidiaries' preferred dividends was $4,368,850 as compared with $5,039,020 in the 1936 quarter. Depreciation and taxes, without provision for surtaxes on undistributed profits, amounted to $1,451,441 as compared to $1,581,047 in 1936. The net profit also was figured without provision for surtaxes on undistributed profits.

The board of directors last week voted the regular quarterly dividend of $1.52 on the preferred stock, payable February 15th to holders of record on January 29th.

A. H. Blank, head of Tri-States Theatre Circuit, and Mrs. Blank sailed from San Francisco Sunday for Honolulu.

MANAGER AND PRESS WIN PARKING SPACE

When the parking problem of the Millburn theatre at Millburn, N. J., was made all the more acute by action of the Merchants Association which further restricted parking limits, Louis Stein, manager of the theatre, suggested at township meetings that the groups get together on a proposal to establish a central public parking space, thus attracting patronage, satisfying shoppers and taking workers off the relief roles by making it a WPA project.

As a result, of cooperative effort of Mr. Stein and the Millburn and Short Hills Item, an allocation of $11,359 was obtained from Washington to combine with the township's share of $2,331 in grading and surfacing and fencing in a plot owned by the township.

Four Speed Up Sales Campaigns

Columbia Pictures, RKO Radio, United Artists and Warner-First National this week reported progress on their mid-seasonal sales drives.

Columbia will hold the first of its mid-winter divisional meetings in Cleveland February 5th at the Hotel Statler. Abe Montague, general sales manager, will preside and Rube Jackter, chairman of the drive, Lou Weinberg, Louis Astor and Max Weisfeldt will be present from the home office.

Walter Branson, captain for the United States and Canada of the RKO Ned Depinet drive, addressed the staff of the San Francisco branch office on Tuesday. He is accompanied by Harry Gittleson on his tour which began in New Haven January 6th.

A. W. Smith, Jr., general sales manager for United Artists, said this week that the returns for the first two weeks of the Better Business Drive, launched on January 2nd, definitely indicate that the next two months will be the "greatest in the history of the company" in point of sales and film rentals.

A budget of $500,000 has been set for national advertising on a group of Warner Brothers pictures to be released during the Sears Drive now underway. Charles Einfeld, the company's advertising and publicity chief, made the announcement after his arrival in New York from conferences at the Burbank studios with Harry M. Warner, Jack L. Warner, Hal Wallis and Gradwell Sears.

Derr Honored at Lunch

E. B. Derr, producer, was guest of honor at a luncheon given by P. S. Harrison at Gallagher's Restaurant, New York, Tuesday after a screening of "My Old Kentucky Home," which is distributed by Monogram.

Twentieth Century-Fox is planning to build new exchange building in six cities, New Orleans, Albany, Seattle, Indianapolis, Milwaukee and Cincinnatti.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Eight Start

Current aspects of the production graph give no one in Hollywood much incentive to cheer. As the days of the year are short, in the number of daylight hours, so are shooting schedules short in that state that means the greatest number of paychecks for the greatest number of persons. Rumors are that things are going to pick up shortly, yet there's little activity. The total number of feature productions in work scales about thirty. To make that possible, eight were started in the past week and six were completed.

"Kentucky Moonshine" began at Twentieth Century - Fox. Presence of the Ritz Brothers in the cast establishes the film as a comedy. The funsters will be assisted principally by Marjorie Weaver and Tony Martin. "Four Men and a Prayer" also received the starting signal. It will present Loretta Young, George Sanders, Richard Green and David Niven.

Two at Warners

Two productions were started at Warners. "Torchy Blaine in Panama" will have Lola Lane and Paul Kelly in the leading roles. Leading players in "White Banners," to be a Cosmopolitan production, are Fay Wray, Claude Rains and Bonita Granville.

Republic started "Sidewalks of New York." The cast is headed by Lew Ayers, Helen Mack, Alison Skipworth and Alice White.

With Charles Winninger, Alice Brady, Tom Brown, Jed Prouty and Donald Meek in the leading roles, Universal started "Goodbye Broadway."

For Columbia distribution, Larry Darmour started "Flight into Nowhere." Jack Holt is starred with Jacqueline Wells and Dick Purcell.

Lou Gehrig, noted baseball player, will make his debut as a professional film player in Sol Lesser's "Rawhide." Smith Ballew and Evalyn Knapp will be seen, too.

Annabella Debut

Three pictures were moved from the active production line at Twentieth Century - Fox. Without question "The Baroness and the Butler" is the most important. It will introduce Darryl Zanuck's French star, Annabella, in the company of William Powell, Gregory Ratoff, Helen Westley, Joseph Schildkraut, Henry Stephenson, J. Edward Bromberg and Nigel Bruce. "Walking Down Broadway," originally titled "Six Girls," also was finished. Numbered in the cast are Claire Trevor, Phyllis Brooks, Dixie Dunbar, Leah Ray, Lynn Bari, Jayne Regan, Michael Whalen, Thomas Beck, Douglas Fowley, Robert Lowery and William Benedict. Because it stars Jane Withers, the third picture, "Gypsy," is also important. The supporting cast lists Rochelle Hudson, Robert Wilcox, Borrah Minnevitch and his gang, and Steffi Duna.

Republic finished "Hollywood Stadium." Neil Hamilton and Evelyn Venable are the featured players.

"Outlaws of Big Bend" was finished at Columbia. The film will star Charles Starrett and Iris Meredith.

The Mauch Twins, Billy and Bobby, aided by their familiar company of juveniles, and Gene and Katherine Lockhart, Dick Purcell and Hugh O'Connell, completed "Penrod's Double Trouble" for Warner's.

N. Y. BUILDERS PLEASE COPY

White, blue, red, high, long and gaudy is the tight board fence thrown around the corner of Vine street and Sunset boulevard, Hollywood, where workmen are pushing up the NBC temple whence will emanate that company's starry broadcasts one fine day, but not for concealment of operations. Indeed not. Around the top in cut out letters is told the story of what's going on inside. And into the rounded juncture of the Vine and Sunset surfaces has been sunken, behind glass, a miniature of the temple in process of fabrication.

More—and this is the Hollywood touch—framed, glassed, recessed windows, shoulder high and plenty wide, invite passers-by on either Sunset or Vine to stop for a look-see at the hardy workmen happily at toil within. The windows get a steady play. Traffic is not impeded. Everybody finds out what's going on without staying all day to find out.

What Price 10%

For some unknown reason, Thursday night is agents' night at the previews. There may be showings every other night in the week, but invariably the ten percenters turn out en masse that evening. The big ones or the henchmen of the big ones who have lots of clients, the medium-sized ones who have a few sundry folk on their lists, the little ones who haven't much more than an abundance of hopes, a camel-hair coat, the inevitable big cigar, and a memory that seems to function only on Thursday night, all are there.

The other night, while waiting to see what had been done about "Arsene Lupin Returns," we fell to talking with a writer who, as it happens, is currently represented by one of the third group of agents. The writer has been particularly fortunate of late. All that was left of two of his stories when they reached the screen was the title. His name, absent from screen credits, was considered by him a lucky break.

Yet, in order to attain his status as the best-dressed man on the dole, he would like to work a bit now and then. So he hailed his agent.

There was considerable talk, practically all of it coming from the agent, which went something like this:

"Jack, are you going to be in the dough, are you going to be in the dough! I was over to see So-and-So at Such-and-Such a studio and has he got something right up your alley! But he only offered $700 a week on a six-weeks contract and if the big So-and-So thinks he can get away with that on us he's crazy. You wouldn't work for 700 bucks a week, would you? I know you wouldn't. Couldn't afford to have anyone with me who took that kind of chicken-feed. I'll knock that guy over for $1,250—we'll get a thousand a week anyway—and a six-months contract to boot. Just leave it to me and don't worry." With a "Hi, Jake, wait a second," to someone buried in the mob, he dashed off.

"Seven hundred a week," groaned the writer. "I'd go to work tomorrow for fifty a week."

End of the Trail

One of last week's assignments concerned a gentleman who, in some segments of the public prints, was reported about to put several million dollars into pictures. We asked another man, one who we thought might know, and he told us in words reminiscent of the late Frank Wilstach that it sounded like a lot of "poppycockery," and, furthermore, that he didn't think there was anybody in California with that many cash millions for any purpose, not to mention putting it into pictures.

Then we happened to remember that the man was quite interested in watching the horses run at Santa Anita.

Passing down the line, looking at registrations, we could hear the caller spotting the steeds in the race underway. And then, faintly, as we walked along, we could hear such strange lingo as "Fo' bucks open . . . there's six bits . . . I'll take a dollar . . . lay it down, boys . . . comin' out . . . you is faded . .two bits he does," and then the clacking of well-shaken dice.

There they were, six or eight chauffeurs, black, white and yellow. We never found out about the man and his millions.

Dimes in the shadow of millions.

HODE TELLS AD MEN TRADE FOLLOWS FILMS

Cites Effects New Vogues in Films Have Upon Retailers and Manufacturers

The influence of motion pictures in creating and changing buying trends was defined to members of the Advertising Club in New York City Friday when Hal Hode, home office executive of Columbia Pictures, spoke on "Trade Follows the Films," and cited specific cases in which films were credited with affecting the market for products.

Chief among the examples mentioned by Mr. Hode were two conditions which, he said, were created by the release of the picture "It Happened One Night." Mr. Hode reminded his audience that the film dealt with the adventures of Claudette Colbert and Clark Gable while on an overnight bus trip.

"Shortly after the picture was released," Mr. Hode declared, "the largest bus company in the country reported a 40 per cent increase in passenger traffic. Every woman in the country, it seemed, wanted to meet a Clark Gable on a bus trip."

But No Undershirt

But, he pointed out, the effect on other industries is not always in the same direction. "It Happened One Night," he said, had a disastrous effect on knit wear manufacturers. In one sequence, he recalled Mr. Gable was seen removing his shirt and he was not wearing an undershirt.

The sale of athletic shirts dropped off to such an extent the manufacturers went to Columbia officials and demanded that the scene be deleted, he said.

"When we refused," Mr. Hode said, "pressure was brought to bear through the Hays office (Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America of which Will H. Hays is president) and when this move failed the labor unions came to us and demanded that we take out the scene because workers were being thrown out of jobs."

Visualizing himself as the head of a large corporation, Mr. Hode said: "I'd have a representative on the West Coast and his job would be to attend all the unannounced previews that are held there. I'd know in advance of any picture or scene that would affect my business."

Zipper Housecoats

As an example of manufacturers' failure to recognize a market for a product before the public started demanding it, Mr. Hode pointed out that all department stores, during the recent holiday season, featured women's housecoats with a zipper front. But, he said, the first zipper front housecoat was designed on the Columbia lot three years ago.

Those in the motion picture industry realized many years ago that things depicted on the screen are demanded by the public, Mr. Hode said. He recalled that several years ago bathtubs were manufactured for utility with no regard for beauty. The change from the old fashioned bathtubs to those of today was credited by Mr. Hode to Cecil B. DeMille. Mr. Hode also said Mr. DeMille started the vogue for swimming pools on estates.

Mary Pickford's entrance into films was a boon for several industries, he said. He pointed out that Miss Pickford's blond curls prompted thousands of women, even those with straight black hair, to turn to blond tresses. The result, he added, was an increase in demand for peroxide and ammonia.

Floppy hats and dresses with frills went with the curls, he continued, and milliners and dressmakers received heavy orders.

Bobbed Hair and Colleen Moore

Mr. Hode credited Colleen Moore with starting the bobbed hair craze among women and this, he pointed out, brought business to beauticians.

About ten years ago, he continued, Columbia wanted to exploit a picture but hesitated at a large expenditure of money. The company sought the assistance of radio manufacturer and had pictures taken of a star using the radio. Radio sales increased enormously and the picture was a hit, he added.

Mr. Hode called attention to the suggestion of automobile safety engineers that the engines of automobiles be placed in the rear instead of in the front. Manufacturers are unwilling to make the radical change, he said, because they have learned from experience that the public does not like revolutionary changes.

"But," he continued, "the thing could be put over in six months. The only thing necessary would be to have a half dozen film stars drive rear engine automobiles for a short time."

New Uraguay Ban Protested by U.S.

The State Department at Washington, at the request of large film companies, has entered a protest against the law scheduled to go into effect February 2 in Uruguay limiting importation of prints to seven a month with a total gross value of $500. This amount, it is specified, will include trailers and accessories.

Foreign department heads expressed fear that the drastic regulations would dry up the country as a source of revenue. There are 100 theatres in Uruguay.

It is estimated that on the basis of the statutory valuation of the import prints, the law would curtail distribution in that country by almost 50 per cent. The act is a currency restriction measure and applies to a number of commodities. Uruguay finds itself in the same exchange position as Brazil and several other South American countries, as well as Germany, Italy and Japan, from which it is virtually impossible to withdraw money.

Shea Acquires Three

The Shea circuit has acquired the Ohio and Lion theatres, Bellevue, Ohio, and the Harkness theatre, at Clyde, Ohio. All three houses were purchased from Louise Stoll.

Monogram Sets 42 for Season

Monogram will schedule 42 features for 1938-'39, the same as the current season, Edward A. Golden, sales manager, said Monday in New York. Selling will start early in April, following a national sales convention or regional meetings late in March. Mr. Golden said that product commitments have been maintained on schedule and that deliveries on the program will be completed July 1st.

W. Ray Johnston, president, is now in Hollywood conferring with Scott R. Dunlap, production head, on the new program.

The company has two films currently in production and two in the cutting room. In the cutting room are "Port of Missing Girls," featuring Judith Allen, Betty Compson and Milburn Stone, and "Where the West Begins," Jack Randall's fourth western for the company. "Ridin' Gent," the second film in the series starring Tim McCoy, and "Painted Trail," with Tom Keene, are in work.

The first annual stockholders' meeting of the new Monogram Pictures Corporation will be held in New York, March 22nd. Leon Fromkess has been elected treasurer of the company.

Mel Hulling, former division manager on the coast for Grand National, has joined Monogram and has taken a part interest in the Pacific Coast franchise held by Howard Stubbins and Roy Olmstead. He will make San Francisco his headquarters.

Screen Book, fan magazine, of the Fawcett Publications group with a circulation said to be 350,000, through a tieup with Monogram, is sponsoring a nationwide search for talent contest, the winner to be known as "Miss Monogram." The winners will be announced in the May issue.

The company has completed arrangements with the Sam Fox Music Publishing Company to publish songs featured in the Jack Randall series of musical westerns.

Hold Luncheon For Moskowitz

C. C. Moskowitz, vice-president of Loew's, Inc., was tendered a luncheon last Thursday at the Hotel Astor, New York, by executives of the company in observance of Mr. Moskowitz's 25 years with Loew's.

The guests wore white carnations, in honor of Mr. Moskowitz, because it is his custom to wear the flower daily. The length of service of those present, some 22 executives connected with Loew's, or predecessor companies, totaled 454 years.

In addition to Mr. Moskowitz, they are: David Bernstein, 33 years; Fred Mitchell, 32; Samuel Meinhold, 33; Joseph R. Vogel, 29; Eddie Mannix, 26 (14 years on the coast); J. T. Mills, 25; Marvin Schenck, 26; Charles Sonin, 24; J. Robert Rubin, 23; Harry Moskowitz, 21; Dave Blum, 19; H. J. Cleary, 18; Harry Bernstein, 17; Judge Isador Frey, 18; Si Seadler, 13; Howard Strickling, 14; Dolph Schaddler, 12; Eddie Saunders, 18; Ernest Emerling, 18; Oscar A. Doob, 8, and Herbert Pettey, of Station WHN, two years.

Goodbye Broadway

Comedy

The cast merits more than the usual amount of exhibitor consideration. Alice Brady scored what many commentators elect to call a "personal triumph," as "Mrs. O'Leary" in "In Old Chicago." Tom Brown, who was not so much in the eyes of the audience in that picture as he was in its hearts, will also be seen in "Goodbye Broadway." So will Charles Winninger, long known on the stage, the "Cap'n Andy" of the onetime popular broadcast and of the picture, "Showboat." Presently he is in "Every Day's a Holiday." Jed Prouty, of "The Jones Family," will be there, as will the comedians Donald Meek, Frank Jenks and Willie Best. Other entertainers also will be seen.

As screen mechanics will have it, the story to be told in "Goodbye Broadway" will have a definitely bucolic savor. In other words, it is small town stuff, which, because of its human interest content, should have an appeal to many spectators no matter how far away from the sound of the cowbell and the clashing of milk cans they may live. It will endeavor to prove, in ways that have been accepted as entertaining by the masses more than they have been actually demonstrated by the savants, that the forces of vice and greed which may appear to triumph momentarily haven't a chance at all when they come into conflict with the good old fashioned virtues of honesty and loyalty, in a story of a couple of broken down vaudeville artists outwitting a grasping skinflint.

Gypsy

Comedy

When Lew Chatham and Sid Holland, Quigley Trophy winning showmen, were out here they wanted to meet everyone they could. Most of all they wanted to meet and be photographed with Jane Withers. At the last Jane Withers preview we attended the audience whooped and hollered the moment her name came on the screen. Subsequently Miss Withers was acclaimed by the country's exhibitors as the sixth most important box office name of 1937. The consistent upward trend of her popularity should be, therefore, the keystone of exploitation of any of her immediate films. Paradoxically, in contemporary exploitation reasoning, Miss Withers won her championship honors despite the fact that she never had appeared in other than what is described in other quarters as a Class B picture.

This episode in the career of the star, her first appearance since elevation to peerage in filmdom, appears to be a happy combination of laughter, music and romance. She is one who finds herself a member of a gypsy caravan, the gypsies being Borrah Minnevitch and his Gang, traveling the picturesque and exciting open road. She is the center of all that happens, even to the point of playing cupid.

The story which features princess Jane is an original screenplay by Robert Ellis and Helen Logan, both, like the star, heretofore associated with those socalled "Class B" productions, and it is being directed by H. Bruce Humberstone.

In addition to Miss Withers, Minnevitch and his harmonica players, it will present Rochelle Hudson, Robert Wilcox, Steffi Dunna, Katherine Alexander, Chester Clute, Paul Stanton, Frank Reicher, Kathleen Burke, Myra Marsh, Ed Gargan and Wilfred Lucas.

Release date: Early in March, 1938.

Condemned Women

(RKO-Radio)

Melodrama and Romance

The regeneration of an embittered woman convict, effected by a doctor who so firmly believes her story that he is willing to imperil his career to marry her, and the woman's subsequent sacrifices to avoid disgracing him, comprise the dual theme of the prison melodrama. Many pictures have treated life behind the walls in men's penitentiaries. It is only rarely that the tragedies of women prisoners have been the subject of motion picture attention. With all due respect to the importance of cast names, that departure looms as the outstanding attention provoking asset.

For the picture's production class and grade, the matter of names has been given due attention. Sally Eilers, impressive in "Without Orders" and "Danger Patrol," has the title role, and Louis Hayward, last seen for RKO-Radio in "The Woman I Love" and "Midnight Intruder," is featured with her. A third important personality is Anne Shirley, who grew up from her little girl roles of the "Anne of Green Gables" sort of pictures to recognition as an accomplished artiste in "Stella Dallas." Other players, all of whom at one time or another figure prominently in the action, are Esther Dale, Leona Roberts, Netta Packer, Frank M. Thomas, Richard Bond, Rita LaRoy and Edythe Elliott.

The picture, which comes under Robert Sisk's production guidance, is based on an original screen story written by Lionel Houser, whose credits include "Night Spot," "Border Cafe" and "Let Them Live." Mr. Sisk chose as director Lew Landers, maker of "Crashing Hollywood," "Danger Patrol" and "Flight from Glory."

Dangerous to Know

(Paramount)

Melodrama

Here, in "Dangerous to Know," are to be related the details of the inside workings of a political machine which is run by a master racketeer. Such a subject is not new. Most audiences are familiar with the plot, the blending and clashing of its romance, melodrama, intrigue, deception, comedy, heroism, dastardliness and sacrifice. Considered panoramically, "Dangerous to Know" (which by the way is a title of no mean exploitation value), will be composed of the wellknown materials.

To be seen are the sinister character, forceful, ruthless and domineering; the cop who can't be bought, the boy and girl who get caught in the gangster's plotting because, of course, he wants the girl and the exotic girl character, who somehow saves the boy and girl from a fate worse than death, and, as she in approved melodramatic style eliminates herself, so fixes things that her lord and master no longer can defy the law with impunity.

In this instance is a pictorial conception of a play written by Edgar Wallace. With elaborations William R. Lipman and Horace McCoy transcribed Mr. Wallace's imaginations and possibly some figments of fact to screen play form. The director, Robert Florey, has specialized in the manufacture of melodramatic pictures.

The film will present Akim Tamiroff, now in "Buccaneer," as the master gangster; Anna May Wong, his confidante, who becomes an avenging angel; glamorous Gail Patrick as the girl and Harvey Stephens as the boy who felt the steel of Tamiroff's sinister nature. The officer is Lloyd Nolan. Other players to be seen are Porter Hall, Anthony Quinn and Roscoe Karns.

Comedy Romance

Comedy will be concentrated on in this stormy romance of two young persons whose identities are unknown to each other. A rich boy goes to work as a milkman in order to win a bet from his father. He meets a girl whose family's financial affluence has ebbed, but believes the society miss is a housemaid. They fall in love, only to have their romantic idyll complicated by another man. A situation that looks like kidnaping ensues, as does the inevitable chase with police cars and milk wagons chasing each other all over town and besieging a dairy, before the boy wins the bet which enables him to become an ichthyologist and take off for the South Sea with the girl by his side.

The author of the original is Willoughby Spears, of the RKO-Radio studio publicity department. Bert Granet, earlier credited with "Quick Money" and "Meet the Missus," did the screenplay. The director, Ben Holmes, numbers among his credits "There Goes My Girl," "Too Many Wives" and "The Plot Thickens," as well as a Wheeler and Woolsey feature or two.

For name values producer Robert Sisk chose the studio's feminine find, Joan Fontaine, and ex-Notre Dame football player Allen Lane, who gained screen experience in "Having Wonderful Time" and "Fifty Roads to Town," among other films. Hedda Hopper, George Irving, William Brisbane, Billy Gilbert, Vicki Lester, Cecil Kellaway, Hilda Vaughn, Eddie Gribbon, Frank M. Thomas and Solly Ward were assigned to supporting roles.

LETTERS FROM READERS

AN EDITOR COMPLIMENTS A THEATRE MANAGER

To the Editor of the Herald:

We are aware that the motion picture industry is sincerely interested in friendly press relations and, therefore, we take pleasure in calling to your attention the policy of Mr. W. G. Serrao, manager of Dipson's Avenue theatre, Brackenridge, Pa.

Less than one year ago, Mr. Serrao came into our community as manager of the new Dipson theatre. The structure had just been erected and it was officially opened on Labor Day, just 70 days after construction was started. Being a new house in a community where other theatre enterprises had failed, it was natural that the failure of the new theatre would be widely predicted.

Mr. Serrao immediately set to work building friendship for the theatre. A theatre name contest was conducted in our paper and the people selected the name, "Avenue."

A cooperative page of greetings from community merchants was so oversold that all of the ads could not run on the opening day.

Mr. Serrao makes frequent, friendly calls at our offices and attempts to see the matter of publicity through the eyes of a newspaperman rather than strictly from the viewpoint of the theatre manager.

We appreciate Mr. Serrao's attitude and friendship and because of his broad understanding of the matter we are glad to cooperate with him to the fullest extent. With such management it is needless for us to tell you that the Avenue theatre is a real success and from the start has been one of the most popular theatres in our community.

We believe the success of the Avenue theatre can be directly attributed to the policy of Mr. Serrao and we believe that such an attitude on his part goes far toward cementing friendly relations with a theatre's outlets for advertising and publicity and creates goodwill for the entire motion picture industry.—George D. Stuart, Editor, The Valley Daily News, Tarentum, Pa.

ASKS RETURN TO FAITH IN QUALITY PICTURES

To the Editor of the Herald:

In a recent issue was a report from Atlanta, Ga., about an article in one of the big dailies, expressing disgust with the apparent monopoly of radio time by moving picture talent, endorsing or ballyhooing what to drink, smoke, eat, wear and repeating the songs and gags in the pictures they may have had a part in the making, and warning that the continuous repetition spoiled the desire to see the particular show at the local theatre. But here is where many of the great and near great get it in the neck, as that particular article stated: after listening to many of the people over the radio, they appeared far less attractive or capable than when seen and heard in pictures, under the guidance of wise direction that left a good impression.

In my own city this very week a very prominent business man expressed himself in almost the same way.

I have listened to two radio programs in a week that featured movie stars. Some of the chatter was rather risque, some actually smutty, one of the programs met public disapproval over the air and in the press the following day.

In my local paper there is undeniable proof that these stars have lost prestige with countless thousands.

It is my honest opinion that the producers are playing with "dynamite" in their direct radio activity and by turning film talent loose to appear in the various programs. It reminds me of the fable of the "Spider and the Fly." The producer is going to buzz around until he gets his wings tangled up in the broadcasters' web of local, national and international network, and the process of gaining freedom is likely to be the undoing of some producers and their stars also.

Too much of anything means a lower price all over the world and with the radio channels in the varied wave lengths going full blast nearly every minute in every 24 hours, it certainly looks like it would not take a particularly smart producer or star to understand how soon and how easy it would be to lower the market value of their product, their talents.

Something for nothing is usually worth just about that and no more.

Looks as though the producer is "two timing" the exhibitor, by selling a star product at a fancy price and then making a deal with the radio to sell that same star value to broadcasters for plugging soaps, smokes, food products and what have you.

The radio, with the aid of producer and star, has contributed much to the exhibitors' lower grosses. In addition to that "pain in the neck" it is my honest opinion that there are other fundamental reasons.

Some have estimated that three-fourths of all the theatres in the United States have adopted a double-feature policy. Some even add a first run midnight pre-vue as extra bait. Some add a "Country Store" or various other free merchandise inducements. "The Show" as the key attraction has been subordinated to the varied stunts that have the color and flavor of a Chinese game.

I am ready to admit that the producers turn out some product that should never have been made or released. Many of them turn out features that rate third place on a triple program. Many (entirely too many) are made deliberately for double-feature programs, and its getting to be a habit to set "quantity" as the year's quota, whereas "quality" in story, acting and production should be the goal. There are entirely too many "quickies," too many of those 52, 56, 59 and 65 minute features. Turn to the Release Chart of the Herald and you will be surprised how often they appear on the list of the major producers. United Artists is due credit for giving its features the footage they deserve and it has made a genuine effort to put "quality" into product, even though some of it may have failed to reach the box office expectancy.

I wish that I had the faculty of putting in print a story about this business and its unlimited possibilities. My faith and my vision of it have led me through the years to a reward that exceeded my expectations. I have made money, but there is another reward in this game of life. That is in my daily contact with men, women and children of the communities I serve, entertaining them, working with them in social and civic life, helping them to visualize and see the value of the better and nobler things in life while being entertained.

Let producers rediscover the formula for turning out good entertainment at reasonable cost (junk the million dollar elephants). Let exhibitors get back in the "movie game" and sell the show as it deserves to be sold.

The crying need is for leadership from producers, distributors, circuit operators and those in key situations, with millions invested.

singer and an improved actress in "Love and Hisses," Don Ameche, who gave a really worthy performance in "In Old Chicago," and Robert Cummings, who has been doing all right for himself from "I Met Him in Paris" to "Paradise for Three." In diverse and sundry supporting roles will be presented comic Bert Lahr and comic Joan Davis, Tala Birell, Willie Collier, Sr., Paul Hurst, Jayne Regan, Zeffie Tilbury and Harry Holman.

The action of "Josette" takes place 'way down south in New Orleans where Ameche and Young, in the roles of brothers, try to save Collier, as their father, from the wiles of a frisky French actress fresh from Paris. The situation becomes complicated, in ways promising to be amusing and tuneful, when they, themselves, fall in love with the glamorous entertainer. Initially no one pays much attention to a little wardrobe mistress who sings in the church choir, but Miss Simon becomes quite important in the story ere its conclusion.

The production has an involved ancestry. Used were a story by Ladislaus Vadnai and its stage version by Paul Frank and George Fraser, all of which were combined in a script which James Edward Grant did. Music and lyrics were supplied by Sam Pokrass and Ted Kohler. As director, Allan Dwan, who made "Heidi," "One Mile from Heaven" and "That I May Live," is endeavoring to blend all the diverse story, production and personnel properties up to the requirements of Darryl Zanuck, executive producer.

MPTOA Drops Plans to Hold Spring Meeting

Foremost among developments in exhibitor organizations this week was abandonment of plans by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for holding an annual convention in the Spring, the election of officers by the British Columbia Theatres Association, the mid-winter convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and the designation of Chattanooga as the scene of the annual convention of the Southeastern Theatre Owners' Association.

The MPTOA had planned to hold its meeting in March, the usual time, and Chicago had been favored, due to the fact that the south and California have had the conventions for the last five years. Although some officials of the company believe the organization may have a fall convention, a definite decision on this has not been reached.

A. Hugo Ray, owner of the Beacon Theatre, Vancouver, was chosen president of the BC Theatres Association. George McEwen was elected vice-president, and Amy Scriven, secretary-treasurer. Directors are A. C. Blaine, Ray Castle, R. W. McCartie, Frank Gow, Hector Quagliotti-Romano and J. Howard Boothe, retiring president.

A report on the advisability of eliminating double features was submitted by a special committee but no action was taken although the general opinion was in favor of single bills.

The Virginia convention opened Thursday morning. Arrangements for the meeting, at which officers were to be elected, were made by a committee that included J. E. Loth, Hunter Perry and Herman Rubin. Harold Wood, secretary, said there would be no speakers from outside the state.

The invitation to hold the Southeastern Theatre Owners convention in Chattanooga was extended by Sam H. Borisky, vice-president of Independent Theatres, Inc., at a meeting of the association's executive committee in Atlanta. The meeting will be be held in June and approximately 200 delegates are expected to attend.

Sales tax collection of the Oklahoma tax commission, which includes the two percent tax on theatre admissions, in December, 1937, amounted to $900,189, an increase of $12,003 over collections in December, 1936. The commission report showed $186,957 was collected in Oklahoma County in which Oklahoma City is located and $157,574 in Tulsa County in which Tulsa is located, during December, 1937.

For the first six months of the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1937 the consumer's two percent sales tax collections increased $911,321.28 an increase of 19.46%. Figures were $5,593,654.38 for the first six months of the fiscal year compared with $4,682,333.10 for the same period a year ago.

Collections in the Third New York District accounted for nearly one-third of the Treasury's total revenues from the admission tax. Total collections in that district, which covers the Broadway area, were $6,546,147 for the year, of which $5,792,196 was in the form of box office sales taxes.

20th-Fox Preparing Season's Final Ten

Preparations for the final 10 films on the Twentieth Century-Fox line-up are going ahead at the company's Hollywood studio. At present there are seven films before the cameras and the final 10 will be started next month.

The pictures in production are "The Baronee and the Butler," "Kidnapped," "Josette," "Gipsy," "Walking Down Broadway," and "A Trip to Paris." Preparations are going ahead on "Little Miss Broadway," "Four Men and a Prayer," "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "Women Are Dangerous," "Kentucky Moonshine," "Island in the Sky," and "I'd Give a Million." 'Sally, Irene and Mary" and "International Settlement" are now being edited.

The company has shelved $100,000 worth of production on "Charlie Chan at the Ringside." The cast was paid off and dismissed when Warner Oland, the star, walked off the set. It was the 17th Chan production. No reason was given for Oland's action, which is the second of its kind, but it is believed to be of a personal nature.

Canadian Government Approves Music Fees

The schedule of proposed fees for public performance of musical compositions to be collected by the Canadian Performing Rights Society, Ltd., Toronto, during 1938, providing for substantial increases in royalties, has been formally approved by the Copyright Appeal Board of the Dominion Government which was set up in the amendments to the Copyright Act which was passed a year ago.

Theatres which pay a flat annual license fee to the society on a seat basis are not affected by the new schedule but fees from radio broadcasters are increased. Levies expected by the society from this source is listed at $83,081 in the total, as compared with total collections of approximately $71,000 in 1937. The exact nature of the increases for radio performing rights was not disclosed in the official announcement.

Brian Aherne has been signed by Hal Roach to a contract calling for two pictures a year for two years.

FRENCH DISTRIBUTORS, EXHIBITORS UNITED IN PROTEST AGAINST TAX

Industry Strong in Determination to Suspend Operations Unless New Government Modifies Levy Forcing Use of Shows

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

The action of the Syndical Chamber of Distributors in supporting the promise of their officers to join exhibitors in their determination to shut down operations unless revisions are made in the new cinema tax law has effected a common front within the industry in vigorous protest against the levy.

The distributor decision, taken at a general meeting this week, is contingent upon the producers, laboratories and studios joining the exhibitor move but it was indicated at the time of the exhibitor meeting that there was every likelihood that these three groups would join the lockout movement. The new law which is to go into effect February 2nd, reduces the state tax by 25 per cent on film houses which play vaudeville and have orchestras but increases the same tax by 25 per cent on film houses not using vaudeville and orchestras whose monthly receipts exceed $6,700.

The law was proposed in the Chamber of Deputies in December by Joanny Berlioz, Communist Deputy, and protests from the industry and the press, with the exception of the leftist papers, were immediate. The Distributors' Chamber at that time published an official protest which read in part:

"When one knows that on one hand the granted reduction will not in any case lower the rate of state taxes to less than two per cent nor exceed the amount of the salaries paid to the artists and musicians, and that, on the other hand, the collective contracts now in force fix the wages of musicians and artists from 46 francs to 70 francs per performance ($1.50 to $2.30), and that, moreover, the introduction of shows in the cinema may bring about an increase from 33 to 50 per cent on the taxes paid the Society of Authors and Music Composers as 'authors' rights,' one is quickly convinced that cinema exhibitors will not be inclined to bring modification to their exploitation policy and that the expected results will not be obtained. The French Syndical Chamber of Film Distributors cannot, from its own personal point of view, refrain from formulating the most express reservations on the measures considered."

The measure was strongly opposed in speeches by Louis Aubert, a Deputy of the Left Radical party and former chief of Aubert Pictures, during the readings in the Chamber of Deputies. He argued, with the support of the right and center benches, that while it was agreed measures should be taken to reduce the unemployment of musicians the burden should not be thrown upon the film industry which already was suffering from "unbearable" taxation.

The law as originally drafted by M. Berlioz proposed an increase and corresponding decrease of 30 per cent but this was reduced to 25 per cent by the Senate finance committee and the measure finally was passed in that form.

The trade press was particularly vehement in denouncing the tax. Articles appeared calling the measure the doom of the French cinema industry, "quite mad," and an "impossible law," and a "most offensive attack on the free exercise of an industry." Many of the protests expressed in the press and by exhibitors were based on the argument that most of the larger theatres were not built for stage shows and the inauguration of such shows and the employment of orchestras would require extensive and expensive remodeling.

CINEMA TAX CALLED 'TITHE' ON BUSINESS

Louis Aubert, former chief of the French company Aubert Pictures, speaking in the Chamber of Deputies against the discriminatory tax on theatres called it "a tithe to be paid by businessmen, who, in their trade need neither musicians nor vaudeville artists, in order to reabsorb the unemployment of workers who are not in their service."

Continuing in the same vein he asked, "Will you in the same way make a law obliging all French citizens to wear lace made in Calais, or to break what chinaware they now possess and to buy Limoges china, under the pretext that these two trades are in a very bad situation and that most of their workers are unemployed?"

100 Theatres Affected

The law as has been said previously, affects the cinemas making net monthly receipts of at least 200,000 francs ($6,700) of which there are about 50 in Paris, and 50 in the Provinces. For 200,000 francs ($6,700) of monthly net receipts, a Paris exhibitor pays 30,700 francs ($1,024) in state taxes. He pays also 10 percent on the net receipts, in pauper taxes, i.e. 20,000 francs or $670. A 25 percent increase of this state tax will make him pay a supplement of 7,675 francs ($256), a month. For 50 halls, this makes a monthly supplementary tax of $12,800 or a yearly one of $153,600 that the State will collect, representing a corresponding loss to exhibitors and consequently to distributors and producers.

On the other hand, cinemas using orchestras and shows, which, for instance make 200,000 francs ($6,700) net monthly receipts, will pay $256 per month or $64 per week less in taxes. It is clear that will not allow them to afford an orchestra or stage shows. But they will risk having to pay a much higher percentage for authors' copyrights. A cinema using orchestra and stage shows which makes 100,000 francs ($3,350) in monthly net receipts, if in Paris, (will pay 668 francs ($23) a week less in taxes,) and in the Provinces, where the percentage of the State taxes is less by half, $11.50 per week. It must be noted that this reduction will be granted provided it does not bring the state taxes lower than two percent on the net receipts.

"There is no need to hide it," an important member of the board of the exhibitors' association said, "it is on the percentage of the receipts going to the producers that the exhibitors will take the necessary funds to pay the state taxes increase."

"If the state wanted to kill the French Cinema Production, it could not act in a better way."

On January 14th, at a special general meeting of the Exhibitors' association held in Paris to decide what should be done about one thousand exhibitors from Paris and the Provinces were present. The other branches of the cinema industry, producers, distributors, technical industries, also were represented by members of the boards of their respective Syndical Chambers. They were Messrs. Arys and Fernand Vincent, for producers; Louis Metayer, president, and Henri Klarsfeld, vice-president, for distributors, and M. Chollat, for the technical branches.

Raymond Lussiez, president of the exhibitors group presented the arguments against the measure, pointing out the danger of extinction of the industry inherent in it.

Exhibitors Lead Protest

A resolution was voted unanimously that "the whole cinema industry should associate itself with the action of the exhibitors to obtain fiscal equality and the freedom of action and of expression indispensable to the cinema."

Action will proceed as follows:

Negotiations first will be opened with the new Government not only to ask it to make Parliament cancel the law, but also to grant the industry many matters which have been asked and promised for so long. These would include a general reduction of all entertainment taxes, pauper tax and state taxes, a reduction of the license taxes which are much higher for the cinemas than for legitimate theatres, a modification of the exemption minimum for the payment of the taxes, (these exemptions have not been changed for 20 years when the cost of living was six times less than now), and a new arrangement for the calculation of the taxes per week instead of monthly.

If the negotiations with the new Government to obtain these things should fail, the cinema industry would take drastic action. The first act would be the closing of all Paris cinemas with the engagement given by distributors not to furnish any film during the time of the strike to any Paris exhibitor. The only difficulty expected would be in the particular situation of the Pathe and Gaumont circuits as these two companies have been bankrupt for three years and are controlled by the Government. But, except for their newsreels, they are no longer distributors, and since their theatres would not be supplied with films, they would be obliged to close them.

If this is not sufficient to obtain satisfaction, the whole industry is ready to close, besides all French theatres, all the distribution exchanges, all the studios and laboratories.

It is to be hoped that events will not lead up to this point but if satisfaction is not obtained, this is to be expected.

Hope of Repeal Seen

There are some hopes that the matter may be settled favorably, and that, at last, the cinema will obtain its fiscal and economic statute, in the fact that the Senate, which voted in haste the 25 per cent tax not having time to examine seriously the matter, is reported ready to cancel this law.

An the other hand, the trade unions are in favor of the law being retained. The new political events which at present are developing in France make impossible any predictions as to what will happen and when action by the cinema industry will start. But there is something absolutely sure, that the cinema industry will not accept any longer "unreasonable taxation" by the Government and that it is ready at last to do everything to obtain what it wants and needs.

LENGTHY DELAY IN RKO REORGANIZATION

Judge Bondy Irked by Postponements But Grants Adjournment Until Feb. 28th

Although irked by repeated delays, William Bondy, federal judge in New York, this week granted a month's postponement of the initial hearing on the reorganization plan for RKO. While the start of hearings is now set for February 28th, it is expected the proceedings will last several months and then several additional months will pass before a decision is handed down by the court.

Leo Spitz, RKO president, is expected to confer on reorganization matters when he arrives in New York either late this week or early next week. One of the first things Mr. Spitz is expected to do is to designate a successor to Nate Blumberg, who resigned as theatre operating head to become president of Universal. The position has been vacant since the first of the year.

The request for the adjourment until February 28th was made by H. C. Rickaby, attorney for the proponents of the plan, and in reply the court remarked:

"RKO has been reorganizing for five years now. In that time, creditors of the company have died, stockholders have changed and, I suppose, something has happened to the lawyers, too. It seems to me that this reorganiaztion ought to be disposed of soon. If you can't agree among yourselves, perhaps you ought to let matters take their own course."

Court Tilt With Attorney

Mr. Rickaby interrupted to inform the court that there are "some things" which remain to be done.

"So if this reorganization isn't completed this year," the judge retorted, "it will be the court's fault, I suppose."

No certainty was expressed by the reorganizers that they will be prepared to proceed with the hearings on the adjourned date. Judge Bondy set the hearing for 4 P. M. and, for this reason, it is not expected much will be accomplished on the first day even if another adjournment is not requested.

Holdings Change Hands

Atlas Corporation and Lehman Brothers last week acquired one-twelfth of RCA's holdings of RKO stock and debentures for $500,000 cash, automatically extending to June 30th the group's option to acquire the balance of RCA's interest in RKO.

The sale brought the Atlas-Lehman's holdings to 656,108 shares of common stock and $5,301,104 face amount of RKO debentures, representing a cash investment of $5,500,000. The RCA holdings were reduced by the sale to 555,254 shares of common and $4,485,550 face amount of debentures.

Ned E. Depinet, vice-president and distribution head of RKO; Jules Levy, general sales manager, and S. Barret McCormick, advertising and publicity director, planned to leave New York for the Coast within the next week to confer with Mr. Spitz on product and sales matters, but because of Mr. Spitz's visit to New York they are not expected to make the trip.

B&K Emphasizes Newness of Films

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

Considerable emphasis is being given to the newness of films playing in Chicago's Loop theatres. This is noticeable in the newspaper advertising of the Balaban & Katz circuit, which operates the Chicago, Oriental, United Artists, Roosevelt, Apollo and Garrick theatres.

In the Loop this week the Chicago theatre is playing "Buccaneer," a Paramount picture which is advertised as being "the first showing in the country at popular prices—with a stage show."

At the Oriental theatre the film attraction is "Penitentiary," advertised as a World Premiere. Another picture playing the Loop is "Hurricane," and here the advertising points out that Chicagoans are too smart to want pictures at roadshow prices when they can wait but a few weeks and get them at popular prices.

Balaban Cites Experiences

The roadshowing of "In Old Chicago" here is not in line with the B. & K. policy. This circuit made every move to get the film released at popular prices, feeling that the engagement would be more profitable for all concerned. John Balaban, head of B. & K., pointed out to this reporter that roadshowing of films in Chicago in most cases had not worked out to advantage. It was this experience, Mr. Balaban said, that caused B. & K. to ask that "In Old Chicago" be released here in the regular manner rather than as a roadshow.

"Happy Landing," the Sonja Henie film, has been booked for the Roosevelt theatre starting January 29th, one day after national release. This booking, B. & K. executives point out, is in line with their plans to give Chicagoans the best pictures as soon as they are released.

Percentage Showings at Oriental

Statements that the Oriental theatre played films only on flat rentals were denied by B. & K. executives, who declared that product from various companies had been booked into the Oriental on a percentage basis and that other bookings of that nature would be worked out when occasion demanded.

"Wells Fargo" at the Apollo for its fourth Loop week sets some sort of record, as the film played two weeks at the Chicago and one week at the Oriental.

Slated to follow "Marihuana" at the Garrick is the Monogram picture "Boy of the Streets," and at the Apollo following "Wells Fargo" will be the roadshowing of "In Old Chicago."

"Buccaneer" at the Chicago did such outstanding business over the weekend that the picture probably will be held for two and possibly three weeks.

132 ASCAP SONGS USED 2,237,929 TIMES

An article in the December issue of the ASCAP Journal, house organ of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, states that 132 songs in the repertoire of the Society were performed 2,237,929 times in 1936 over the principal radio networks. This contrasts with the performance record of 1935, which showed 85 songs performed 10,000 or more times for a total of 1,255,269 performances.

The leading song of 1936 according to the article was "Did I Remember" by Walter Donaldson and Harold Adamson, published by Leo Feist, Inc., from the motion picture "Suzy," which was performed 30,442 times from June 13th, 1936, to the end of the year.

The second song, "Melody From the Sky" by Sidney D. Mitchell and Louis Alter, published by Famous Music, Inc. from the motion picture "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," rolled up 29,425 credits from January 1st, 1936.

The leading "popular" song with no motion picture or stage background was, according to the article, "Is It True What They Say About Dixie" by Gerald Marks, Irving Caesar and Sammy Lerner, published by Irving Caesar, Inc., which was performed 29,346 times beginning February 3rd, 1936.

Trans-Lux Opens Seventh Theatre

The first step in a contemplated expansion move to construct Trans-Lux theatres in the large cities was taken by the corporation Friday night when it opened a new house at 52nd Street and Lexington Avenue, New York. The company now has five New York houses and one each in Washington and Philadelphia.

Work is under way toward transforming the Hub Theatre, Boston, into a Trans-Lux house and sites for additional theatres in Chicago, Cleveland and San Francisco are under consideration. Plans for each new house are considered separately, said the New York headquarters, denying a report that the board of directors recently authorized the building of 25 houses in 1938.

Newsreel Theatres, Inc., also has a program of expansion under consideration. The company will open a new house, its fourth, at Broadway and 72nd Street, New York, this spring and, in addition, is planning a fifth house to be located in downtown Manhattan. G. E. Rudd, general manager of the corporation, said the two houses are the only ones being considered "at present."

A new group, headed by Stanley Heller, New York broker, and Joseph Steiner, formerly associated with American Tobis, expect to open the first of several houses in 34th Street, New York, early in the spring.

BROADWAY AND FILM SONG WRITERS ACT TO END DISPUTE OVER RIGHTS

Production Writers Fear 25-Year Limitation on Resignation Would Jeopardize Positions with Film Companies

Early settlement of the internal dissension that a few weeks ago resulted in a flood of resignations, by members of the Songwriters Protective Association, was predicted this week by Howard E. Reinheimer, attorney for several composers associated with the motion picture industry.

Several conferences have been held by Mr. Reinheimer and John Schulman, SPA counsel, with a view to canceling the fundamental differences that have arisen between the two factions, the composers of popular songs on one side and the socalled production song writers, among whom are Mr. Reinheimer's clients.

Although such members as Sigmund Romberg, Oscar Hammerstein II, Jerome Kern and Irving Berlin officially have quit the organization, they are not insisting upon acceptance of their resignations, Mr. Reinheimer explained, due to the fact they believe the matter will be settled.

The resignations, he continued, were submitted when the SPA council took under consideration a resolution to amend the by-laws, making it impossible for members to resign for 25 years. The by-laws, as they stand now, call for life membership, but Mr. Reinheimer said he and a number of other attorneys are of the opinion that this clause would not be binding if taken to court while a specified time of membership, such as 25 years, would be.

Since membership in SPA carries with it an agreement to assign to it certain "small rights" throughout the period of membership, the production writers, Mr. Reinheimer said, objected to the change and refused to sanction it through fear that such an assignment might in the future jeopardize their ability to consummate deals with film companies and stage producers.

Mr. Reinheimer's group, generally referred to as the Coast writers, demanded that the assignment of the rights handled by SPA be limited to popular tunes as distinguished from songs written especially for films or the stage. The attorney explained the basis of this demand by pointing out that the chief interest of each faction is directly opposite to the other's. Popular song writers, he continued, derive most of their income from royalties on the sale of sheet music and other usual publication rights, while to the production writers the important thing is the compensation collected from either the motion picture industry or the stage.

Distribution Discussed

Another point discussed at the conferences was the question of the manner in which the SPA's collections are distributed among members. This, however, is not expected to present any serious difficulty. Under the organization's bylaws, the method of distributing funds is left to the board of directors.

In the past, Mr. Reinheimer said, payments have been made to the writers of the songs that were used and paid for by the users. However, he pointed out, there is nothing to prevent the board from adopting a new procedure. He illustrated the point by theorizing that the rights to one song brought in $1,000. The board, he explained, could vote to distribute that $1,000 among the entire membership instead of paying it to the writer or writers of the number.

Mr. Reinheimer does not consider the question of great importance in seeking a reconciliation between the two groups because, he said, a solution hinges only upon agreeing upon an amendment which would establish a set manner of handling payments.

Mills and Berlin Companies Sued

Meanwhile, a controversy between the SPA and song publishers continued with the SPA counsel filing actions in New York supreme court against Mills Music, Inc., and Irving Berlin, Inc.

In the first action, SPA is seeking an adjudication of the legality of its claims to the mechanical rights of its members while in the action against Irving Berlin, Inc., a ruling is sought on the publishers' right to deduct a part of the writer's share to pay the Music Publishers Protective Association for handling the licensing of the mechanical rights.

In answering the action, brought by SPA in behalf of Edgar Leslie and Joe Burke, Gilbert & Gilbert, counsel for the Berlin company, contended that an accounting of royalties, showing the 10 per cent deduction for the MPPA, was accepted by the plaintiffs.

George Bilson will direct, with Gordon Hollingshead supervising.

Miss Crewe Is AMPA Guest

Regina Crewe, retiring film editor of the New York Journal-American, was honored by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the weekly luncheon at the International Casino, New York, on Thursday. Miss Crewe has not severed her connections with the Hearst publications and may be transferred to another newspaper.

Grand National to Resume Filming

Reorganization of Grand National has progressed to a point where production can be partly resumed, it was learned Saturday in New York, prior to the departure for the coast of Ed Peskay, vice-president in charge of distribution.

Ed Finney, director of advertising and publicity and producer of the Tex Ritter series, left New York for Hollywood to put the next Ritter picture, "Rollin' Plains," in production and to prepare three more films which will complete the series on this year's contracts. Mr. Finney will establish the advertising and publicity department on the coast, remaining there indefinitely.

Phil Goldstone and Phil Krasne, attorney and studio supervisor, who were in New York all last week in connection with the reorganization, also left Saturday en route to the coast.

Mr. Peskay said that "we are conserving our assets as much as possible" and that the company is meeting all current obligations.

Reorganization plans will be discussed further with Edward L. Alperson, president, after the men now heading west reach Hollywood. The company needs $1,000,000 to get production underway on a substantial scale, according to a spokesman.

Bradley Fish, San Francisco exchange manager, has been appointed division manager on the coast with headquarters in the same city, and for the time being will continue to handle that branch. Mr. Fish succeeds Mel Hulling who resigned to join Monogram.

Aaron Rosenthal, comptroller for the company in Hollywood, and Edward Ugast, assistant foreign manager, resigned this week.

Mr. Alperson left Hollywood on Tuesday to arrange the funeral of his mother, Mrs. R. Alperson, who died Sunday, following a lengthy illness, at her home in Omaha.

Technicolor February Releases

Five Technicolor features will be released in February. They are: Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," "Goldwyn Follies," with a February 4th release date; "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," Selznick International, on February 11th; "Gold Is Where You Find It," Warner Brothers, February 12th, and Alexander Korda's "The Divorce of Lady X," to be released through United Artists, February 18th.

Creditors of Christie Film Company have been notified that a hearing will be held February 1st in Los Angeles by Hugh L. Dickson, referee, on the trustee's final report and for the purpose of setting attorneys' fees. Claims proved and allowed total $227,096.19. The report will show a balance of $4,576.23 currently on hand.

The Goldwyn Follies

(United Artists)

Extravaganza

Considerable space in the November 13th edition of this periodical was given over to a hailing of Samuel Goldwyn as the new Griffith on the occasion of his unleasing "The Hurricane," a composition in the format and sure fire formula of "The Old Master" in his prime. Now "The Great Goldwyn" is in line for equivalent acclaiming as the new Ziegfeld, for his "Goldwyn Follies" is in the format and possibly sure fire formula of the late great glorifier. Maybe Mr. Goldwyn is out after all the laurels.

There were so many Ziegfelds, adown the years, that perhaps it is well to isolate the one Mr. Goldwyn has elected to emulate. It is not the early Ziegfeld of the fleshpots, nor the latter day Ziegfeld of the perfumed cantana, but the Ziegfeld who had shelved sinuous Gilda Gray and impish Ann Pennington for the winding line of matched coryphees against an urban backdrop and the tremendous yearning for finer, nobler proscenium pictures. Mr. Goldwyn has underscored the artistic and the beautiful, using the best of materials and talent and presenting them with a certain reverence, perhaps just a bit more reverence than wallop, although it will be a while before the referendum on that issue can be run off.

Mr. Goldwyn's production is in full color and runs two hours. It is the picture, it may be recalled, originally announced as the first of a series of three-hour pictures which Mr. Goldwyn said, a year ago, would help put an end to double features. That is talk over the dam. Nevertheless, it is known that the studio found it a stiff chore to compress the footage into 120 minutes, and it should be remarked about here that the preview audience would have been in the market for another hour if Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy had been given the benefit of it. Too little of them, in their five stimulating sequences, and too much sheer artistry, vocal and terpsichorean, sums up the preview criticism, and proves nothing.

The story upon which the producer strung his offerings is by Ben Hecht, but don't let that dismay you. Save for a few mild didoes in a safely tempered Hechtian inflection, the piece is quite clean. These poke gentle fun at Hollywood and picture making, less ribaldly, incidentally, than other films of recent release. Adolphe Menjou is again the producer, lifted bodily from "A Star Is Born," and Andrea Leeds plays the small town girl of his platonic and professional devotion. There is considerable box office in her name and more in her performance. The idea of it all is that he brings her to Hollywood to supply him with the unspoiled viewpoint of two hundred million movie fans as fortification against the professional geniuses that surround him. He falls in love with her, but she prefers a hamburger cook who turns out to be a tenor, and everything comes out even.

Kenny Baker of the Jack Benny radio program and Mervyn Leroy productions is live marquee copy at the moment. The Ritz Brothers, whose madness is still staple merchandise, are interjected frequently and for the most part effectively, outnumbering the funnier Bobby Clark 3 to 1. Phil Baker and the Edgar Bergen duet, naturally the hottest billing names in the market just now, complete the comedy division.

The artistic department, which predominates by linear displacement, is topped by Helen Jepson, vocally, and by Zorina, whose dances supported by the American Ballet of the Metropolitan Opera are both magnificent and spectacular. Miss Jepson photographs stunningly and her numbers are staged in a manner to send the overlords of the "Met" into executive session in self-defense. Zorina not only dances but also acts, her version of the temperamental cinema star ranking with the best.

George Haight, associate producer, and George Marshall, director, may or may not have been under instructions to make the picture to order for the upper bracket taste, but they tailored it manifestly for the carriage trade. Now and again it goes rough house for a swift sequence, but it never goes hotcha on the song and dance side. The music George Gershwin wrote for it, before his untimely death, is polished, melodious and memorable, but it is never hot. Perhaps, had he lived, he'd have done something about that later on, to the considerable profit of the picture.

Previewed at the Warner Hollywood where an impressive turnout of Hollywood's great responded tempestuously to individual triumphs, and with punctiliously respectful applause for the occasional bursts of sheer beauty, but seemed less than bowled over by it all at the conclusion.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

A Yank at Oxford

(MGM)

Collegiate Romance

MGM made this picture in the country of its locale, at its studio in Denham, Buckinghamshire, 23 miles northwest of London, and among the classic halls and buildings, playing fields, quadrangles and living quarters of one of Oxford University's colleges. Thither were sent America's third ranking box office star, Robert Taylor, Maureen O'Sullivan, Lionel Barrymore, director Jack Conway, who among other pictures has made "Libeled Lady," "Saratoga" and "A Tale of Two Cities," cameraman Hal Rosson, supervising editor Margaret Booth and production manager Joseph Newman. To assist this crew in making the hands-across-the-sea picture, executives recruited Vivien Leigh, seen in America in "Fire over London," Edmund Gwenn, familiar to domestic audiences because of appearances in "Anthony Adverse," "The Bishop Misbehaves" and "Parnell," and the celebrated (but practically unknown here) British actors, C. V. France, Edward Rigby and Morton Selten.

The company does not deny that "A Yank at Oxford" is much in the nature of an experiment, continuation and elaboration of which depends to a great extent upon the reception which the film meets both in this country and in Great Britain. Preliminary indications, especially the favorable reaction of the preview audience to the attraction, denoted an endorsement that must have been heartening to the idea's sponsors.

From the viewpoint of plot and composition, "A Yank at Oxford" does not attempt to blaze any new or unexplored trail. It simply is a typical collegiate story, paralleling in premise, development and amplification and conclusion many similarly conceived pictures which have proved entertaining and profitable. Its major difference is that it brings a cocky, confident American, who has been given a character as fresh as a western breeze, into conflict with British institutions and personalities who worship at the shrine of age old tradition.

In it occur several things that may seem strange, possibly weird, to both American and English audiences. But concessions necessarily had to be made to the considerations of both parties. Likewise, it should be realized that, as in the case of any first model, not everything is perfect. Surely everybody understands that Americans and British don't see eye to eye on everything, particularly in the case of motion picture entertainment.

When "Lee Sheridan," product of an American jerkwater college, goes to Oxford, he finds that he is not considered so much a hero there as he was at home. Demonstrations of his athletic prowess, against the traditions of Ox-

THE STORY OF JUDY GARLAND

It is May, 1937! A 12-year-old girl, with her mother, faces M-G-M casting directors to beg for a "singing audition." The studio is overrun with girls who want an audition. But Judy has something.

Anything can happen in magic Hollywood. One man has a hunch. One man writes a page in screen history when he says "Let's hear this kid!"

Such is the romance of the discovery of Judy Garland! In just three pictures, topped by "Broadway Melody" her fame was national. Now, after smashing new triumphs on the air, she comes into her glorious own — in M-G-M's lavish, spectacular musical — "Everybody Sing!"

It's a little early to predict but here's a prophecy for 1938!

ford student life, bring him into conflict with schoolmate "Beaumont" and into love with his sister. Hazings and escapades to avenge them get him into hot water with "Dean of Cardinal," but the kindly counsels of "Scatters" lead him to a determination to fight it out and prove that he can take it. Eventually his enemy "Beaumont" becomes involved in a scandal with the campus vamp, "Elsa," which threatens expulsion for him. In tried and true American fashion, "Lee" contrives to fix things so that the blame will fall upon him. As he is about to be "sent down," the arrival of his father, "Dan Sheridan," sets things in motion which effect "Lee's" exoneration. As he and "Beaumont" come to the conclusion that both are men of honor, a situation which is pleasing to "Molly," "Lee" strokes the Oxford crew to victory over Cambridge.

The film merely blends the fundamentals of any collegiate picture. The backgrounds might just as well have been any American university. But to these showmanship values is added the unique feature of having everything take place in picturesque Oxford. Thus is made available exploitation that should be productive of many new ideas. For general purposes, in this country, "A Yank at Oxford" can be established in the public mind as a typical collegiate yarn which has Robert Taylor as its star.

Previewed in the Village theatre, Westwood, Cal. Inasmuch as MGM had publicized the showing widely, the audience included a goodly number of executives, producers, writers, actors, and so on from other studios. Believing that this contingent would be supercritical, this correspondent chose to sit with the paying customers up in the balcony. There the sentiment was pretty much as expected. Naturally these folk were quick to denote the instances in which development of the story or characters were strange to American procedure. But they were also just as quick to recognize that, on the whole, it followed the breezy lines of an American collegiate yarn. Not as an experiment, but as worthy screen entertainment, "A Yank at Oxford" should attract considerable public attention.—Gus McCarthy.

Mystery Comedy

What with exploitation centering almost exclusively upon personalities these recent indolent years, the technique of selling a picture on its story merits have been allowed to become a bit rusty in more quarters than is good for the box office and the industry it feeds. It is this technique which cries out for employment in behalf of this production and, from week to week, more and more pictures of genuine entertainment merit enacted for the camera by persons whose names are not among the marquee mighty. One quick way to get at the selling of this one is to announce that it is based on a novel by Channing Pollock, a writer whose name has long stood for a certain effective kind of fiction especially amenable to stage or screen presentation. The screen play is by George Waggner and Lester Cole, gentlemen who made much of their opportunities with the Pollock original.

The players engaged in the enactment of this unique story are competent persons who go about their business in workmanlike manner with glowingly practical result. None of these are great by box office measure but all are likely to be remembered more favorably for their participation in this enterprise. Principal names are Louis Hayward, Eric Linden, J. C. Nugent, Robert Greig, Pierre Watkin, Selmer Jackson, Barbara Read and Irving Bacon, their performances ranking in about that order.

The story concerns "Barry Gilbert" and "Doc Norton," youthful and middle-aged ne'er-do-wells, who take shelter from the rain in a supposedly closed country home and, on being discovered by house servants, are mistaken for the young man of the family, long away from home in parental estrangement, and his guest. They play out the roles thrust upon them in such a way as to bring about, ultimately, a making of peace between errant son and stern parent, incidentally solving a murder mystery which has cast its shadow over several members of the family. There is a journalistic background and a slight touch of gangsterism but the story is, in the main, fresh and unpredictable.

Trem Carr's production is altogether adequate, without being ostentatious, and Arthur Lubin's direction is careful and well considered. J. C. Nugent's performance is outstanding.

Previewed January 22nd at the Pantages theatre, Hollywood. A Saturday night audience registered complete approval.—W.R.W.

Double Danger

(RKO)

Satire on Crime

Treating the "master mind crook" story in a satirical vein makes for an unusual offering in the crime melodrama field. RKO's "Double Danger" does that, and in doing so affords entertainment of mass appeal. At the same time, the restraint used by Lew Landers, director, prevents the offering from becoming an absolute burlesque.

The screenplay of Arthur T. Horman and J. Robert Bren from Horman's original contains well apportioned amounts of suspense, comedy, romance and satire. Instead of having one master mind jewel thief, there are two. One of them is a girl. The purloiners are unknown to each other, and are both suspected of being "The Gentleman," a thorn to the retiring police commissioner. To trap them, he invites the pair to his home for a weekend party and places temptation in their paths.

The cast consists of Preston Foster, Whitney Bourne, Donald Meek, Samuel S. Hinds, Paul Guilfoyle, Cecil Kellaway, June Johnson, Arthur Lake,, Edythe Elliott, Alec Craig and Harry Hayden.

"Bob Crane," who writes successful crime novels, is "The Gentleman," notorious thief. He manages to outwit "Carolyn Morgan," another thief, in a gem robbery. "Commissioner Theron" invites them both, unknown to each other, to his home to trap "The Gentleman," suspecting both of them. By arrangement with "Gordon Ainsley," jeweler, he places duplicates of the stolen jewels in his safe. In the climax five persons claim to be the master thief but "Taylor," aide of "Miss Morgan," is caught with the real and the false gems. "Theron" gently hints that "Miss Morgan" and "Crane," who have fallen in love, take a permanent honeymoon on the Riviera.

Happy Landing

Comedy, Romance

Two at least of the general expressions of commendation that followed Sonja Henie's "One in a Million," and "Thin Ice," are being heard from "Happy Landing." Miss Henie's effortless grace on the silver skates continues to be good motion picture "copy," and her natural appeal is as strong as ever. That she was selected to be eighth on the list of Money Making stars by exhibitors last year with only two pictures to her credit is testimony of the esteem in which she is held and "One in a Million" was a 1937 Box Office Champion.

From the showman's viewpoint there is additionally the fact that Miss Henie recently was officially recognized by the Norwegian Government with the Cross of the Order of St. Olaf. It might be mentioned, too, that on the night this picture was reviewed, Miss Henie and her Hollywood Ice Revue ensemble gave the first of five nightly performances before a capacity 16,000 audience at Madison Square Garden. Of this the New York Times said:

"So many telephone calls were received at the Garden for information on the show that one of the operators, Miss Sally Dunn, became "temporarily deaf" and had to consult an ear specialist. It was estimated that 18,000 calls have been received by the Garden concerning the revue in the last 20 days."

The picture stands on its own feet as deftly as does the skating star. The story goes far afield of her previous pictures, what with night clubs and a concomitant element of sophistication. The production also has been embellished with swifty paced comedy, a four cornered romance, any number of varied settings, and an engaging supporting cast.

There are Don Ameche, Jean Hersholt, Ethel Merman, Cesar Romero, Billy Gilbert, Wally Vernon and El Brendel.

Then, too, the picture has some very good music, particularly the songs, "A Gypsy Told Me So" and "War Dance of the Wooden Indians."

The story opens in New York where "Duke Sargent" (Cesar Romero), an orchestra leader, and "Jimmy Hall" (Don Ameche), his agent, are preparing to fly to Paris to keep an engagement. The plane runs out of gas over Norway and is forced down. "Duke" and "Jimmy" meet "Trudy Ericksen" (Sonja Henie), who thinks "Duke" is her dream prince. To make matters worse, "Duke" dances with "Trudy" twice in a row, tantamount to a marriage proposal.

"Jimmy" as usual gets "Duke" away before more trouble occurs. In New York again by way of Paris "Duke" is surprised by "Trudy" who has come to this country to find him.

Later at the night club were "Duke" works he quickly forgets "Trudy" when "Flo Kelly" (Ethel Merman) appears. "Jimmy" taking "Trudy" home suggests they go skating in the park. Learning thereby of her skating ability "Jimmy" becomes "Trudy's" agent and there follows a tour through the ice palaces of the country.

When finally a New York engagement is obtained "Trudy" is happy because she will see "Duke" again. "Jimmy," in love with "Trudy," turns her over to another agent and leaves for the south for a vacation. He runs into difficulties there which cause "Trudy" to become engaged to "Duke." But she realizes that she loves "Jimmy," and in a swiftly paced climax things are straightened out and a double wedding is performed, with "Trudy" and "Jimmy," and "Flo" and "Duke."

In elaborate settings Miss Henie and ensembles skate in Norway, Central Park, N. Y., various ice palaces, a night club in New York and back in Central Park for the finale.

Generals Without Buttons

(Mayer-Burstyn-French)

Satirical Comedy

In a highly satirical photoplay, good natured fun is poked at the townsfolk of two provincial French villages and, in the wider field, the foibles of the human race. The picture is a triumph of casting, for, in the 30 or 40 youngsters who at one time or another face the camera, the director has found complete naturalness.

Based on the novel, "La Guerre des Boutons," for which the French author Louis Pergaud was awarded the Prix Goncourt, it tells the story of two French villages, Longeverne and Velrans, which, from time immemorial, have nursed a grudge against each other. The feud in its contemporary form revolves around the declaration of war between the children of the two villages and the satirizing of all wars thereby. This is accomplished, as a synopsis sheet aptly puts it, "by senseless heroism, useless sacrifice, adulation of the leaders by the little girls—the whole gamut of militarism is run through by the children of the two villages."

The piece de resistance, as the French would have it, comes when one of the warring factions cuts off the buttons of the opponents, who counteract this bit of genius by stripping, which scene, incidentally, puts the picture in the adult classification. A compromise finally is arranged, and the villagers meet at a party which is supposed to put an end to hostilities for all times.

The adults soon are fighting, however, and the "end to hostilities" party is pretty much of a debacle. The one happy note finds the mayor of Longeverne and the pretty school teacher from Valrane blissfully unaware of the renewed fighting, concerned only in each other. As for the children, who have not joined their elders in the melee, Lebrac, onetime general of Longeverne's younger brigade, sums it up for them by commenting: "I suppose when we grow up we will be as stupid as they are."

International Settlement

(20th Cetury-Fox)

Melodrama

The melodrama of the warfare that raged recently on the borders of Shanghai's International Settlement is the melodramatic and realistic setting for the personal melodrama of many persons who meet with many adventures and face many dangers. Judicious inclusion of newsreel clip shots endows the film with a topical character that should make it of unusual interest.

About half of the picture concentrates on the actual melodrama of the shelling and bombing of the city, while Chinese soldiery and an alien enemy battle in the streets, amid carnage in the ranks of the civilian population. The other half concerns a group of whites who, despite the fact that all are caught in the maelstrom of war, fight a melodrama of intrigue for possession of a munitions fortune. The realism of the first factor and the imaginative fiction of the second have been blended in stirring fashion that makes for melodrama all wool and a yard wide. Grim as the piece generally is, it is not without incidents in love interest and comedy to contrast with the basic element.

"Forbes" soldier of fortune, has $1,000,000 which he does not know what to do with, because the man who gave it to him and the man for whom it was intended are both dead. Ensue highly theatrical situations in which "Forbes" is the center of a tug of war involving a munitions highjacker, "Silvers," and the sinister characters "Lang" and "Murdock," with whom a cafe entertainer, "Lenore," apparently is in league. Appearing first as a menace to "Forbes," "Lenore," coming into a better understanding of things, changes to a friend and saves him from the plots of his antagonists as well as from the perils of war. While the melodramatic story of this group is being narrated, the romance of a cameraman, "Burton," who never was able to photograph the war, and a tourist, "Joyce Parker," provides the comedy relief.

Exhibitors may take advantage of the picture's timeliness in preparing exploitation campaigns. Yet, though war backgrounded pictures seem to hold a strange fascination for great numbers, there are other attention arousing qualities. As the featured and supporting members of the cast do their jobs in journeyman-like style, a word should be devoted to George Sanders and Dolores Del Rio, who were together in "Lancer Spy," as well as John Caradine, Key Luke, Harold Huber, June Lang and Dick Baldwin.

Previewed at the Uptown theatre, Los Angeles. The audience quickly understood the title and the foreword that preceded the action put them in proper mood to appreciate what ensued. Generally they accepted the film for what was intended, a commercial proposition which takes advantage of the sentiments that always accompany a catastrophe. Reaction indicated that average audiences should be favorably inclined toward the picture.—G. M.

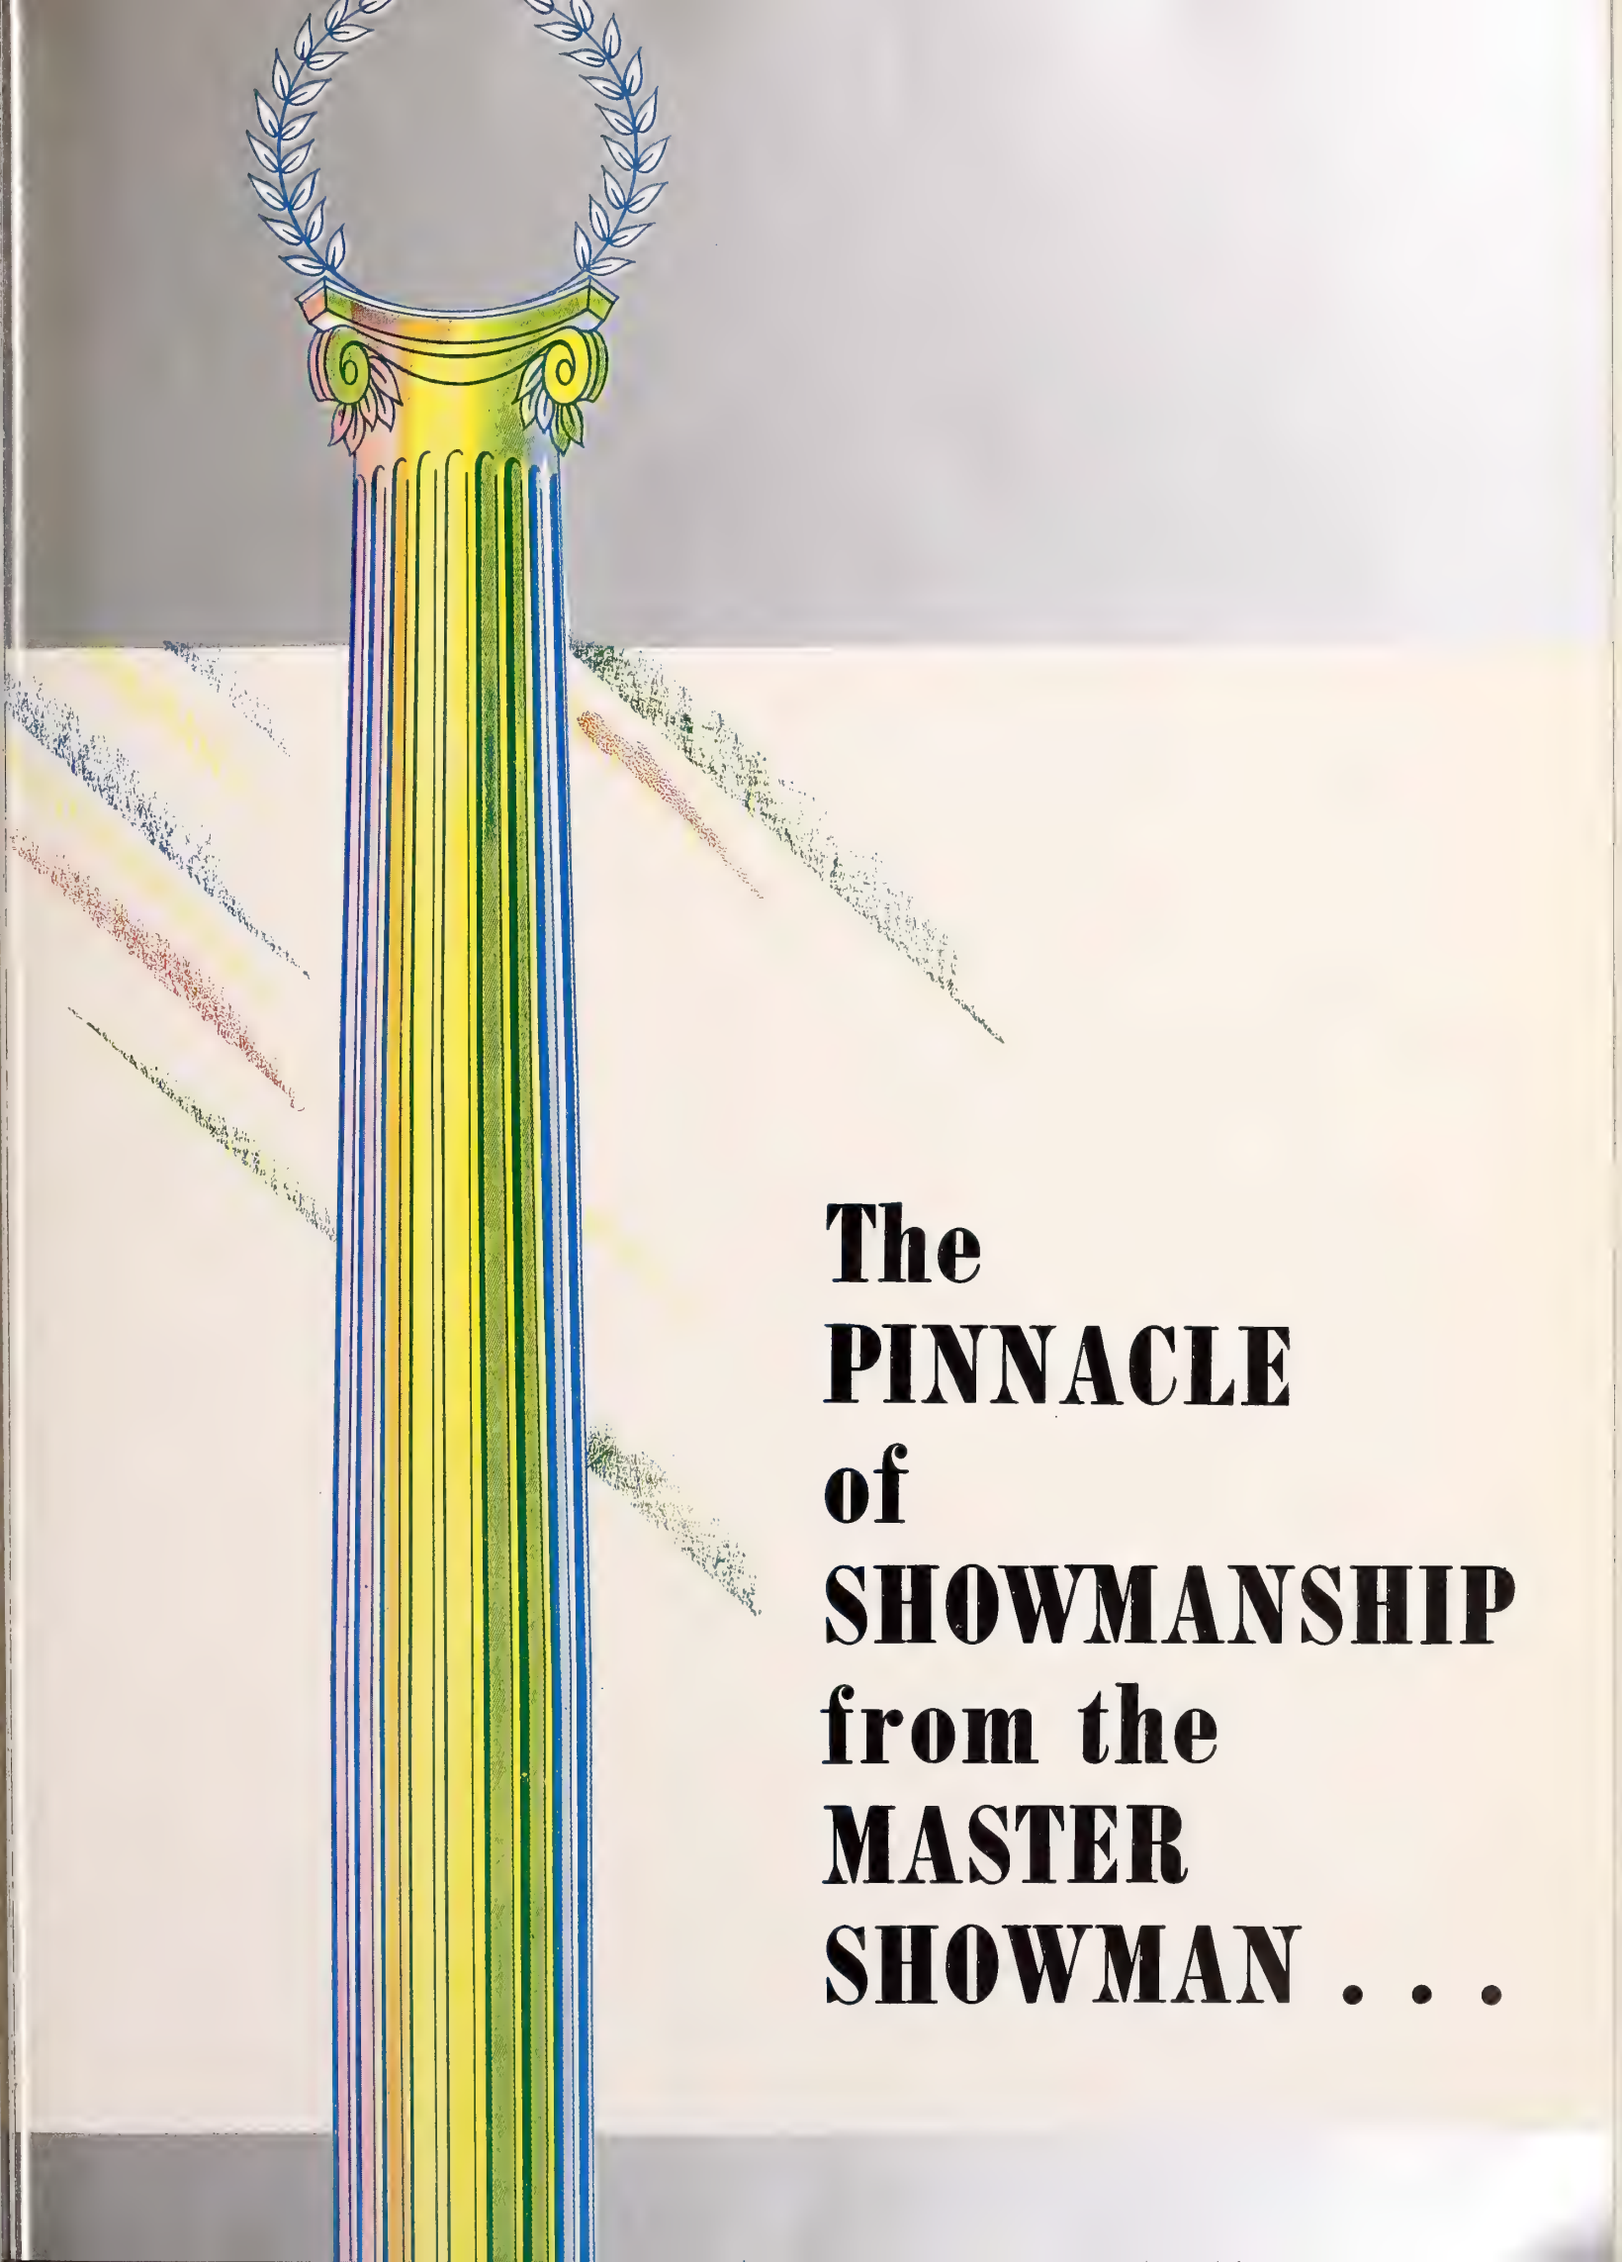
Arsene Lupin Returns

(MGM)

Mystery Comedy



Exhibitors and their customers who for years have been looking for a brand new idea in mystery pictures should find that "Arsene Lupin Returns" satisfies their longings. As the film comes upon the screen anyone, whether he be shrewd or otherwise, readily may see that the writers, James K. McGuinness, Howard Emmett Rogers and George H. Coxe, who based their idea on Maurice Leblanc's suavely slick crook character, "Lupin," the producer John Considine, Jr., director, George Fitzmaurice, and the cast, which is headed by Melvyn Douglas, Warren William, Virginia Bruce, John Halliday, Nat Pendleton, E. E. Clive and George Zucco, were mainly concerned in developing, in a class manner, a thief-detective story that would be different.

"Arsene Lupin Returns" is a mystery picture all right. But even more, it is a comedy. While it amuses in breezy, frolicsome fashion, it also is a puzzler that undoubtedly will leave most audiences more bewildered at the conclusion than they were when they first thought they were beginning to catch on to the story trend. There's no horror in it. Nor is there any blood and thunder stuff. Expert use has been made of the suspense factor to create and hold interest and at the same time introduce so much variety in dialogue, situations and characterizations that there are no lagging moments.

Circumstantial evidence connected with an international jewel robbery makes it appear that "Lupin," believed dead, has returned to a life of crime. The locale moving to France, an American ex-G-man uncovers evidence that a man living under another name is "Lupin." Only to two oldtime confederates is it revealed that the gentleman farmer and "Lupin" are one and the same. As French police take over the investigation of the robbery, which rings in the old paste substitute gag, "Lupin" is interested, but he's more interested in trying to woo a girl, a situation which is complicated because the detective has the same idea. Things being so contrived that the preview audience did not know whether to believe or disbelieve what they were apparently seeing (a condition which the general audience should likewise encounter), the plot takes a bewildering twist as it approaches the climax. What happens in those episodes is the picture's outstanding showmanship asset. To hint at it in any way would be to take the edge off the whole thing. It is, however, a complete surprise, effected in such smooth fashion that it will leave many still up in the air.

Previewed in the Alexander theatre, Glendale, Cal. That the audience appreciated the film's novel composition was evident from the outset. That it appreciated that it was quality entertainment done up in a fancy package was noticeable also. That the audience discovered that it had to listen to almost every word of dialogue

Saleslady

(Monogram)

Topical Melodrama

The rich man, poor girl theme has been changed around in this topical melodrama of young married life in Chicago. The story, chronologically presented and devoid of comedy relief, is fair entertainment of a minor sort, with Anne Nagel and Weldon Heyburn as the boy and the girl.

The girl, heiress to millions accumulated from the mattress business, becomes a saleslady in a department store, marries a mattress salesman and sets up housekeeping, all the while pretending to be as poor as he is. The husband, the sort that bubbles over with enthusiasm, becomes a victim of the easy payment plan, and in time his car, piano and furniture are repossessed.

The additional twofold misfortune of a hospital bill and a lost job set the stage for the return of the prodigal daughter or, in this case, granddaughter. What follows is a page from a Horatio Alger story as the husband, refusing to accept favors from his rich in-laws, teams up with another mattress manufacturer and in no time at all the mattress tycoon is "yelling" for help.

The finale finds the wife reunited with her husband and the grandfather pleased that his grandson-in-law has offered him a partnership.

The Spy Ring

(Universal)

Action Melodrama

The name of Trem Carr has been associated for years with fast action melodramas, as has that of his associate producer, Paul Malvern. Together they have turned out a series of pictures held highly acceptable in the market at which they are aimed. "The Spy Ring," distributed by Universal, is another in the series of offerings which seldom fail to hit their mark, even if not of a spectacular nature. It has as backgrounds polo playing and the machinations of an international spy ring.

For cast names there are William Hall, Jane Wyman, Warner ingenue borrowed by Universal, and Jane Carleton, new screen name for Esther Ralston. Writer of the screenplay from the Frank Van Wyck Mason story is George Waggner, who like Malvern has been long associated with Carr.

An Army man who invented a device which would transform a machine gun into an effective anti-aircraft weapon has been killed. "Capt. Tod Hayden" draws the assignment to continue the experiments. Three spies, offered $2,000,000 for the invention by an unidentified foreign government, trail him. "Hayden" leads an Army polo team against a team captained by one of the spies, and wins. The spies fight among themselves, and one of them is killed. Then the remaining two, led by "Jean Bruce," kidnap "Hayden" and his fiancee "Elaine Burdette." "Hayden's" army pals rescue them.

Un Carnet de Bal

(Dance Program)

(Films Sigma-Vog)

Romantic Melodrama

This French production, directed by Julien Duvivier, now in Hollywood for MGM, is, with "La Grande Illusion" (by Jean Renoir) and "Pepe le Moko" (also by Duvivier), one of the best films made in the French studios in 1937. It was awarded the Mussolini Cup, which was the highest prize, at the Venice International Film Exposition.

This film reminds one, in its subject, of "If I Had a Million." The story, written by Duvivier, is made up of eight different episodes, connected by a central character.

The picture deals with a lonely widow, Christine, who finds the dance program of her first ball, signed by ten men who at that time professed to be in love with her. She conceives the idea of seeking out her girlhood admirers. Each visit brings her disillusion, and the marvellous ball room of her dreams was nothing but a small and common provincial town hall. Christine returns home to find that the main object of her search has been living a few miles away. She goes there immediately, but he is dead. She adopts the orphaned son.

Rarely has a European film contained so many first class players: eight of the best French stars, well supported. Marie Bell, of the Comedie Française, as Christine, the woman who tries to rediscover her youth, gives a subtle performance. Others are Françoise Rosay, Louis Jouvet, Harry Baur, Pierre Richard-Willm, the comedian Raimu, Pierre Blanchar, Fernandel (the French Joe E. Brown), Robert Lynen, Sylvie, and Milly Mathis.

Although the action is necessarily episodic and runs two full hours, the film is at no time monotonous.

A note of sadness predominates, with the exception of the Raimu and Fernandel scenes. The Pierre Blanchar scene, magnificently acted, is almost unbearably detailed. The direction is extraordinarily good, the technical work and photography first class. The musical score by Maurice Jaubert, and theme song "The Grey Waltz," are also to be mentioned.

Viewed in Paris, at an ordinary performance at the Marivaux theatre. The hall was packed with paying patrons who applauded several times and gave the picture a tremendous ovation at the end.—Pierre Autre.

A Sigma Production (Paris) distributed in the Paris region by Films Vog. Foreign sales, Paris-Exportfilm. Original story, scenario and directed by Julien Duvivier. Dialogue by Henri Jeanson. Additional dialogue by Bernard Zimmer and Jean Sarment. Assistant director, Charles Dorat. Executive Producer, J. Lev—Strauss. Cameraman, J. Kelber. Assistant cameramen, Agostini and Levent. Jimmy Fidler's Personality Parade

(MGM)

Album

James Marion Fidler, one of the most enterprising of our modern day Samuel Pepys coterie, has collected within the film pages of these two reels some memory stirring glimpses of the long ago of past and present screen figures. Beginning with early Chaplinana, the review presents fleeting views of prominent personages concerned with the embryonic state of the motion picture industry. Former film celebrities, now no more than bit players, are shown in their pristine glory, while the stars who have passed beyond are pictured in all their glowing and exuberant good health. Strangely enough in reciting the rollcall of deceased cinema celebrities, Mr. Fidler has overlooked two of the most interesting characters, Ruth Roland and John Gilbert. The concluding shot, showing Jean Harlow against a skyline illuminated by a setting sun descends dangerously close to bathos.—Running time, 20 minutes.

America Marching On

(Modern Talking Picture Service)

Industrial Subject

This and another short subject, "Frontiers of the Future," industrial films, sponsored by the National Industrial Council, an organization associated with manufacturers of the country, urge public confidence and do not concern themselves with individual items of merchandise. The subjects, both of which are narrated by Lowell Thomas, review the advancement in invention, production and distribution in industry from its earliest days. Pointing out that opportunity for fame and fortune is as widespread today as in yesteryear, the narrator shifts the scene to the research laboratory and there describes the advantages that will accrue in the future. Ably produced, interesting in their presentation, the subjects seek to instill confidence in American industry as a whole. Each subject runs 10 minutes.

A very interesting Pictorial Revue number takes one to an ice cream plant, where the camera records in detail the manufacture of the cream, thence to a narration by Clem McCarthy showing a day in the life of a jockey, winding up with a horse race. The last item, photographed in color, presents the latest styles in pajamas and negligees. The first and last sequences are narrated by Howard Claney. Running time, 11 minutes.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

Open for Business

Despite the tangles of the contemporary quota situation, Paramount continues the production of British films. Just off the floor, and now in the cutting stage at Worton Hall, is "Special Edition" a newspaper drama which is being directed by Redd Davis, ex-Hollywood personality whose directorial subjects have included both comedy drama and musicals. He was producer as well as director of the present film.

Playing the lead are Lucille Lisle, young British stage actress whose work in a recent British production "Minstrel Boy" attracted considerable attention, and John Garrick. Also in the cast are Johnnie Schofield, one of British production's soundest character actors, Vera Bogetti and Mabel Twemlow. Reginald Fogwell is at the camera.

Fox British, quota production unit of Twentieth Century-Fox, is showing no signs of suspending activities. Following Bernard Mainwaring's film, Maurice Elvey has now gone on the floor with "Who Goes Next."

In the cast of this are Barry K. Barnes and Sophie Stewart.

A sinister gang of robbers rout bobbies and innocent bystanders with gas and gunfire in a scene from "Kate Plus Ten," the Wainwright production of a gold bullion and bank robbery thriller.

One at Denham

The only film in production at the Denham Studios at the time of writing is "Over the Moon" the Merle Oberon picture which is being directed by William K. Howard, and which is now nearing completion, with, by the time this reaches print, less than a week to go.

Latest addition to the cast is Cecil Ramage, who has been engaged to play the part of Prince Altenberg.

Much ingenuity has been displayed in set construction by the Art Department at Denham, and a recent set, which represents a children's clinic in Switzerland, and glimpses a vista of pine covered and snow clad mountains, has attracted considerable attention.

Merle Oberon who has a local reputation for dress sense, has designed sports costumes for these sequences herself.

Twelve Planned

Gainsborough, producer of some of the more lively comedies, has already matured production plans for 1938. Twelve films are scheduled and will be made during the forthcoming year at the Islington Studios.

As soon as work concludes on the Crazy Gang's extravaganza "Alf's Button Afloat," production will open on another Will Hay comedy "Convict 99." Scenario will again be a joint effort, with Marriott Edgar and Val Guest, responsible for "Oh Mr. Porter," working on the new script.

Also due to be made during 1938 is the film version of Sir Walter Scott's historical novel "Rob Roy." This, needless to say, will be a spectacular costume production with a setting amidst the Highlands and Lowlands of Scotland. The screen story has already been prepared by Kurt Siodmak.

Another ambitious entry on the production roster is a new version of H. de Vere Stacpoole's best-seller "The Blue Lagoon." For exteriors on this a camera unit will travel to the tropics. A high figure has been paid for the rights of the story.

"The Wheel Spins" an adaptation of Eleana White's novel and "Such an Enmity" from the novel by Roland Pertwee are two other productions scheduled by Gainsborough.

Alfred Hitchcock's 1938 vehicles are to be "The Perjury" with Nova Pilbeam in the leading role, and "The Wheel Spins."

Sonnie Hale is due to direct Jessie Matthews in "Climbing High"; Tom Walls is scheduled for "Crackerjack," and also on the list are "Empty World" and "Death of a Ghost."

Victoria Receipts

First general release figures on RKO Radio's "Victoria the Great" show that the Wilcox film is almost as big a moneymaker as its sponsors claimed. In its first week, that immediately following Christmas, it broke box office records in many and varied spots.

In a release period already heavily loaded with "Captains Courageous" and "Wee Willie Winkie," "Victoria" drew just under a million patrons to British picture houses. In 48 cinemas alone it took over £48,400 ($242,000). Nine house records went west on the Odeon chain, seven of them set up by "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town." The Futurist, Birmingham, one of the most noted provincial houses registered capacity four times a day and netted 29,484 attendances during the week.

Shavian Approval

A free hand to both scenarist and director has been given by George Bernard Shaw whose "Pygmalion" goes into production at Pinewood in the course of the next few weeks. "Lipscomb and Howard are capable men" says Shaw, "they know their job as well as I know mine." Shaw will attend the first day's shooting—but after that will stay away until production is completed.

Stars will be Leslie Howard and Wendy Hiller, Lancashire girl who won overnight fame by her acting in the London stage production of Walter Greenwood's "Love on the Dole." Miss Hiller was chosen for the part of Eliza Doolittle by Bernard Shaw himself.

The man who persuaded Shaw to relent in his stand against a film version of "Pygmalion" is Gabriel Pascal of Pascal Productions, Ltd. Pascal will celebrate his Shavian victory by making "Pygmalion" at a cost of £150,000 ($750,000).

Direction will be in the hands of Anthony Asquith and Leslie Howard.

The "Pygmalion" scenario has been written by W. P. Lipscomb. Supporting cast includes Wilfred Lawson who appeared in two Hollywood pictures—"Ladies in Love" and "White Hunter"; Marie Lohr, Joyce Barbour and David Free.

Itemized

Laying plans in advance for the continuance of their British production, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have now placed Roland Pertwee under contract.

He is to write the dialogue for "Finishing School," the Tennyson Jesse and Laurence Kirk opus which is to be produced by Michael Balcon early this year.

The story has been adapted for the screen by Sidney Gilliatt and Shan Balcon.

"Vessel of Wrath" the Charles Laughton-Erich Pommer production is to have a charity premiere at the Regal, Marble Arch, London on February 17th. Proceeds will go to the Actors Orphanage.

NOW IN GENERAL RELEASE!

BRITISH COMMONS HASTENS ACTION ON QUOTA TO REMOVE UNCERTAINTY

Government Hopes to Complete Bill Next Month After Resumption February 3; Delay Factor in Industry Slump

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Because the uncertainty aroused by the continued discussions over the provisions of the new Films Act is believed to be a definite factor behind the doldrums into which the British industry has fallen, the Government this week was taking steps to accelerate the passage of the measure which is now under consideration in the House of Commons.

It is hoped in Government circles that the Commons standing committee on the Films Act will conclude its work in the course of three sessions next month. Hearings on the bill will reopen on February 3rd.

Film labor interests this week gave grudging approval to the proposal for an alternative quota put forward by Oliver Stanley, president of the Board of Trade. The approval, which included also the foreign labor clauses in the proposed measure, was in the form of a letter to the board from the Association of Cine Technicians and it was made contingent upon certain amendments. The letter indicated that the Stanley plan suggested acceptance of the essential principles of the separate quota, but in a new version.

The labor group declared itself agreeable to the change if the exhibitor quota was increased thereby adding to the showing time of British pictures. The group also expressed a willingness to agree to the employment of one foreign technician and one foreign player in each British film, provided the British labor cost figure was raised. They also sought application of the alternative quota to short subjects.

The distributors and exhibitors previously went on record against the proposal.

Production in Slump

In the first week of the New Year, out of Britain's 74 stages only eight were occupied, with a like number of films in active production. Only four others were scheduled. The fact that some 225 films were registered last year and that between 220 and 250 are necessary as a minimum to meet exhibitor requirements, made the situation all the more grave.

Labor circles take a gloomy view of the situation. Of highly paid technicians over 300 are on the unemployment list, representing nearly 50 per cent of the total. Of general studio labor about 3,500 are unemployed, about 84 per cent of the total.

For this sterile situation blame is laid against two factors, each interlinked with the other, the doubts and uncertainties of impending legislation, and the closing of the channels of finance. The city has long since cut off its cash supply. Even those corporations and private investors who would normally be willing to continue a practical interest, are withholding further action until the new act takes concrete shape.

The Stock Exchange asks, however, whether lack of finance or dubieties of new legislation could explain the heavy losses sustained by some production and associated companies such as have been reported in the last few weeks.

A check back for the last month reveals, for instance, that Associated Talking Pictures recorded a loss for the year of £97,000 ($485,000), Gainsborough a loss of £11,000 ($55,000), and a debit balance of £123,289 ($616,445) and that British and Dominions, whose production activities have been merged into studio holdings and so forth, have recorded a loss of £5,902 ($29,510) and a total debit of £137,051 ($685,255). These are but three of the major corporations whose prestige has always been high and whose films have been relatively important.

The stillborn state of the giant Amalgamated Studios, built at a reported cost of £750,000 ($3,750,000) and still devoid of life, the virtual disappearance from the production scene of such figures as Paul Soskin and Robert Garrett whose integrity has been as high as their pictures have been creditable, the abortive launching of National News, the newsreel which made one sorry issue, the winding up of National Provincial Film Distributors with its associated and dependent production companies, the recent absorption of Sound City Film Distributors by the exhibitor-renter-producer group British Independent Exhibitors (Production), Ltd., are straws in the bitter wind.

Though Mr. George Smith, whose Quota productions customarily budget at the £5,000 ($25,000) mark, is still more or less in constant production, Mr. Alexander Korda whose pictures are made at anything between £80,000 ($400,000) and £300,000 ($1,500,000) has not yet announced what will be his next film and when!

Some time back William Charles Crocker, leading British solicitor, was charged by Lloyds underwriters with the task of conducting an investigation into British film finance. The investigation is now complete, but no report, so far, has been issued, and no indication given of its findings.

There is little doubt that this will have a marked and definite effect on the future of film financing.

That money is still being spent in certain reaches of the industry is evidenced from the fact that during 1937 some 270 picture houses were added to the lists at an estimated cost of £5,500,000 ($27,500,000) probably a million pounds ($5,000,000) more than was spent on the year's films. It is the exhibitor point of view that this gesture makes the problem of ultimate British film supply none the easier, and is poor consolation to those who have found that at the same time as rentals have increased, there has been no increase in attendances or takings—sometimes, they claim, the reverse.

One producer group is ready to saddle legislation with responsibility for the present slump. Another producer group, backed up in some exhibitor circles, blames the American renter, and traces these failures and financial dilemmas back to his allegedly cavalier treatment of British films, which they believe, or at least protest, he regards as a tax. The records of the box office, however, on the takings of some of the more highly priced British films, as well as on some of the others, offers a bold contradiction to this. On the books, too, is the record of one English renter who, having acquired a British feature, booked it with his own product and returned his producer a percentage amounting to five shillings (one dollar) for a week's run.

The determination of the holders of 1,153,122 shareholders in the Gaumont British Picture Corporation to demand a State investigation into the company's affairs with attendant unpleasant questions on the relationship of capital to net assets, on the allotment of shares and monies to directors and their families, and alleged breaches of fiduciary duties is considered both significant and unsavory.

The refusal of the new Associated British directors of Union Cinemas the £3,856,564 ($19,282,820) company which it has acquired, to pass the accounts, the allegations of share inflation to the extent of £2,000,000 ($10,000,000), the suggestion of false valuations of properties and the launching of a complete investigation into the company's affairs, is another financial bombshell which has burst over the industry and left a flavor which can be described neither as savory nor as healthy.

With such a financial headache the British film industry has awakened to its New Year. Now it is wondering what will be the outcome of 1938. There is, of course, both in Wardour Street and in the city a hope that the new legislation with which Parliament has been wrestling—its locks and holds not assisted by the industry's own champion—will stabilize matters and when the future is clear new finance will come readily and constantly into its coffers. There is, none the less, an increasing conviction that the industry will have to do a great deal of hard thinking for itself.

It is obvious, right now, that the Quota Act is pleasing but few. On every side is criticism, and little indication of gratitude. Producers for most part are convinced that the new Act will be a hindrance rather than a help, and the opinion gains force that the ultimate result will be to compel American interests to make their own British films, a process which they have proven they can do with considerably more technical and entertainment success than most local producers.

RADIO COMPETITION HITS ENGLAND TOO

Although radio programs in England are not sponsored and are non-advertising, being controlled wholly by the Government-owned British Broadcasting Corporation, the problem of radio competition with theatres has become serious enough to demand the serious attention of exhibitors.

Theatre interests were to meet this weekend to work out a course of action with respect to the command performances at broadcasting stations which, the exhibitors contend, have resulted in record low grosses at theatres throughout the country.

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 99

Bluebook School Question No. 99 was: (A) Should or should not carbons be subjected to a drying process before using them? What, in your opinion and experience, is the result of using carbons that have been stored in a damp place for some time?

D. Pitchkey.

G. E. Doe answers Section A as follows:

"There can be no manner of doubt that carbons absorb a certain amount of moisture, probably for the most part in the core. At least, I have left a solid carbon and one having a core in a damp place for 30 days as a test. Burning them immediately upon removal from that location, it was found that while the solid one suffered little if any effect, the cored one was affected. Its arc sputtered badly while the first inch of carbon was being consumed, and more or less throughout its entire length.

"While we may well believe the absorption is slight, considered as bulk of water, still it is quite understandable that a very small particle of moisture would be quite sufficient to blow off a tiny bit of crater surface when evaporated at as high a temperature as is there found."

What Brother Doe has said about carbons absorbing moisture is true. If you will examine page 339 of your Sixth Edition of the Bluebook, you will find that I have there, as well as in my BETTER THEATRES writings, cautioned projectionists to store their carbons in a warm, dry place and to keep some on top of the rheostat or in some other place where they will be subjected to rather high temperatures for anyhow a day or two before they are used. In all this I have the approval and backing of the carbon manufacturers.

(B) T. F. Bochert says, "Damp carbons are those containing any moisture at all, regardless of smallness of the content. When damp carbons are burning, particles blow off the crater surface instead of dropping off in fine particles of ash, which action causes the arc to sputter. I personally hold that carbons should be stored close to the projection room ceiling where it is hot and the air therefore dry."

W. H. Edmonds says, "By all means we should subject carbons to a drying process before use. I have a Western Electric TA-4035-A power unit which serves this purpose very well indeed. Its four type 488A tubes produce a large amount of heat. I keep a box of both positives and negatives on top of this device, using care not to block the vent holes too much. After an hour of operation I cannot bear my hand on them. They remain there two full weeks and certainly must by then be thoroughly dry. They then are removed and placed in a container near the projector, where but very little if any moisture can reach them until used. This may sound a bit complicated, but it really is not; merely entails one added handling of the carbons, and that is not worth consideration in view of the fact that it insures perfect dryness, hence no chance of possible ill effects due to moisture.

"I have had this plan in use for two years, before which time I did not observe results from moisture closely enough to feel justified in expressing an opinion. However, this did happen: A faulty lamphouse ventilator system permitted rain to leak in one Saturday night. Monday morning check-up disclosed this and convinced me the carbons had received their share of the wetting. So after cleaning the lamphouse and lamp, I struck the arc to see what would happen. Apparently the conductivity of the carbons had been slightly increased, since with arc voltage normal a bit more current flowed than usual. I dropped the voltage until normal current flow was established, whereupon the arc misbehaved badly. The current demand varied, with no apparent variations in light with these variations. The arc was very 'cranky,' requiring almost constant, and by no means logical, adjustments of the negative position. Sputtering and 'frying' was present frequently. The negative spindled (normal current flow); the positive looked as though it would, did I use just a bit more current. The flame would leave its normal position and wander all over the last two inches of the positive.

"To check up on this, I removed the carbons, placed them on the power unit, left them there for two weeks, after which I reinstalled them in the same lamp, and they behaved just as any well bred carbon should."

There are things in that last that I would not even attempt to explain. However, the experience is printed essentially as written. It is interesting, particularly in view of the present discussion.

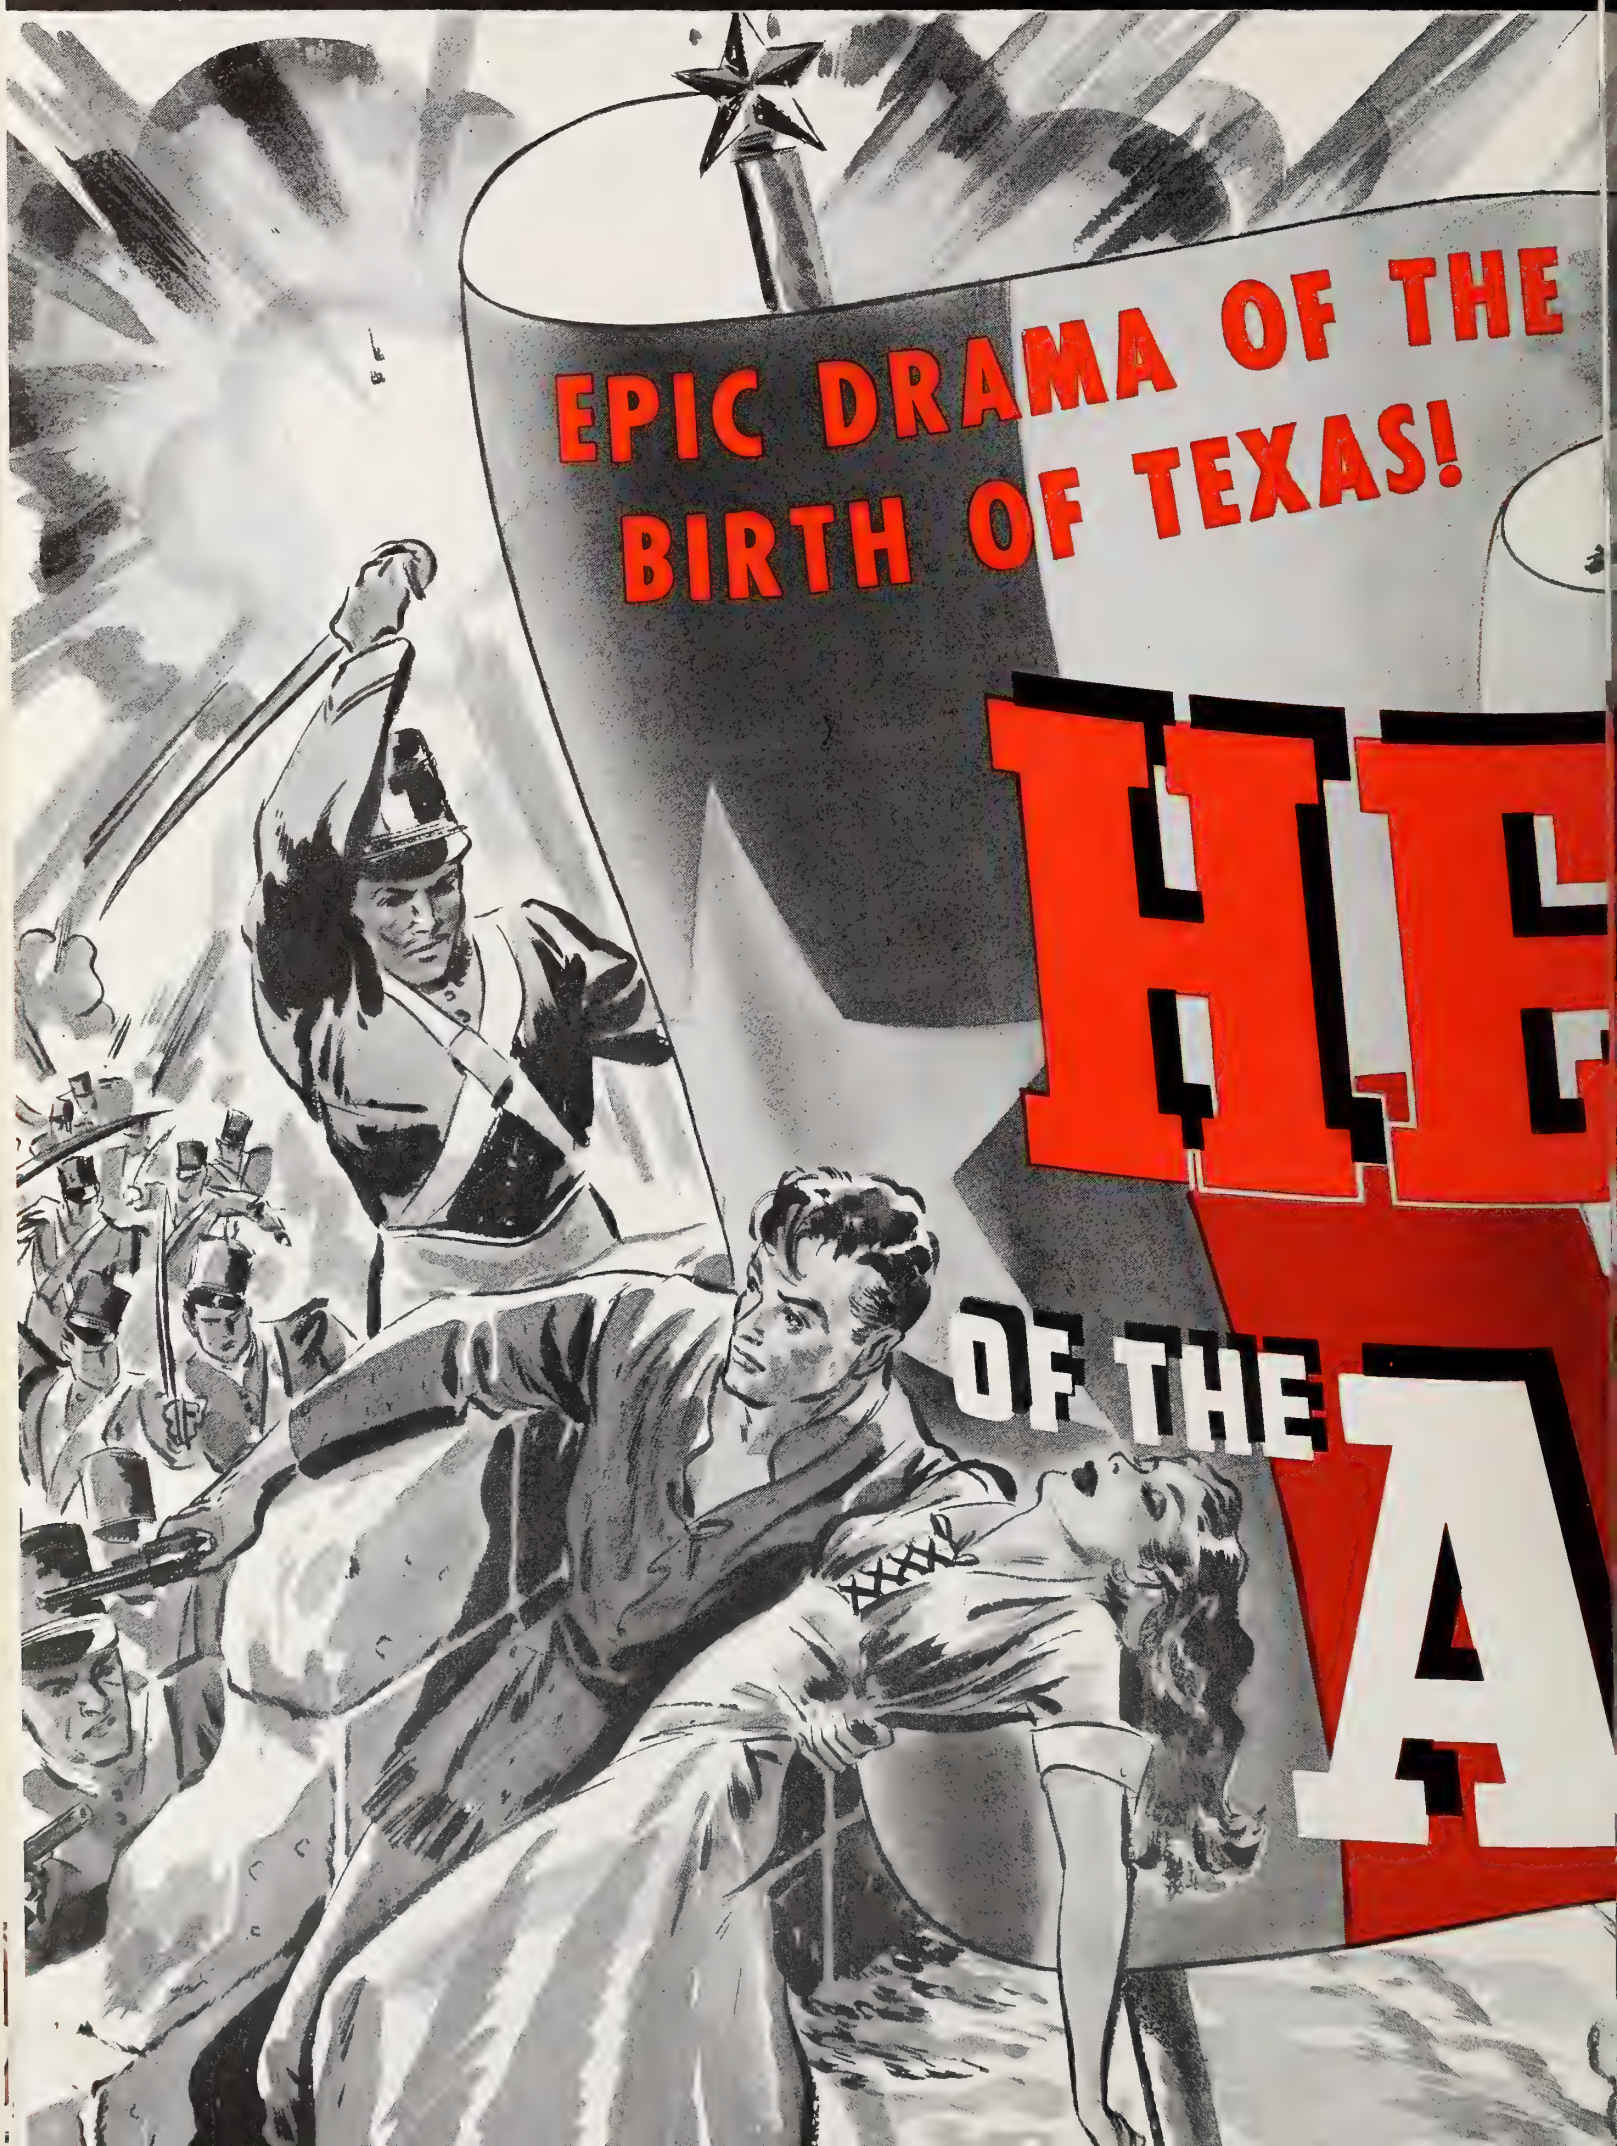
C. Caldwell says, "I don't know whether or not moisture does harm, for the carbons I use have none. I began projecting eleven years ago. The first week my boss brought the Fourth Edition of your then 'Handbook,' and your BETTER THEATRES department up to me, with what amounted to an order to study the book and the department. Dad, I've done that ever since, and I'll say your advice and instruction have always been good. I noted that very first week that you advised drying carbons thoroughly before use. I have held two jobs, each time living close to the theatre. I have the manager order carbons so that there is always a stock ahead. Upon receipt of a new stock I take them home, remove the wrapping and have friend wife bake them for several hours. Then I take them to the projection room, store them, as you have advised, near its ceiling. Then before use a supply is placed in a rack I have built on top of the right hand projector lamphouse. This I know to be fact: whether or not all this is worth while, I have never had one bit of trouble traceable to carbons, whereas in the other theatre, the projectionist of which laughs at me for being so fussy, does complain every once in a while of 'faults in his carbons' that cause his arcs to sputter.

"As to being 'fussy'—well, Dad, I feel that I am supplying something the patrons of this theatre are paying good money for, and it is up to me to give them the best value I can. I am under a manager who is kindly and considerate. I have a wife and three children, a happy home, and I would not exchange all this for a job even in the great New York City Music Hall, so I'm figuring to do eveyrthing I can to make good in the best possible way."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 104

(A) What is a brush, as it applies to a motor or generator? Are there many varieties? What purpose does the brush serve?

(B) What is meant by "brush loss," and to what is it chiefly due?



(C) What is meant by brush pressure and what should be its limits?

(Note: Remember this is a Bluebook school and the answer to all save possibly some special questions can be found in that book.)

FEDERAL AND STATE TAXES REDUCE STAR PAY AS MUCH AS 66 PER CENT

Misleading Character of House Committee Listing Cited in Chart of Approximate Incomes After Taxes

In a presentation similar to that made by MOTION PICTURE HERALD on January 16, 1937, the New York Sun this week called its readers' attention to the fact that the salary figures recently released by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives are misleading, inasmuch as no mention was made of the enormous taxes paid by the individuals whose earnings were disclosed, and published the approximate incomes after making allowances for federal and state taxes. Included in the list of 500 names were those of 40 persons associated with the motion picture industry. The table was announced on page one of the paper with the heading: "Lion's Share of High Salaries Goes to Pay Income Levies."

In the MOTION PICTURE HERALD article of a year ago, it was pointed out that an average of 46 per cent of Hollywood's high bracket salaries goes to the government in the form of income taxes. In the case of the highest paid stars, the article continued, tax payments run as high as 65 per cent.

Speaking of the government's list of figures, the Sun announced: "The report has been criticized in several quarters as giving an incomplete picture. Authorities on tax matters have pointed out especially that no report on income can be wholly accurate unless tax reductions are shown. . . .

"Publicizing income statistics reported to the Federal Government has been a matter of dispute for many years—for as long as there has been an income tax, in fact."

The newspaper emphasized that its table should not be considered exact because individual exemptions were unknown. "But," the article continued, "the table does show with fair accuracy the difference, in some cases enormous, in gross and net earnings. . . ."

In the case of Gary Cooper, whose salary of $370,214 was the highest among film celebrities, tax payments accounted for 66 per cent of the total. State tax levies were figured by the Sun on the basis of New York State's assessments. In reality, many of the motion picture industry's celebrities are legal residents of California but taxes there are considered as high as in New York.

While pointing out that personal deductions were unknown, the newspaper called attention to the fact that the salary figures released by the government represented compensation for services and, in many cases, this was not the total income of the persons involved. It was also noted that no allowance was made for losses "which might to a large extent, in some instances, be offset against salary and similar receipts."

The 40 film names included in the Sun's list had a total income in 1936 of $6,129,296, while the net income totaled only $2,809,678.86. The federal income tax on the entire amount was figured at $2,829,199.46, and the state income tax at $480,342.68.

Persons associated with the motion picture industry were among those named in Washington this week as having received income tax refunds from the Federal Government for the fiscal year ended June 30th, 1937. Typical of the amounts paid by the Government were $9,949 to Adolph Zukor, $4,971 to Ronald Colman; $1,312 to Constance Bennett; $657 to Joyce Regan Brown, and $1,178 to Marion Davies.

Czechoslovak Censor Report

The Czechoslovakian board of censors passed a total of 47 motion pictures having length of 47,270 meters in July, 1937, as compared with 90 pictures and 90,215 meters for the corresponding month of 1936, according to a report to the United States Department of Commerce from Assistant Trade Commissioner Theodore J. Hadraba, in Prague. The classification was: dramas, 7; comedies, 7; short comedies, 1; nature pictures, 4; newsreels, 20; miscellaneous, 8. Of the 14 feature pictures the United States had 6; Germany, 3; Czechoslovakia (domestic), 4, and Austria, 1.

3,250,000 PUBLIC WORKERS WOULD BE TRAINED BY MOTION PICTURES

Making of Experimental Sound Films Is Proposed to Committee of Social Science Research Council

A three point plan for expansion in the use of motion pictures as an aid to training public employees is recommended by John E. Devine in a 114 page report to the Committee on Public Administration of the Social Science Research Council.

Mr. Devine, formerly on the staff of the Civil Service Assembly of the United States and Canada, proposed that:

1. "A continuing research project be established for determining the most valuable subjects for public employe training, and definitely establishing what value motion pictures would carry in such training.

2. "Several experimental sound films be made for training in the police, fire and prison fields.

3. "A national distributing plan be worked out so that these pictures will benefit as many as possible of the 3,250,000 public employees in the United States.

In a foreword to the report Louis Brownlow, chairman of the committee, explained that Mr. Devine had been commissioned to make the report "in response to the increasing evidences of interest in the use of films as an aid in the training of public employees on the part of groups of public officials and educators especially concerned with public service training."

Mr. Devine's study of the field showed that "taking the films which have thus far been used for public employees' training and remodeling them, duplicating them hundreds of times, and depositing them generally over the country will not satisfy the need which now exists for films in public employee training courses."

Mr. Devine also pointed out that very few of the training films in use were actually produced for that purpose. In the case of fire films, he continued, the pictures, for the most part, were made by insurance companies for the education of the public in regard to fire prevention.

Potential Users Cited

Admitting that not all possible uses of the film were cited, Mr. Devine named the United States Employment Service, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Social Security Board, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the United States Army, state and local police and fire departments, prisons, public health and welfare organizations and departments of public works as potential users of employee-training motion pictures.

However, Mr. Devine continued, the path is not clear for the general acceptance of films for training public employees.

"Several conditions exist," he wrote, "which will delay for some time the desired general use of such films.

"One of the most formidable of these impediments is the higher cost of films as compared with other methods of factual presentation. . . .

Equipment Cost Problem

"In addition to the fact that the costs of producing, renting and buying films are serious deterrents to the use of films in public employee training, the cost of projection equipment is really a more serious difficulty. . . .

"Before films can be used as a regular part of in-service training programs, the instructors must be trained in the proper use of instructional films. . . .

"The improper use of films has been one of the stumbling blocks of educational films in the schools. The public service would do well to remember this and when films are introduced, some method of training the instructors should be provided. . . .

"One of the things which has held up the use of films in the schools most seriously and which will more than likely have the same effect in the public service, is the persistence of many persons in thinking of films only as a form of entertainment. . . ."

For the production of an instructional film, Mr. Devine explained that three participants are required: "an expert in the subject matter, a teacher to tell how to present the material with the most desirable pedagogical effect, and a technical motion picture director."

Notes Technical Advance

As for the cost of producing an instructional film, Mr. Devine pointed out that industrial films companies could do a satisfactory job in making public employee training films. He then bemoaned the fact "that instructional films have not been able to benefit directly from the great technical development which the motion pictures have undergone in Hollywood in recent years."

"The large entertainment picture companies," Mr. Devine continued, "have carried the making of films to a high degree of

NEA DONATES FILM TO HELP TEACHERS

Designed to train teachers in methods of progressive education under the activity program of the New York City board of education, a six-reel motion picture showing groups of elementary school children learning by doing has been donated to the city by the metropolitan branch of the visual instruction department of the National Education Association.

Each unit of study is divided into six stages, conference, excursion, research, instruction, dramatization, and sharing of experiences.

The film was produced on 16 mm. film and directed by H. Threlkeld Edwards, a member of the visual instruction department of the NEA.

Journal of Educational Sociology Devotes Entire Issue to Articles on the Motion Picture in Instruction

Educators' increasing interest in motion pictures as an educational medium was evinced when the Journal of Educational Sociology devoted an entire issue of the monthly publication to the "educational aspects of the motion pictures."

In nine articles, the majority of which were written by educators, were discussed the various ways in which films are looked upon by teachers and professors as an adjunct to their profession.

Titles of the articles included: "The Film as an Agency of British-American Understanding," "Interest of the League of Nations in Motion Pictures in Relation to Child Welfare," "Civic Education and the Motion Pictures," "Educational Possibilities of Motion Pictures," "Extending the Use of Motion Pictures for Physical Education," "Motion Pictures: A Social and Educational Force, "Rescuing Civilization Through Motion Pictures," and "Motion Picture Appreciation in the New Haven Schools."

Chief British Source

In the first, a copyrighted article written by Frank Darvall of the English Speaking Union of the British Empire, it was announced:

"American films are the chief British source of interest and knowledge so far as the American people and their history, country and life are concerned. . . .

"Indeed the tempo of British life itself is being altered by the impact of the United States, an impact which would be far less powerful upon Britain were it not for the domination of the American film over the British screen."

Mr. Darvall continued by pointing out that the British people have gained a wrong impression of the United States through films and added that "even radio and education, the two great propaganda agencies in Britain which are not compelled to give the public what it thinks it wants, are powerless to correct the wrong impression. . . ."

1,000 Schools Equipped

The article also explained that about 1,000 British educational institutions are equipped with film projectors. "On the whole," Mr. Darvall continued, "British education today is proceeding along the same lines that it would have done had the radio and the talking film never been invented."

After a comparison of the films produced in Britain and those produced in America, Mr. Darvall concluded with the observation:

"It is, however, not often recognized how internationally important films are. Nor is it fully realized that the film, as the most powerful current propaganda medium, to some extent sets the level for the press and even, in some countries, the radio. These vital facts cannot, however, be overlooked by British people who are conscious of the vast influence of American films upon their view of America and upon their life as a whole."

The publication's second article, written by Ruth Bloodgood of the children's bureau, United States Department of Labor, was based upon a report submitted to the League of Nations by the Advisory Committee on Social Questions.

The committee gathered replies to questions submitted to various governments and, Miss Bloodgood wrote, "the following points were listed as those which were found to be emphasized throughout these replies:

"1. There is not sufficient general control over the admission of children and young persons to ordinary cinemas, so as to prevent them from seeing unsuitable films. . . .

"2. As regards the provision of special performances for children, the small output of films suitable for this purpose and the consequent difficulty in obtaining them in the different countries, should again be emphasized. . . .

"3. The types of films which appeal to children and young persons. Here the reports show that, as a general rule, the films that appeal to children up to the age 14 are different from those that appeal to persons between the ages of 14 and 18."

Commends Documentary Films

In the article "Civic Education and the Motion Picture," Thomas Baird of the General Post Office Film Unit, London, explained that progress in education for citizenship is slow and then pointed to several possibilities such as "school journeys," and "bringing the newspaper into the school." Mr. Baird discounted these, though, as having the drawback of having to accept the material "as it comes along." He then hailed the documentary films as "a new approach to civic education," and related the history of documentaries in England.

In summary, Mr. Baird said schools "must demand of government departments films dealing with agriculture, labor, transport, trade, health, and housing."

"Local authorities," he continued, "must come forward with an account of their stewardship in films of local affairs, on the gas departments, on the fire departments, on electricity, water, and police and all the hundred and one activities supported by public money. Industries—steel, timber, oil, automobiles, and the thousand others which comprise the world that is waiting for the children now in school—must be coaxed to tell their stories."

Dr. Mark A. May's address before the National Education Association convention in Detroit was the fourth article. The address was reported on in detail in MOTION PICTURE HERALD July 3, 1937.

Used in Physical Education

In the next article, Jay B. Nash of New York University, explained the work of his committee on physical education in reviewing pictures for their physical educational value. "The members of the committee felt," Mr. Nash explained, "that the films to be ranked high should have instructional value rather than be merely entertaining, although it was realized that these two elements are not in conflict with each other."

Marion C. Sheridan of New Haven High School commented in an article on "Rescuing Civilization Through Motion Pictures," that "apparently civilization needs to be rescued, and it is to be lost or saved through the cinema. . . ."

"The way to rescue civilization by way of motion picture," she continued, "would be sharpen in every possible way the perceptions of those who attend, so that they will be critical of what they see and cognizant of and responsive to the best when it is projected before them on the so-called 'silver screen.'"

Donald A. Eldridge, also of New Haven High School, in his article "Motion Picture Appreciation in New Haven Schools," told of the formation and operation of a motion picture appreciation group in the Connecticut city.

Educators Tell Of Films' Uses

perfection. Their directors, cameramen, sound experts, laboratories and their studios are the best in the world, but instructional films have not been able to take advantage of all these things. It has always been assumed that the cost of making an instructional film in Hollywood would be so great as to remove such a procedure from consideration.

In addition to the prohibitive costs of Hollywood productions, there has been an even more formidable hindrance to the making of instructional films with the facilities of the entertainment companies, and that is the sometimes bitter antagonism of movie producers to any but entertainment films. They have voiced their opinion time and again to the effect that films should not go into the schools in any form, either educational or entertainment. They declare that every film shown in a school, no matter if it be an exposition of the circulatory system of a frog, takes customers away from the neighborhood movie houses."

Musart Production Plans

Musart Film Productions, Inc. is preparing a series of 12 short subjects and two features for the 1938-'39 season to be produced at the Producers' Service Studios at Ridgefield, N. J. WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AWFUL TRUTH, THE: Cary Grant, Irene Dunne—Had a good house and that was something. This pleased all, and to hear all the chuckles and laughter—good hearty laughs, too—gave me a feeling or glow I hadn't had for some time. This picture is all they say it is. Tell 'em how good it is. Push it hard and it will make up for some of those punk nights. The print we received was rather noisy and one reel had seen much better days, but nobody paid any attention to it. Too busy enjoying it, I guess. Running time, 92 minutes. Played January 9-11.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

AWFUL TRUTH, THE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant—Here was one of the biggest disappointments in some time. We gave it the gun as for advertising but did no business. We cannot blame the picture as Tilbury has the most relief it's ever had. We are quite convinced it will take some beating to beat this comedy.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

DEVIL'S PLAYGROUND: Richard Dix, Dolores Del Rio—Here is a bang-up picture worth selling. A real submarine story. Played it weekend. As times are very hard here we did not do normal business but it certainly was a fine picture.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

GAME THAT KILLS, THE: Charles Quigley, Rita Hayworth—Good story, well made. Hockey excellent but the male lead terrible. He may play hockey but he cannot act.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

IT'S ALL YOURS: Francis Lederer, Madeleine Carroll—Entertaining comedy drama that pleased a fair midweek audience.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason Mich. Small town patronage.

LOST HORIZON: Ronald Colman, Jane Wyatt, John Howard—This picture had much to offer in the way of being different and the moral of the picture gave the patron something to think about. It is a hit, Frank Capra is excellent in directing it. Running time, 97 minutes. Played December 25-27.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

PLATINUM BLONDE: Jean Harlow, Loretta Young—Received excellent print on this. Story is different and we liked it. Played December 31-January 1.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

RIO GRANDE RANGER: Bob Allen, Iris Meredith—There are too many good westerns to play this one. Acting poor. Singing pathetic. Know Columbia can do better than this.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

TRAPPED BY G-MEN: Jack Holt, Wynne Gibson—The best Jack Holt picture in a long time. I still think if they give this man Holt a story, he would be a better box office than a lot of these socalled actors. Running time, 62 minutes. Played January 1-2.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

First National

ALCATRAZ ISLAND: John Litel, Ann Sheridan—A grim picture of the gangster era, satisfactory for weekend picture. Action and drama with some few bits of comedy in the jail on the big rock.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ALCATRAZ ISLAND: John Litel, Ann Sheridan—This is an extraordinary piece of merchandise, and should be handled that way. Picture can be made into a natural, properly exploited. They will go for it. It's above program. Running time, 65 minutes.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

BACK IN CIRCULATION: Pat O'Brien, Joan Blondell—A dandy newspaper story with Pat O'Brien as the hard boiled editor and Joan Blondell as the equally hard boiled reporter. A train wreck, murder train and romance with plenty of comedy makes a very satisfactory show for the small town at least. This one pleased. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 31-January 2.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box-office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

MR. DODD TAKES THE AIR: Kenny Baker—An entertaining comedy. Kenny Baker seems to click with the younger set.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SH! THE OCTUPUS: Hugh Herbert, Allen Jenkins—Just a lot of horses. Comment varied. Running time, 60 minutes.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

SUBMARINE D-1: Pat O'Brien, George Brent—Excellent. Entertainment with a capital E. Good story, swell acting. And a top cast. Warner's can be proud of this one. Is educational and will appeal to women. It will come up to anything you want to say for it. It's up to you to go get it. Running time, 100 minutes. Played January 2.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart. Mich. Small town patronage.

SUBMARINE D-1: Pat O'Brien, George Brent—Good. Plenty of interest and audience appeal. Good comedy and will stand up in any spot for extended runs. Running time, 90 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

TALENT SCOUT: Donald Woods, Jeanne Madden—Just another program picture built exclusively for the lower half of duals. If an exhibitor does not play double bills, he must play these weak subjects alone and try to build them up with good shorts. Running time, 62 minutes. Played December 29-30.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THAT CERTAIN WOMAN: Bette Davis, Ian Hunter, Henry Fonda—Was all set to give this one a black eye as we had quite a few walkouts and personally I did not blame them. However, have talked to some other patrons who told me they liked the show so will just have to report it as one of those shows that some liked and some did not. Not nearly as good as "Marked Woman." Ian Hunter may be a matinee idol in London but he is quite the reverse here. Why do we have to be afflicted by these English accent stars? Running time, 93 minutes. Played January 8-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Grand National

MYSTERY OF THE HOODED HORSEMAN: Tex Ritter, Iris Meredith—These Ritters are good westerns but lack class. Our patrons complain about the overall pants Tex wears in most all of his pictures, and ask us why he doesn't get a cowboy outfit. Snap out of it, Tex, and show the boys a real cowboy outfit.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BETWEEN TWO WOMEN: Virginia Bruce, Franchot Tone, Maureen O'Sullivan, Cliff Edwards—An excellent story of a city hospital with its suspense, tragedy and pathos. A fine cast. Wish Cliff Edwards would get more and bigger parts for he is plenty good. Very satisfactory picture. Running time, 89 minutes. Played January 12-13.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BIG CITY: Spencer Tracy, Luise Rainer—Another fine feature from Leo. Spencer Tracy gives his usual excellent performance while Luise Rainer is perfect as the Rumanian girl. A little hard to understand her but she can talk with her eyes. Charley Grapewin is very good while the fight between the taxi drivers and the prize fighters is the highlight of the show. Entertainment in this one is varied enough to please them all. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 14-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BIG CITY: Spencer Tracy, Luise Rainer—Saying that it more than pleased is apt but trite. If I had gotten the word around that in this picture Jack Dempsey and about a dozen other wellknown boxers and wrestlers "mop up" a gang of about a hundred taxicab drivers in the most sensational mass fight of its kind ever filmed I would have made some money. But I neglected to study the Herald "Showmen's Review" with cast of characters, etc. Small town fellows, be thou not also as the ass, which is void of understanding. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 6-7.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

DOUBLE WEDDING: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Did not expect the usual Powell-Loy hit but was quite agreeably surprised. Had heard that is was silly and too much slapstick. As a matter of fact, if they had left out the last five minutes of the picture, it would have been grand. Our patrons sure did get a real kick out of it. These two stars are grand anyway. Running time, 87 minutes. Played January 9-10.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GOOD EARTH, THE: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—An outstanding production that follows the book in closer detail than any picture I have played. Business at least average but brought in class of trade seldom seen in the theatre. There is a definite need of a few pictures of this type every season to raise the general standard of entertainment. Played January 5-7.—D. F. Smith, Pella Theatre, Pella, Iowa. General patronage.

GOOD EARTH, THE: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—Well accepted by Sunday audience. Good business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOOD OLD SOAK: Wallace Beery, Betty Furness—A dandy picture that had everything but box office appeal. Times was too hard for them to come out. Just made film rental.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HELL DIVERS: Clark Gable, Wallace Beery—Good midweek business on this reissue.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LAST GANGSTER, THE: Edward G. Robinson—Little Caesar sinks his teeth into this role of the Last Gangster, but I hope that this does not portend an era of the gangster pictures again.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LIVE, LOVE AND LEARN: Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell—Just fair, that is all that can be said for it. Another of these artists themes that is rather trite in treatment and it is just another program picture at a rental that is too much for what you get as entertainment. It is not bad, but it caused no comment either good, or bad. It was just accepted as one of those that come on the program. One of those that will not do business the succeeding days.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Myrna Loy, Clark Gable, William Powell—This is a playback of this picture, one of three that Metro has included on the 1938 contract, and it is one exception to the usual lack of business, for it did better than average, and I say that it puts some of the stuff that we are getting today to shame. Skeptical of it for the reason that so many that come back do not register this is worth bringing back in any theatre. We noted that there were a couple of short sequences but not enough to be noticed by the audience.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

and well produced with a human story running through picture. James Stewart and Brown very good in their roles, but as with all the service pictures it runs true to form that football is the main theme and this comes to us sixty days behind the season and that is not so good. Producers should time their pictures to hit the season. They would have a better chance at the box office. They don't want pictures that stress football out of season. This is the only criticism to the picture as it is very good otherwise—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NAVY, BLUE AND GOLD: Lionel Barrymore, Robert Young, James Stewart—Swell football picture. One of the best service pictures ever produced. Will come up to anything you may say for it. Running time, 94 minutes.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

TARZAN THE APE MAN: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—Good print. Business off. Maureen O'Sullivan not so good in this. Think I'll cut out return engagements.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

TOPPER: Roland Young, Constance Bennett—Very fine comedy drama. Pleased 100 per cent.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WAY OUT WEST: Laurel and Hardy—I used this with a number of shorts for a New Year's Eve show, and it was entirely satisfactory.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Monogram

ROMANCE OF THE ROCKIES: Tom Keene, Beryl Wallace—Another better than average western. However, if Tom would don a cowboy outfit instead of street clothes and a sombrero, the customers would like him better. Played December 24.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

ARTISTS AND MODELS: Jack Benny, Gail Patdick, Martha Raye—Good musical if they had left out that Martha Raye specialty. That didn't help her a bit in this town. The rest of the picture was extra good. Running time, 97 minutes. Played January 2-4.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BARRIER, THE: Leo Carrillo, Jean Parker—Fine picture that failed to do the business it should. Plenty of action, and splendid performances by entire cast. Beautiful outdoor backgrounds. Date played, December 16-17, 1937.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

BARRIER, THE: Leo Carrillo, Jean Parker, James Ellison, Robert Barrat, Otto Kruger, Andy Clyde—Just a swell picture. When Paramount makes an out of door drama they are the tops and this is no exception. Ellison is a trifle over-shadowed with such stars as Carrillo, Parker, Barrat, Kruger and Clyde. Running time, 85 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

BLOSSOMS ON BROADWAY: Edward Arnold, Shirley Ross—Absolutely the poorest picture we have every played. Skip it regardless of what you have to take in its place. Date played, December 23, 1937.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

BORN TO THE WEST: John Wayne, John Mack Brown—Very good action western that pleased our biggest Saturday crowd since October 1st. John Wayne is still a big favorite here and we wish he would appear more often. Date played, January 8, 1938.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

BORN TO THE WEST: John Wayne—A very good western. Pleased all, even those who don't especially go for westerns. Wish all Paramount pictures were as good as their outdoor and westerns. Running time. 58 minutes. Played January 7-8.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

EBB TIDE: Oscar Homolka, Frances Farmer—One of the best shows of the year, and the color is beautiful. Had many favorable comments, and those who failed to see it expressed their regrets for days after hearing about it from others. Date played, December 20-21 1937.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

EBB TIDE: Frances Farmer, Oscar Homolka—I played this picture on Bargain nights at 5c and 15c and had an excellent crowd on it. The color was very beautiful and was well worth the price of admission, but the customers couldn't get any sense out of the story. It wasn't well connected but had marvelous acting in it. Running time, 94 minutes. Played January 4-5.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

EBB TIDE: Oscar Homolka, Frances Farmer, Ray Milland—Paramount's color tale of the South Seas, from Robert Louis Stevenson's novel, drew and pleased. It's a little violent in spots, but our patrons seemed to find it a welcome change from mild musicals and "nut" pictures. Whole cast splendid, and for the comedy role Barry Fitzgerald should not be overlooked. Date played, January 16-17.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, South Dakota. Small town patronage.

EVERY DAY'S A HOLIDAY: Mae West, Edmund Lowe—Best Mae West picture to date, and much cleaner than the others. Business fair, but believe the radio broadcast cost us some business, as several said they did not care to see it after hearing the broadcast. This may help business in some localities.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

HIGH, WIDE AND HANDSOME: Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott—One of the most satisfying shows we have played, despite the unfavorable comments we have seen and heard. Holiday patrons were more than pleased and didn't fail to tell us on the way out. Played December 25.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

HIGH, WIDE AND HANDSOME: Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott—I didn't have a very good turn out on this picture but is seemed to please the majority of the patrons. There were a few that didn't like Irene Dunne in her role and Randolph Scott in his. It can be a good drawing when well advertised. Running time, 112 minutes. Played January 7-8.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

HIGH, WIDE AND HANDSOME: Irene Dunne—I kinda hate to report on this because I'll have to differ from nearly all the other reports I've read. I thought it was fine (and business fair) although have seen Miss Dunne do better.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

HIGH, WIDE AND HANDSOME: Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott—I can't understand why this picture received so much panning by some of the exhibitors. I have never played a picture which gave more satisfaction to my patrons. As for myself, I can find no fault with it. In spite of very bad weather, we did better than average. Running time, 114 minutes. Played January 8-9.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

I MET HIM IN PARIS: Claudette Colbert—A pleasing light comedy. Good Sunday bill.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Bob Burns, Martha Raye—Played engagement on Bargain Night. One of Paramount's best.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

NIGHT CLUB SCANDAL: John Barrymore, Charles Bickford, Lynne Overman—A clever little mystery drama with Overman again stealing the honors. The picture was very good but the title terrible. Am afraid if all situations are like ours that this would have to go on a double bill, as not quite heavy enough to stand alone. Would like Oakie and Overman in a picture together to see who would win the picture stealing contest. Running time, 65 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

ROSE BOWL: Eleanore Whitney, Tom Brown—Played this on January 1st. Fine little program. Bad weather caused bum business.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RANGE: Bing Crosby, Bob Burns, Martha Raye—I picked this old picture for a tough pre-holiday date and it did fairly well.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHE'S NO LADY: Ann Dvorak, John Trent—Was agreeably pleased with this program. Had good story and held the interest. Good cast. Running time, 62 minutes. Played January 5-6.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SOULS AT SEA: Gary Cooper, George Raft—I played this picture day before and on Christmas day and did fair business on it. Everyone seemed well satisfied and patrons are asking for more Gary Cooper and George Raft pictures. Running time, 92 minutes. Played December 24-25.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

THIS WAY PLEASE: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable—Very pleasing show. Had more favorable comments than on many "supposed-to-be" big pictures. Ned Sparks always gets a laugh here, and Mary Livingston was very good. Of course, Betty Grable was also very good.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

THIS WAY PLEASE: Charles "Buddy" Rogers, Betty Grable, Rufe Davis, Jim and Marion Jordan (Fibber McGee and Molly), Mary Livingston, Ned Sparks—This is a swell little musical. That Grable girl should go places as she is certainly an eyeful. There were aboslutely no catch songs in this picture but McGee and Molly, Sparks and Mary Livingston carry the burden to a successful finish. They could have left Rogers out and done just as well. Running time, 73 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

Republic

BIG SHOW, THE: Gene Autry—Extra good. Best western in months. Thanks, Mr. Autry.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

HEART OF THE ROCKIES: Three Mesquiteers—Another good western in this series. Max Terhune and Elmer are very popular with our patrons. We have yet to run a bad western with the Three Mesquiteers. Thanks boys.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

LADY BEHAVE: Sally Eilers, Neil Hamilton—Our patrons pronounced it very poor. Personally did not see it but the box office said not so hot. It's no use, we can't get them in to see any features except the majors. Date played, January 7-8, 1938.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

MANHATTAN MERRY-GO-ROUND: Phil Regan, Ann Dvorak—A great picture for young folks. We played this Sunday to a good business.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MERRY-GO-ROUND: Phil Regan, Ann Dvorak—Very good picture. Pleased about eighty per cent. Personally consider it much better than the Hit Parade. Hard to get the patrons in on Republic features, but this one drew better than any we have played. Gene Autry is featured in the advertising but does only a small bit in the picture; which is misleading. Date played, December 27-28, 1937.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama.

MANHATTAN MERRY-GO-ROUND: Phil Regan, Ann Dvorak, Leo Carrillo, Ted Lewis and His Orchestra, Cab Calloway and His Cotton Club Orchestra, Joe DiMaggio—This is fine entertainment for the masses. Although there are enough stars in this production to draw every conceivable class, the names that really pull are: Phil Regan, Cab Calloway, Joe DiMaggio. We overstepped our usual budget in this picture by increasing ads in the newspapers 50 per cent and by placing ten 24 sheets in unusual spots. Also used quite satisfactorily a Tootsie Roll tieup. Business best yet on any Republic picture. Was originally booked in for four days and they came in droves so I was forced to hold over three more days. Go to town on this one and you will be pleasantly surprised. Business topped many of the major class A's. Played this picture against tough opposition.—Paul Kessler, Suffolk Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

RIDE RANGER, RIDE: Gene Autry—Gene still pulling in the boys and girls from the tobacco belt. However he does not have the drag he had a few months ago. One thing Autry has made clear is that "horse operas" have to live up to the term and have some good cowboy or hillbilly tunes. Played January 7-8.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Rural patronage.

ROUND-UP TIME IN TEXAS: Gene Autry—Very poor picture. Business not so good.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SPRINGTIME IN THE ROCKIES: Gene Autry, Polly Rowles—The best Gene Autry to date. It has everything to make a good show for any type audience. We played this one Friday and Saturday to give the people in town a chance to see it, and they came out and were well pleased. More power to Gene Autry and his old pal, Smiley Burnette.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO-Radio

DAMSEL IN DISTRESS: Fred Astaire, Burns & Allen—Very disappointing picture that many walked out on. Too much Burns & Allen, and they are very unpopular here. Astaire needs Ginger Rogers, as he is no star by himself. Burns & Allen detracted from the picture just as they do from all other pictures they appear in.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

DAMSEL IN DISTRESS: Fred Astaire, Burns & Allen—Great from any angle. Plenty laughs. Audience appeal and Gracie drags them in. Good for extended runs. Running time, 99 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

DAMSEL IN DISTRESS, A: Fred Astaire, Burns & Allen—Satisfactory. Some good dance sequences and story that carried the picture through to a logical ending and of course Burns & Allen have a certain following and they are one set of radio stars that did not disappoint on the screen. Incidentally, this picture is the latest recording and the first that they have sent. We found that on the sensitive system that is Mirrophonic the settings were inaccurate and it followed there was to much volume.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

FIT FOR A KING: Joe E. Brown, Helen Mack—Used on Bank Night so cannot say as to drawing. Audience seemed to enjoy Joe as a sap reporter, who becomes wiser, and his wild bike and hayrack ride brought down the house—almost literally.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, South Dakota. Small town patronage.

HIGH FLYERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—No kicks, but few compliments. Wheeler excellent, Woolsey fair. Marjorie Lord attractive. Lacks the fast, furious and dangerous climax necessary and traditional to this pair. Lupe Velez detracts from the picture every time she wiggles hips or torso and listen, RKO, this sort of stuff may be paramount with some producers but need not be paramount with you, so if you must copy feminine traits and types, look for the attractive ones. Wheeler and Woolsey have always been tops with me and I hope there is some mistake about this being their last. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 8-9.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Duback, La. Small town and rural patronage.

HIGH FLYERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Typical Wheeler and Woolsey. Very funny and well liked. Business o. k.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HITTING A NEW HIGH: Lily Pons, Jack Oakie—Good show but no business. Must be on account of too much operatic singing by Miss Pons. Too bad so few people really appreciate it. Plenty of comedy in this picture and all who saw it were well pleased. Date played, January 10-11, 1938.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

MUSIC FOR MADAME: Nino Martini, Joan Fontaine, Alan Hale—The best little picture that we have played in a long time. If RKO had had a proven female star with Martini, this picture would have been recognized by all who played it as a top flight picture. Martini is wonderful, with a grand voice and good acting. Alan Hale, however, with his comedy part nearly steals the show. After seeing this picture think it good enough for any day. Running time, 75 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

QUICK MONEY: Fred Stone, Dorothy Moore, Gordon Jones—Fair program comedy drama that pleased mildly.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, South Dakota. Small town patronage.

SHE'S GOT EVERYTHING: Ann Sothern, Gene Raymond—Good program picture with enough comedy to please everyone. Our holiday patrons liked it. Date played, December 30-31.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Alabama. Small town and rural patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BORNEO: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—A very interesting feature for a double feature program.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DANGER—LOVE AT WORK: Jack Haley, Ann Sothern—Played to average business on midweek spot. A lot of the clever wisecracks are lost on the farmer folks. They just won't take farce comedy seriously. The town crowd went for it in a big way. Played January 12-13.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Rural patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—We did not believe these reissues would do any outstanding business but were very agreeably surprised. Are not required to play any more of these but apparently the fans want them. So what? Played January 7-8.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

HEIDI: Shirley Temple, Jean Hersholt—Just a natural for my patronage. The schools turn out at 10 o'clock in morning, just for a showing for them only. Business the best I have had, including the night I open my theatre, November 18th. I have played all of Shirley Temple but "Heidi" was the best performance of Jean Hersholt. Was grand. Give us more, good old Fox. Running time, 85 minutes. Played January 13-14.—Miss Ouida Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Texas. Small town patronage.

LOVE IS NEWS: Tyrone Power, Loretta Young, Don Ameche—Very good action picture with three swell stars heading the cast. Received much favorable comment. Running time, 78 minutes. Played December 31-January 1.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

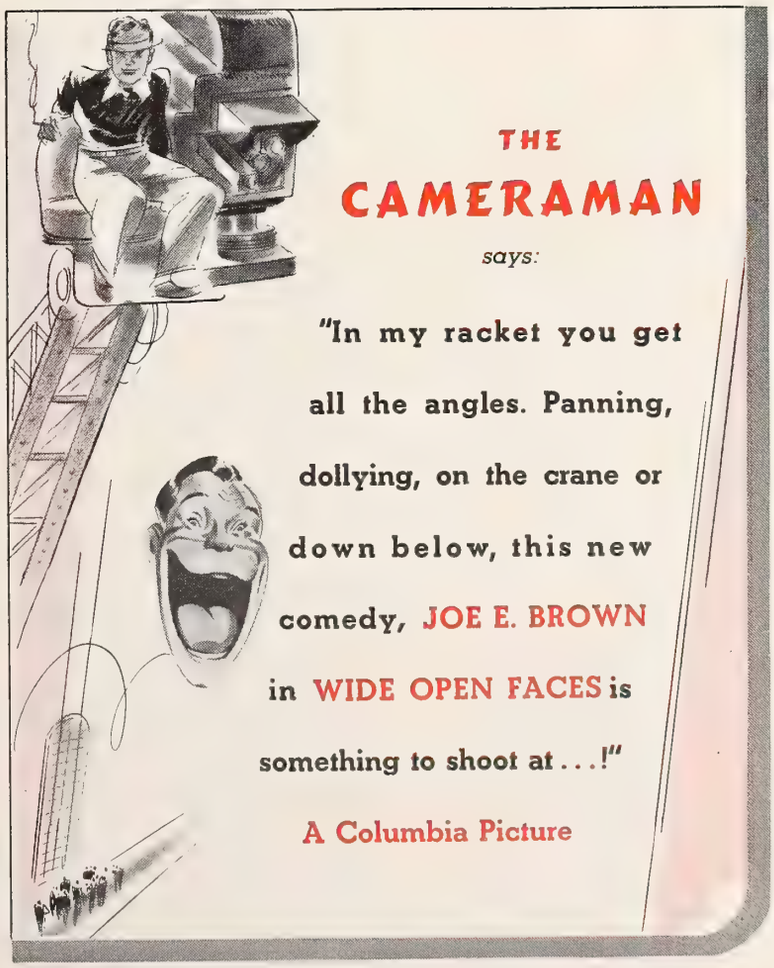
LOVE UNDER FIRE: Loretta Young, Don Ameche—This drew fairly well and pleased much better than I had expected. Plot is strong, but confusing on two points. First, two necklaces—one jewel, the other pearl, ought to be bracelet and necklace for better differentiation. Second, heroine finally clears herself in a dozen words barely audible so that even after seeing it three times I do not know just why she was not really a thief. But it is so well acted, so exciting, and so funny (thanks to Borrah Minevitch and Gang) that it ought to please anywhere. Many compliments here. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 13-14.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

OFF TO THE RACES: Jed Prouty, Shirley Deane—This satisfied a fair sized midweek audience.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SEVENTH HEAVEN: Simone Simon, James Stewart—A grand picture holding just as much appeal as the original. Simone just as appealing as Gaynor, and Stewart made a much finer "Chico" than Farrell. Running time, 102 minutes. Played December 26-27.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THIN ICE: Sonja Henie, Tyrone Power—This feature had been shown in every direction and for that reason was a complete box office flop. I consider this just about half as good as "One in a Million." The skating and skiing numbers are fine. Scenery beautiful but only a fair story. Joan Davis is excellent. Don't see why she does not get bigger and better roles. Raymond Walburn and Arthur Treacher are also very good. This will no doubt be OK if run early but not if it follows every other theatre in the dust bowl. Running time, 78 minutes. Played January 12-13.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

THIN ICE: Sonja Henie, Tyrone Power—Weather held business down to average, but audience reaction was gratifying. Joan Davis' acts drew many laughs of the guffaw type which seemed to emanate from less discriminating patrons, but she has her possibilities, and would be funny in a runaway toboggan act with climax where toboggan shoots under traditional freight train. The big skating sequences can stand more light. Hats off to real contributions to entertainment in these Sonja pictures. Running time, 78 minutes. Played January 10-11.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.



WAKE UP AND LIVE: Ben Bernie, Alice Faye—Just the right kind of picture for Christmas. Played late but not many had seen it so what's the difference if they get real entertainment such as this? Running time, 91 minutes. Played December 24-25.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

YOU CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING: Alice Faye, Ritz Brothers, Louise Hovick, Don Ameche—Another excellent musical from the Fox lot, introducing Gypsy Rose Lee (Louise Hovick). This is a fast moving, tuneful feature with the Ritz Brothers clowning their way throughout. Alice Faye is fast becoming "tops" in the musical comedy field and her rendition of the Gordon-Revel song hits is a treat to hear. Don Ameche and Tony Martin come through with excellent performances. Box office in capital letters. Running time, 95 minutes. Played January 15.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

United Artists

52ND STREET: Ian Hunter, Pat Paterson, Kenny Baker, Leo Carrillo—I must enter this column for the first time to write a few words on this production. It was with some misgivings that I prepared to play this after our star critic of the Northwest had panned it plenty and allowed it one star. It proves that you never can tell, as the picture is swell and nearly every one of my patrons thought so too. Leo Carrillo steals the show but remember, this Baker boy knows how to sing. Did not make film rental but no fault of United Artists as it was sold reasonable. My trouble was twenty below zero weather and holiday dates. Played December 25-26.—S. N. Roden, Ulen Theatre, Ulen, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

52ND STREET: Ian Hunter, Pat Paterson—Good entertainment for the whole family. In any spot extended runs. Running time, 80 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

PRISONER OF ZENDA, THE: Ronald Colman, Madeleine Carroll—A perfectly produced picture that did just fair. There is still plenty of prejudice against period or costume pictures in the farm belt. Played January 9-10.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Rural patronage.

PRISONER OF ZENDA, THE: Ronald Colman, Madeleine Carroll, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—A grand Bank Night picture and our audience liked it very much.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

STELLA DALLAS: Barbara Stanwyck, John Boles, Anne Shirley—One of the best that pleased all.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

AS GOOD AS MARRIED: John Boles, Doris Nolan—This pleased and received many favorable comments. Played on prize night. Stars fine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

CARNIVAL QUEEN: Dorothea Kent, Robert Wilcox—A nice little program picture. Booked this one on the advice of Universal salesman and he didn't do me wrong. This little blond Kent girl certainly put the picture over and with lots of laughs. Action, comedy and romance make this ideal for the small town. Played to satisfactory business. Played January 4-5.—S. N. Roden, Ulen Theatre, Ulen, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL WITH IDEAS, A: Wendy Barrie, Walter Pidgeon—A very clever farce comedy and enjoyed by our double feature audience.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GIRL WITH IDEAS, A: Wendy Barrie, Kent Taylor, Walter Pidgeon—Just fair. Nothing to get het-up over. Running time, 66 minutes.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

LADY FIGHTS BACK, THE: Irene Hervey, Kent Taylor—A very weak sister. We even had complaints on this on a double feature bill. This kind of picture kills the business.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LADY FIGHTS BACK, THE: Irene Hervey, Kent Taylor—Pleasing programer. It will satisfy. Running time, 58 minutes. Played January 5.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

MERRY-GO-ROUND OF 1938: Bert Lahr, Alice Brady, Mischa Auer, Jimmy Savo, Billy House—Just a lot of nonsense, but they liked it. Bert Lahr is tops as a comedian. The masses will go for it. Lahr's woodchopper's number is a knockout. You'll have to see the picture several times to get it all. Picture will have to be played up different in advertising to offset lack of big star names. Played December 26.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE A SWEETHEART: Alice Faye, George Murphy—It's a sweetheart. The best musical we've played for some time. Picture starts off fast, and continues at a fast pace through to the end. Pleased everybody, and as far as we are concerned made one swell New Year's show. It starts with B. It's a honey. You'll get this last crack when you see the picture. Running time, 95 minutes. Played January 1.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

FIRST LADY: Kay Francis, Preston Foster—I played this picture on my Bargain Nights at 5c and 15c and people got up and walked out before the picture was half over. Kay Francis has slipped and she needs an altogether different type of role to play. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 14-15.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

LIFE OF EMILE ZOLA, THE: Paul Muni, Gale Sondergaard—I played this picture on regular Bargain Nights but put the prices up to 10c-30c and had an excellent crowd. I heard many comments on the picture and not one kick about the picture. The picture should click in any town when properly advertised. Running time, 116 minutes. Played December 21-22.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

SINGING MARINE, THE: Dick Powell, Doris Weston—Very good but am sorry I played it, because it cost me too much. No profit.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

TOVARICH: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer—Personally thought this to be a fine picture. However, there were many divided comments, some not liking it at all and others thinking it very good. You may always depend on these two stars to make a good show. Boyer is very hard to understand, which is the greatest drawback on this one. Outside of that, if you can get them in I think most everyone will be satisfied. Business terrible but always is at this time of year. Played January 8-9.—S. N. Roden, Ulen Theatre, Ulen, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

VARSITY SHOW: Dick Powell, Lane Sisters—Too long for any kind of a show. Could use only a News and get through two shows. Drew a little extra business, no one raved especially, but audience seemed satisfied. Running time, 120 minutes. Date played, January 9-10.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, South Dakota. Small town patronage.

WINE, WOMEN AND HORSES: Barton MacLane, Ann Sheridan—Not a special but pleased much better than some of the specials. Good cast and interesting story. Running time, 64 minutes. Played December 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

COMMUNITY SING: These are going over fine. We get a few stooge singers in the audiences and really put them over.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

DISORDER IN THE COURT: Three Stooges—We are repeating several of these comedies and they are going over big. Nothing gets the laughs on Saturday like the Stooges. Hard to get the kids out as they want to see them two or three times.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

GRIPS, GRUNTS AND GROANS: 3 Stooges—A slapstick comedy that will have your patrons rolling in the aisles. There is no getting away from it, these Stooges have what it takes when it comes to comedy. There's a knock-down, drag-out finish to this which is worth the price of admission alone. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PICNIC: Color Rhapsodies—A dandy colored cartoon. Our audience howled with laughter at the caricatures of the movie stars.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

ICE CUT UPS: New World of Sport Series—A brilliant display of the different types of winter sports. Very entertaining.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SCRAPPY'S PONY: Scrappy Cartoons—Not so good. The cartoon field has much better cartoons than this one.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SKIING IS BELIEVING: New World of Sport Series—A very fine short appropriate for winter districts.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

STARS OF TOMORROW: Columbia is getting better with their musicals. This one went over fine.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Educational

HOMELESS PUP, THE: Terry-Toon—Cute and interesting. Running time, 7 minutes.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town rural patronage.

HOW TO SKI: Treasure Chest—Intensely interesting to everyone, and genuinely instructive to any ski enthusiast who has not yet become expert. Running time, 11 minutes.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

MONTAGUE THE MAGNIFICENT: Bert Lahr—When bigger and poorer comedies are made, Fox will make them. If Bert Lahr is a comedian, I can believe in evolution. We must have come from monkeys, he is proof.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PAPER HANGERS, THE: Terry-Toon—Fair cartoon that drew some laughs. Running time, 7 minutes.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

PRIVATE LIFE OF THE GANNETS: Treasure Chest—Outstanding. Us gannets never thought we was particularly unusual or interesting, but this reel really made everybody sit up and take notice. Running time, 11 minutes.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BEAU HUNKS: Laurel and Hardy—Pleased a few, but these Laurel and Hardy reissues are too outdated to please anyone but the most childish. Will work in on Friday-Saturday occasionally, but wouldn't dare try them any other night. Running time, 37 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

BEHIND THE CRIMINAL: Crime Doesn't Pay

Series—This one takes up the crooked lawyer and is o.k. Well liked.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FLORAL JAPAN: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Another travel talk that is tops. Coloring beautiful. I enjoy all these travel talks, whether the patrons do or not. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theate, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOW TO VOTE: Robert Benchley—This had the crowd in stitches.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAIL AND FEMALE: Our Gang—Another fine Gang. Keep up the good work, Mr. Roach.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theate, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MAN IN THE BARN, THE: Historical Mysteries—A commendable effort that really clicked all around. Running time, 10 minutes.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

NIGHT 'N' GALES: Our Gang—Another laugh riot from Our Gang. Patrons are beginning to ask when there will be another Our Gang comedy. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PIGSKIN PALOOKA: Our Gang—Very good. Our patronage certainly like Our Gang comedies. Running time, 11 minutes.—Miss Ouida Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Texas. Small town patronage.

RUSHIN' BALLET: Our Gang—Another good Our Gang. They get the laughs. Running time, 11 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SOAK THE POOR: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Another good Crime Does Not Pay short subject. These are very interesting and pleasing to our patrons. —E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

FOOTBALL TOUCHER DOWNER: Popeye the Sailor—A fair Popeye but not up to standard. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

PANELESS WINDOW WASHER: Popeye the Sailor—Good Popeye cartoon.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 1—This is the first that we have run of this series and if they are all as poor as this we are sorry. The sequence of the bronchoscopy was the only redeeming feature. Running time, nine minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

POPEYE THE SAILOR MEETS ALI BABA AND THE FORTY THIEVES: Popeye the Sailor—Excellent. Good old Popeye. Color very good. Running time, 18 minutes.—Miss Ouida Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Texas. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

DEVILED HAM: Nu-Atlas Productions—Good one-reel short.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

DONALD'S OSTRICH: Mickey Mouse—one of the best. The audience cackled all the way through it and the ostrich in one sequence should have had trouble getting past Mr. Breen and his department. He swallowed a balloon, and something happened to the part that goes over the fence last. Funny, I'll say.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

EDGAR AND GOLIATH: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—Very good slapstick comedy thoroughly enjoyed by our Saturday patrons.—A. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

HARRIS IN THE SPRING: Phil Harris—Very good. Enjoyed by all. Running time, 18 minutes.—Miss Ouida Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Texas. Small town patronage.

HAWAIIAN HOLIDAY: Mickey Mouse—These Disney cartoons so far out-shadow the other producers in drawing power and workmanship that there is no comparison. This one is great. Running time, seven minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

LONESOME GHOSTS: Mickey Mouse—Not up to the usual standard. Too much noise.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: Very good but not appreciated by our patrons generally.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

RHYTHM WRANGLERS: Ray Whitley—Very good western musical short. Well received here as Ray Whitley lived near here for many years and many old friends came to see and hear him. Congratulations, Ray, on this fine short.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

SWEET SHOE: Nu-Atlas Productions—Better than average one-reel short with Rita Rio and her girl band.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

COUNTRY STORE: Meany-Miny-Moe Cartoons—A very poor monkey cartoon. These cartoons are slipping.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

MOVING DAY: Mickey Mouse—These Disney cartoons are miles ahead of the rest. This a scream.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Vitaphone

CLEAN PASTURES: Merrie Melodies—Another good colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DANGER—HIGH VOLTAGE: Floyd Gibbons' "Your True Adventure—Vitaphone certainly started something with this series and they are getting better and better with each issue. This one was swell. Running time, 11 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

I WANNA BE A SAILOR: Merrie Melodies—Fair but not quite up to the standard of this series. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

JAN RUBINI AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A nice little musical but too much violin for our audiences. Good for highbrow only or else shelve it. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLEST DIPLOMAT, THE: Sybil Jason—Ran this one the week after "Wee Willie Winkie" and it was a little too much of a sameness. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PUPPET LOVE: Salici's Puppets—A novelty that is plenty good. All in color and very clever. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ROPING 'EM ALIVE: Vitaphone Varieties—A good reel but all too short. Very, very interesting. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

RUSS MORGAN AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—This series is always good but this one is tops. "The Merry-Go-Round Broke Down" is unusually clever and "In the Shadows" dance is excellent. Give this one extra advertising. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

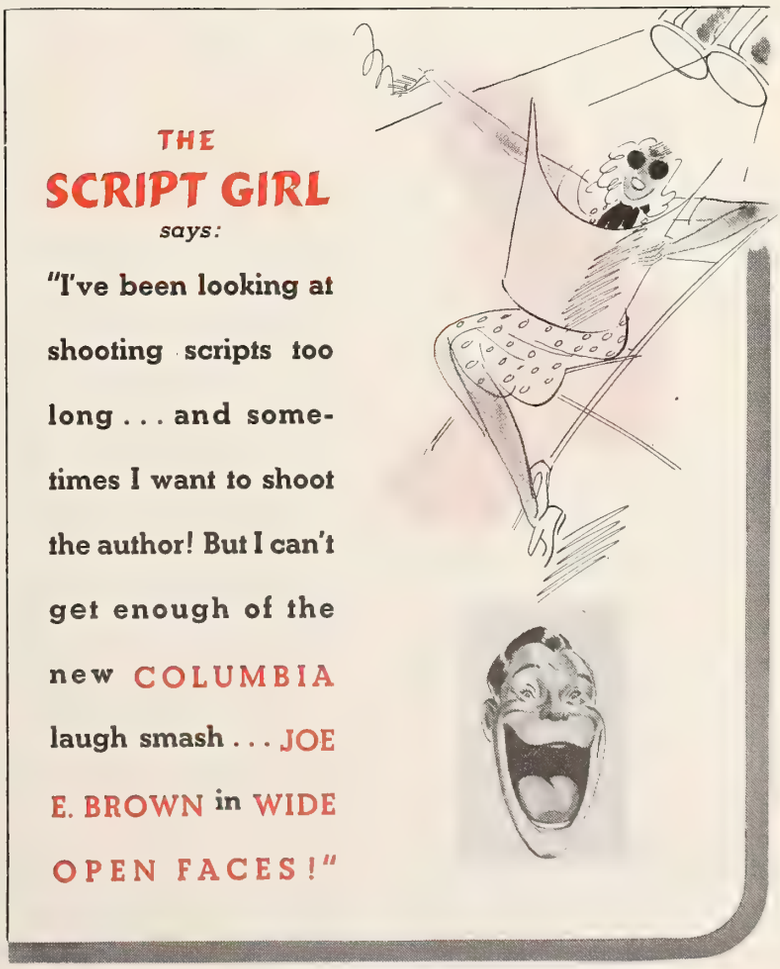
SWEET SIOUX: Merrie Melodies—Very good and the color beautiful. Running time, 8 minutes.—Miss Ouida Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Texas. Small town patronage.

SWEET SIOUX: Merrie Melodies—A Merrie Melody in color that compares favorably with any cartoon released. My patrons raved over this one.—S. N. Roden, Ulen Theatre, Uden, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

VITAPHONE FROLICS: Vitaphone Varieties—A swell vaudeville reel with the Hilly Billy band (Zeb Carver and his cousins) and the L.I.M.E. trio the tops. Better put this band in a feature. It is good. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

VITAPHONE FUNSTERS: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—A very good vaudeville short for average fan fare.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WOODS ARE FULL OF CUCKOOS: Merrie Melodies—This Merrie Melody was very pretty in color and had many laughs to offer in using animals to imitate the stars. Running time, 8½ minutes.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.



Serials

Republic

ZORRO RIDES AGAIN: John Carroll, Helen Christian—Chapter three good but very short. Running time was exactly fifteen minutes for entire chapter. We timed each part and titles, etc., ran two and one-half minutes, repeat from Chapter Two ran two and one-half minutes, leaving ten minutes in this chapter. Check it, Republic, and you'll find we are right. We checked it four times.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

JUNGLE JIM: Grant Withers, Betty Jane Rhodes—Have just finished this. It seemed to hold the serial fans.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers' attorneys left New York for Tallahassee, Fla., this week, where they will file the music licensing organization's action attacking the constitutionality of the Florida statute preventing the Society from operating within the state.

Mr. Linder said the film was taken from his play, "Diamond Lil," which in 1928 was written from his original play, "Chatham Square," produced in 1915. Mr. Linder claimed to have information that Miss West derived $2,000,000 from the picture.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

RESPONSIBILITY

We can think of no greater responsibility a theatre manager has than to constantly and carefully guard and protect the safety of his patrons. He is the custodian of the well-being of thousands of men, women and children. His first obligation is never to permit this duty to lag for even an instant.

The M. & P. Theatres in New England (Mullin and Pinanski) have issued an elaborate, carefully indexed and exhaustive manual on Safety for their theatre managers in conjunction with a drive they are conducting for a "No Accident Month."

As is pointed out in this manual, there has been a "No Accident Month" in the automobile industry, in factories and in other lines of endeavor. These Drives have produced most amazing results. There seems no reason why these same excellent results cannot be obtained in our business. It is not sufficient to be satisfied with fewer accidents; elimination of all accidents is the key to the success of this campaign.

Important to theatre operators, also, is the fact that elimination of accidents will benefit theatres through substantial reduction in insurance rates.

Comprehensively listed in this excellent pamphlet are practically all departments in a theatre, with notes on what to be careful of. Such departments as the basement, electrical, booth, auditorium, hot water heater, boiler, sidewalk, stage, exits, roof, fire prevention, etc., are all intelligently discussed.

Emphasis is also placed on torn, worn, loose carpets and linoleum; adequate lighting, care of seats and the smooth functioning of your staff in an emergency.

Commencing with next week's issue, this department will run a series of articles on Safety discussing each part of this important phase of theatre operation in detail. We consider it a good plan for you to save this series and read them at your staff meetings, besides posting them.

OPPORTUNITY

We have always felt that promotion from the ranks ran hand in hand with successful theatre operation; that ambition would very often be stifled in the loyal and capable worker if he were not eventually suitably rewarded.

Joseph Bernhard, Managing Director of Warner Bros. Theatres has sent to all his managers and theatre executives a New Year's message called "Opportunity in the New Year." He points out that in the year just closed, there have been 412 promotions in the theatre department . . . all promotions from the ranks. This amazing record is inspiring evidence of the constant effort being made by his department to take care of its own.

Mr. Bernhard makes mention of the fact that opportunity will again knock at many doors. He advises the man in the field that when the choice is made to fill an opening, the prized advancement will come to the man who is as zealous in his work as if the theatre were his own, whose personal touch with patrons encourages steady attendance, whose service is friendly and courteous and whose skill in his individual capacity results in the utmost benefit to the company.

He proposes a New Year's resolution for his men: a resolve to be prepared for promotion.

An awesome record Mr. Bernhard;—a praiseworthy thought;—and eminent advice.

STACCATO

Larry Graburn, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Halifax, Nova Scotia, likes our new system for Awards. He writes: "The new plan is great . . . pays off for the consistent plugger of whom there are a great many all over the country, who just couldn't concentrate on any one attraction for several reasons. . . I think that the Quigley Awards will flourish even more than ever."

District Manager Harry I. Wasserman of M. & P. Theatres, in New York on a business trip, still displays the energy and enthusiasm he did a score of years ago. This veteran showman makes the valuable observation that any material, no matter how good, will not receive its due share of respect if not treated properly. His slogan is "Follow Through," and with that dictum we can find no fault.

February 6 to 12 is National Boy Scout Week. Many managers are booking appropriate shorts to entice this trade.

Jack Goldstein

Reported as an excellent attention-attractor was Manager George D. Irwin's street bally for "Submarine D-1" at the Lyceum Theatre, Duluth, Minn. Man dressed in diving outfit properly bannered with title, playdates and cast covered downtown area ahead and during run of picture. At scheduled intervals the man was planted in theatre lobby.

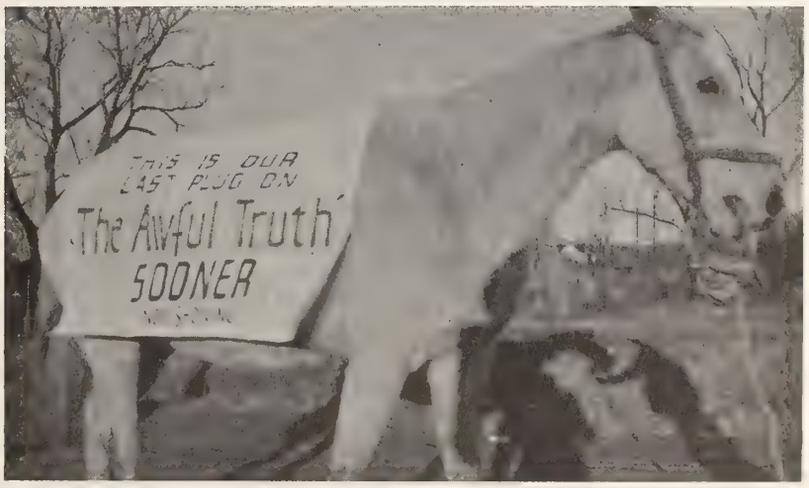
Selling his "Emile Zola" date at the Canarsie Theatre, Brooklyn, from the Captain Dreyfus-Devil's Island angle, Manager A. Vallet conceived the above lobby display. Replica of prison cell was constructed in which was planted figure of Dreyfus. Either side of cell was flanked by scene stills from the picture and proved a mighty effective display.

Through tieup with Saks-Fifth Avenue, prominent specialty shop, six of its windows were devoted to illuminated scenes from "Snow White," framed in a reproduction of the Music Hall's proscenium arch. Hazel Flynn of the Music Hall and the RKO Home Office staff effected the tieup.

Novel fashion window display was secured through promotion arranged by Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, for "Vogues of 1938." Center of window featured strip of heavy paper simulating film which hung from ceiling and carried picture title letters.



Will Hays presents the Quigley Silver Plaque for December to R. Lee Kline, (center), manager of Warner's Colonial Theatre, Philadelphia for his excellent campaign on "Alcatraz Island," as Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner's Theatres looks on. The presentation was made at the Poor Richard dinner honoring Will Hays in Philadelphia.

In preparation for an engagement of "Wells Fargo" at the Centre Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, manager Charles M. Pincus tied up leading store for window display of part of the extensive "Fargo" museum collection of that merchant. Prominent in the display were photos of scenes from the gold rush days together with prominent picture mention. Unusual were the newspaper breaks secured by Pincus, consisting of special section depicting Salt Lake City during the eventful years, and plentiful was the art work together with stories that were run daily in the leading papers.

Described elsewhere in this section is Lew Chatham's campaign put on at the Sooner Theatre, Norman, Okla. Shown above is photo of nag street bally used by the theatreman with copy reading "This is our last plug on 'The Awful Truth'." Banner on other side of horse carried playdates and cast.

Promoted from local amusement park for use in connection with Johnny Barcroft's "Damsel in Distress" engagement at the Orpheum Theatre in Columbus was distortion mirror which was planted in his lobby ahead and during run. Local professional models were promoted to pose before the mirror at peak hours.

QUICK REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

Pass Blowup

Cashing in on the fact that Gale Sondergaard's father was a local resident, Ed Benjii, Capitol Theatre, Madison, Wis., for "Emile Zola" had an ordinary theatre pass blown up to 40 by 60 size, addressed to the star's father and mailed to him at his home. Since this was the largest piece of first-class mail ever to go through the Madison post office, newspapers were informed of time it would be delivered, so that photographers were on hand to cover the event. Photos landed in three papers with stories, cast, playdates, etc.

At special preview of local prominents, comment cards were distributed; these later were also blown up and used for publicity purposes. Letters were mailed to all lawyers because of the special interest the Dreyfus case would hold for them, and doctors were also reminded of the unusual performance of Muni in "Pasteur" and promised a display of acting skill that would top that. Another feature that netted Benjii further newspaper breaks was wire received from Miss Sondergaard thanking him for the publicity she had received in Madison.

Novelty Ads

Pearce Parkhurst, Brandon Theatre, Brandon, Vt., to plug his Christmas show ran an ad in local paper week ahead in form of an open letter addressed to Santa Claus, asking as his Christmas present a good show for his patrons. P.S. at bottom of ad referred readers to following week's ad, which would contain his answer to the letter. Last ad was letter from Kris Kringle in which was listed the "super-colossal" show which the patrons of the Brandon could enjoy as Santa's gift to the showman.

Charity Tiein

Cooperating with the Children's Aid Society of Haverhill, Mass., Manager Ralph Tully at the Capitol Theatre for his "Angel" planted six jars for donations throughout lobby. Card attached to each read "Be an 'Angel' to an orphan." All monies were turned over to the charity with stories landing local papers.

Arrangements were made with newsdealers to banner their trucks with picture copy and playdates, handbills also being distributed by their newsboys, window cards were placed in prominent locations and six sheets pasted to lobby floor.

GLASGOW SHOWMAN EXTOLS AWARDS

I trust these Quigley Competitions will continue as in the past. I consider they are a splendid medium and incentive to live showmen to go one better and in our business today, with so much competition, you cannot beat the big drum loud enough.

My Honorable Mention won in 1937 was the means of record business at the pay box. Here's to the continuance of Quigley Competitions and Lang may y'er lum reek.—JAMES REED, Manager, La Scala Theatre, Glasgow, Scotland.

"Vogues" Contest

Sunday Star of Wilmington used a double truck of co-op ads on a "Vogues" contest engineered by Frank Murphy at Loew's Theatre, Wilmington, Del. Prizes were merchandise orders redeemable at any of participating merchants' stores and awarded to those women entering lobby opening night between 7 and 8 p. m. and judged by fashion committee to be the most smartly dressed. Stories were run in local dailies.

Department store used three column ad featuring cuts of Wanger models from the picture with full theatre and picture credits. Store also using window display of "Vogues" fashions and large still with theatre credit. Imprinted napkins were used in leading restaurants, telegram blowups planted in Western Union windows and tire covers were used by motor company.

Street Bally

It is to be doubted if there was a spot in Winnipeg where excavation was going on that Hal Bishop, Capitol Theatre, didn't plant a stick card with "Good Earth" copy on it. Entire staff was dressed in Chinese costumes with chest banners carrying title letters and two small occidental boys in native attire distributed heralds in theatre lobby.

Man in coolie costume pulled bannered ricksha about city streets, letters were mailed to school principals and university professors which resulted in many theatre parties. Midget cards were posted on bulletin boards of all public libraries, lobby was dressed with Chinese lanterns and incense burners and bumper strips carrying title, cast and play dates were used profusely by taxi fleet.

Street Bally

Seven-foot photographic blowup made to resemble replica of engine used in "High, Wide and Handsome" was planted in lobby week ahead by Paul Klingler, Rialto, Lewistown, Pa., to plug his opening. Street bally also in advance was woman and man on horse dressed to resemble Irene Dunne and Randolph Scott, horses properly bannered with title, cast and playdates. Campaign was climaxed by banquet for all Tydol-Veedol dealers immediately followed by private screening of the picture.

Police Tiein

For his "Devil Is Driving" date at the Broadway Theatre, Chelsea, Mass., L. D. Glinner invited a delegation of police officers to a special screening. Talk was later delivered to youngsters and story ran in the newspapers. Wrecked car was on display week ahead and during showing carrying banners reading "Alcohol should be in the radiator, not in the operator." Safety drive was launched which chief of police sponsored, sentencing convicted drivers to witness the film. Special heralds were distributed and papers ran editorials plugging the date together with cast and title.

Pooch Parade

David Dallas, manager of the Grand Theatre, Holdenville, Okla., staged a canine parade as a prologue to "The Awful Truth" for his opening. Idea of the parade was to pick the city's most thoroughbred dog from amongst those that pranced across the stage at his 11 p. m. Saturday night show. Purps were led across stage by fashion models attired in evening gowns, music for the occasion was provided by local orchestra. Stories and photos broke in local dailies.

Billboard Stuff

Erected on prominent street near the New Spreckels Theatre, San Diego, Cal., by Pat Argust, was 24-sheet board on "Tovarich" carrying copy reading "San Diegans will enjoy their merry Christmas when they see," etc., etc. Blank space was left on the poster for the last word and every hour a man dressed as Santa Claus hung the letters spelling out the title of the picture. Stunt is reported to have aroused a great deal of curiosity.

Showman Produces Theatre News Reel With 16mm Set

The subject of "home movies" was discussed in a recent Round Table section by Ted Stump, Absarokee, Mont. Now comes Doug Carpenter, another theatreman who is successfully producing his own weekly newsreel. We allow him to speak for himself as follows:

"The Elks Theatre now presents its own newsreel once a month called 'Town Topics' and, believe me, it sure is going over swell. I have been using a 16 mm. camera to take local shots of football games (the high school games mean big business from the boys and girls and they are sure to bring Dad and Mother and the other family kids). Many of the scenes are in color and it is surprising the fine results you can get with amateur color. The high school band and the marching club show up swell in color and the same gang show up 100 per cent at the box office with a line of people whom they wish to have see them in the movies.

"I have this past month or two covered fires (one big one I caught in color as by luck I had color loaded at the time in the camera), floods, local ceremonies, and when I get kids at play or cute little tots the parents yell for more.

"We use a 16 mm. projector with an extra strong light and throw to our regular screen in the form of a newsreel, titled, accompanied with non-sinc sound, and commented in spots by a local reporter on the football games and sports event (this fellow uses a mike and sits near the front row of the theatre and does his spieling). Patrons think we have a sound film of our own—we do in a way.

"We use a public address system and I make us of this in plugging coming shows, local amusements and shows at our little Majestic Theatre which we run Tuesday and Saturdays only with westerns."—H. D. CARPENTER, Manager, Elks Theatre, Middletown, Pa.

"Let's Hear From You!"

Schools Aid Bell On "Emile Zola"

Building scholastic interest for his date on "Emile Zola" at the Majestic Theatre, Houston, ad man Bill Bell contacted schools and planted a contest for which cash prizes were awarded to students submitting best essays on whether or not Zola was worthy of a greater place in history than that accorded him and why. Winning essays were run in three high school papers opening day of paper. Heralds were distributed in all schools announcing the contest and notices tacked on all bulletin boards, plugging the date.

Bell also concentrated on the Jewish angle, contacting all Jewish organizations with specially prepared heralds for their meetings, and rabbis devoted their sermons to the picture. Front cover of leading Jewish publication was promoted gratis, for which the showman used five scene stills. Resume of sermon delivered by rabbi was planted in the book.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS

HOME OFFICE AIDS

"Hollywood Hotel" press book has a wealth of material for exhibitors. One of its greatest features is the fact that it is planned for all types of engagements, both large and small.

The book itself has been departmentalized in order to present its wealth of material in concise, orderly and practical form.

It begins with a listing of the stars in the production followed by an entire page devoted to the publicity value of the "Hollywood Hotel" air show. A full page of local tie-up suggestions is next, with suggestions for co-op ads, tieups, etc. This is followed by a page of stunts to be worked on the radio.

College and hotel exploitation ideas follow as well as numerous ideas for lobby displays. Two national tieups, one with Radio Guide, and another with Calox Tooth Powder are offered as easily workable promotions.

A special four-page insert presents exploitation ideas for the picture's music, followed by numerous stunts, contests, accessories, and an insert quoting the trade paper reviews.

The publicity section is designed as a complete compaign in itself and inserted in the book so that it may easily be used as a separate feature by reviewers and editors.

From the office of Leon J. Bamberger of RKO Radio Pictures, comes a mailing piece that is out of the ordinary.

This attractive mailing piece which is being sent to 7,000 exhibitors, circuit officials and house managers in the United States and Canada, 2,000 in England and 500 in Australia, carries the excellent personal touch by having each exhibitor's name printed on the first page.

Most extensive national advertising campaign, designed to aid individual exhibitor's throughout the country has been launched by United Artists on Samuel Goldwyn's "The Hurricane," with full page two-color display copy appearing in major large-circulation magazines. The drive was planned to coincide with the film's National release date.

Twelve magazines with a combined circulation of more than 11,530,000 are being used in this campaign.

Topping the drive is the copy run in three magazines with a combined circulation of more than 9,030,000, including the "Saturday Evening Post," Pictorial Review combined with "Delineator," and "Ladies Home Journal." Bolstering these are the ads inserted in national "fan" publications. They are: "Screen Book," "Screen Play," "Hollywood," "Motion Picture and Movie Classic," "Movie Story," "Movie Mirror," "Photoplay," "Screenland" and "Silver Screen."

It should be an easy matter to tie up the distributors of these magazines for herald inserts and free truck displays, in advance of your opening.

"Let's Hear From You!"

Miller-Pearlstein Tieup Radio with "Ali Baba"

Arranged by Manager Ed Miller and publicity man Manny Pearlstein, Warners' Hippodrome, Cleveland, for "Ali Baba" was tieup with local quiz-bee radio program. In exchange for passes to those submitting questions which were acceptable to the sponsor, picture and theatre received air plugs. Jumbo Texaco cards were spotted at all stations three days ahead, all hotels carried announcement cards and huge transparencies and 22x28's were set up at music department of five and ten stores.

Newspaper campaign was arranged with local dailies. Starting with an underline in Sunday paper week in advance and built up until day ahead of opening when large ads appeared in two afternoon papers and again opening day.

DECEMBER FIRST MENTION WINNERS DISPLAY ENERGETIC ENTERPRISE

Effective Exploitation In Both December Campaigns Feature Many Good Tie-ups

Novel exploitations engineered by John Barcroft for "Damsel in Distress" at the Orpheum, in Columbus, Ohio, and Lew Chatham in "The Awful Truth" in Norman, Oklahoma, dominated the campaign for these two December First Mention Awards Winners.

One of Barcroft's many outstanding slants featured a huge fashion show that caused tremendous interest locally besides securing a great amount of free newspaper space.

Promotion with leading department store brought a colorful fashion show to Barcroft's stage. A dozen mannequins, modeled coats, gowns, dresses, furs and jewelry. The style show particularly served to interest feminine theatre-goers who were also ardent Astaire fans.

Johnny Neblett, well-known local radio commentator, acted as narrator and master of ceremonies of the show, describing the fashion parade from the stage.

Jeweler furnished $100,000 necklace, bracelets, and accessories for the mannequins. Newspapers carried stories of this valuable gem display and jeweler also used front window display.

Geer Parkinson, staff organist for WBNS, provided appropriate musical background for the fashion revue.

This fashion show brought many good newspaper breaks, including huge art, in all papers, stories, and also cooperative ads by the department store Barcroft had tied in on this.

A smash radio build-up was given this fashion show, including spot announcements a week in advance by the department store, spot announcements promoted by the theatre, special fashion programs on all stations, and plug from theatre lobby.

Hollywood Premiere

Colorful Hollywood premiere was staged the evening prior to the regular opening of the picture with extensive program started at 6:30 and continued until 10:30 P. M. This was instrumental in getting a large amount of newspaper space, radio time and a big pre-holiday box-office gross.

This not only netted plenty of extra lineage in the papers, but was instrumental in breaking down a newspaper which up until then would not publicize theatres. Also, an excellent front page break was secured.

Fireworks, kleig lights playing up and down the main thoroughfare and shooting high into the sky, a radio broadcast from the lobby, style show, dance band, mannequins parading in lobby, celebrities, theatrical personalities, the Mayor and other civic authorities all lent color to the affair. The Mayor consented to speak over the lobby microphone.

Gershwin Program

Local band leaders paid and played a musical tribute to George Gershwin on the Friday evening following the opening of the show, as special memorial program to this noted composer. This was carried on a special radio program around the community by WBNS, the orchestra playing all the tunes from the picture. Seven other radio programs, all sponsored by different advertisers, were tied up for special mention on their programs, with music as tribute to the late Gershwin.

Tying in with local amusement park, the theatreman promoted distortion mirror for use in his lobby display. (See photo in Round Table picture section.)

Flock of stores were also tied up for displays on the picture, a Christmas classified ad tieup with the Columbus Dispatch was obtained and a huge special theatre front was erected featuring revolving stiles, comic mirrors and colored blow-ups.

"HOBBY" TIE-UP BY LES POLLOCK

Les Pollock of Loew's Rochester Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., has just completed a "hobby" tie-up to run for three months or longer. He displays a new and private hobby of some prominent personage in Rochester, in his theatre lobby every two weeks.

First of these displays is a year of 1560 suit of armor and accessories displayed through the courtesy of the Rochester Museum of Arts and Sciences.

The tie-up was made through Dr. Mayer of Rochester, the Rochester Museum and radio station WHAM who are sponsoring weekly "hobby club of the air" programs, on which Pollock's pictures are plugged prominently, and attention called to the lobby displays of the "hobbies."

Chatham Holds Stag Prevue

To make certain that he would not miss any angles on the exploitation of "The Awful Truth," Lew Chatham of the Sooner Theatre, Norman, Oklahoma, screened the picture three weeks in advance and had each member of his staff submit from ten to twenty-five suitable exploitation ideas.

First gun of the campaign was fired with an all-stag prevue, with the Mayor, Chief of Police, other county and city officials and the football squads of both the University of Oklahoma and Norman High School present.

Elaborate plans were made for entertainment at this stage prevue. A special bar was constructed on the mezzanine floor of the theatre, for which refreshments were promoted. Music was furnished by the University of Oklahoma band, which was also promoted at no cost to the theatre. This band played on marquee of the theatre, as well as on the mezzanine. Besides doubling his usual gross, Chatham obtained excellent word-of-mouth publicity on the idea and on the picture.

All fire hydrants in the city were covered by cards reading; "Reserved for Mr. Smith —you'll see him in "The Awful Truth" at the Sooner Theatre.

As a laugh, an old plug horse was paraded on the busy streets of town. Copy on sign on horse read: "This Is Our Last Plug on 'The Awful Truth,' Sooner Theatre." (See photo, Round Table picture section.)

Outstanding tieup was made with bakery by which 10,000 small coupons were inserted in every package of bread, 250 of these coupons, colored differently, were equivalent to passes to the theatre.

500 stenciled window cards were made out of old used weekly window cards, and tacked on every telephone pole at intersections over the entire city. This was done at no cost except for tacks and paint. These were up two weeks in advance of playdate.

One hundred and fifty window cards, stenciled with following copy: "Closed—Gone to see "The Awful Truth" at Sooner Theatre," were thum-tacked on doors of important business houses Saturday night after stores were closed, thus giving excellent week-end showing in entire downtown district.

Small arrows were cut and stenciled on the reverse side of old weekly program cards. Approximately 200 of these were used throughout the city, alternating in the blocks where the big tack cards were used. All pointed to the Sooner Theatre, with title, playdates and theatre credit appearing on these arrows. The cost was labor, tacks and paint.

Directional Arrows Used

Four huge arrows were erected on the leading highways running into Norman, a week in advance of the playdate, and carried theatre, picture and date credits. These were inexpensively constructed out of sign cloth and mounted on frames.

Utility and service trucks were appropriately bannered; also dairy trucks and buses, all accomplishing the purpose of being "moving" advertisements.

Beautiful pastels, colored enlargements, and illuminated shadow boxes were featured in a special lobby display.

Car cards, auto bumpers, heralds, napkins, windshield cards, novelty mirrors, novelty cards, menu cards, standees, newspaper contest and special lobby displays also figured prominently in Chatham's campaign.

Restaurant menus, special heralds, exchange heralds and other accessories, love test cards, special badges, autographed photographs, a "tip to men" card as well as a "tip to ladies" card, imprints on merchants' bags were also used to good advantage.

"Let's Hear From You!"

Through an inadvertence in last week's Round Table issue, under the new Quigley Awards classification, Wilmington, Del., was omitted from the Class "B" listing. Excuse it, please.

RESUME OF COLONY THEATRE, CLEVELAND OPENING CAMPAIGN

First of a Series of Articles Pertaining to Theatre Opening Activities

In a recent issue, we discussed the advisability of conducting a series of articles based on activities concerning campaigns to open new theatres, since there are so many new houses being erected at this time.

At our request we have received several excellent and noteworthy campaigns. The first of these comes from Cleveland, in relation to the opening of the Warner Colony Theatre. The entire campaign was executed by the Cleveland Advertising Department with Sid Dannenberg, director of Advertising for the Warner Ohio Theatres, in charge, under zone manager Nat Wolf.

The campaign was planned approximately ten months in advance of the opening.

Newspapers

The theatre received 4,973 lines of gratis space, starting on March 19th, and running intermittently from then until opening day (December 29th) and afterward.

The thoroughness with which this campaign was conducted may be gathered from the planned stories, which all ran as follows, in consecutive order: rumors of opening, confirmed plans, ground breaking date announcement, general contractor's award, name of contractor, groundbreaking, Sunday special, interior art, opening date announcement, special seat story, special story covering all features of theatre, manager's name announced, opening program announced, special story about murals, complete stories in special section of Cleveland Plain Dealer, opening day stories and reports on opening with art and stories.

Contest

Contest in the Cleveland Plain Dealer was planted asking readers to name the new theatre. Responses came in by thousands. The entire Warner Ohio home office staff was kept busy many nights checking these and filing them appropriately. This contest netted 2,732 lines of space in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, which has a daily circulation of approximately 300,000 and a Sunday circulation of half a million, besides being the only Sunday paper in Cleveland. The contest started approximately four months ahead of the opening and ran for twenty-six consecutive days—a precedent for theatre contests in Cleveland papers. The cost to the theatre was $100.

Special two-page section in the Cleveland Plain Dealer was obtained two days before the opening. Dealers in Shaker Square, contractors, etc., participated in the cost of ads to pay for this section. There was no cost to the theatre in any way.

Foreign, Community and School papers were completely covered, the theatre receiving 2,930 lines of free space in them. Also covered, was "This Week in Cleveland," which is distributed in all leading hostelries, restaurants, etc.

Street Cars

Approximately ten days in advance of the opening, street car hangers were displayed on the inside of 250 cars on selected lines covering the potential market area affecting the Colony Theatre. Also used were street car dashboards; these cards on the front of 100 cars.

For one week, inside all Rapid Transit lines, double street car cards were used; these cars run on special lines and stop immediately in front of the theatre on Shaker Square.

Prominent mention was secured in a publication issued by the Cleveland Railway Company called "All Aboard," which is distributed on all main lines and has a circulation of 130,000 weekly.

Special radio announcements were made on Stearn's Advertising Company program (Street Car Advertising Cards), started five days ahead and continued through the opening day.

Miscellaneous

Announcement trailers carrying effective copy were used on the screens of the Warner Hippodrome, Palace, Allen and Lake theatres (all downtown houses) three weeks ahead of opening, and continuing through opening day.

Six months before the theatre was opened two huge eight-sheet boards were erected and used as permanent displays as well as a gigantic barricade; these boards were seen by thousands of people daily, who had to pass the theatre on the way to their homes.

Magnificent window display of one of the Colony's chairs in a large downtown department store caused much comment. These chairs were also displayed (individually) in the windows of Shaker Square merchants.

SCENE AT CLEVELAND COLONY THEATRE OPENING.

Elaborate Souvenir program of twenty-six pages, for distribution at the opening night performance, was prepared. Numerous advertisers participated in the cost of this program.

Many tieups with merchants in Shaker Square included the following: special window displays in windows welcoming the opening of the new theatre; prominent mention in the Shaker Booster (merchants' organ); 20,000 special stickers distributed on packages sold by merchants; 200 window cards in Colony Theatre market area.

Gala Opening

Giant Kleig lights, movie cameras grinding away and celebrities in attendance, all lent color to the opening night's festivities.

Station WHK co-operated by broadcasting from the lobby of the theatre for a half hour, describing the proceedings.

The Mayor of Shaker Village, the Honorable Van Aken, made a short dedicatory speech before the inaugural program commenced. Congratulatory telegrams were posted on a special board in the lobby, which was tastefully decorated by many baskets of flowers sent by well-wishers.

Mrs. Douglas Brien, winner of the Cleveland Plain Dealer contest to name the theatre, officiated at the opening with zone manager Nat Wolf, who cut the tape opening the doors to the public.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures announced by the home offices of the distributing companies.

When a production is reviewed in Hollywood, the running time is as officially given by the West Coast studio of the company at the time of the review, and this fact is denoted by an asterisk(*) immediately preceding the number. As soon as the home office has established the running time for national release, any change from the studio figure is made and the asterisk is removed.

Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions may cause variations from the announced and published figures; repairs to the film may be another reason.

J C JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Last night we went to the Moon theatre and saw "Second Honeymoon" with Tyrone Power, Loretta Young, Stuart Erwin, Claire Trevor, Marjorie Weaver, Lyle Talbot and Edward Bromberg. Maybe the reason why we liked the picture was because of Lyle Talbot. Lyle used to park his feet under our wife's dining table and fill his silo with beans and sowbelly for want of something better. We regard the picture as worth playing.

Then here is something else again. According to the press, the board of supervisors at Kimball, Nebraska, passed this edict: "Any person, now receiving or applying for county relief, who refuses to turn in his car, license plates and keys, will be refused any form of county relief assistance excepting those requiring a car in the conduct of their business." The paper states that this was the first step taken to purge the county relief rolls and was unanimously approved by the board.

This sounds to us like a pretty good stroke of business, and it would seem to be a procedure that other county commissioners ought to adopt. We never yet saw a sucking calf let go of the teat until its mother walked away. Some cows seem to have a lotta sense. It looks like Kimball county has started something.

We just received a letter from the manager of the Elite theatre at Laurenz, Iowa, and he says, "If you don't stop and see me when you are in this county I am going to knock your block off."

Now why the dickens do the boys talk that way. As we remember it, we called to see him last summer and he was out of town. 'Taint our fault.

Jack De Marce, of the De Marce Amusement Company, of Benson, Minnesota, writes us and says, "I have been trying to get along without the HERALD since last November and I find I just can't do it." Jack encloses his check and says for us to have his subscription renewed for two years. We'll do that, Jack.

The public here seemed to be divided in opinion as to the entertainment value of "Confession," with Kay Francis, Ian Hunter and Basil Rathbone. It seemed to be the unanimous opinion that Miss Francis played three different characters in very fine shape. The main objection seemed to be the type of story.

There can be no question but that the public is fed up on these "triangle" themes, and our guess is that unless the producers cast Miss Francis in a more pleasing role pretty soon it won't be long until she will be on the retired list. A splendid actress shouldn't be shelved in that manner.

Every once in a while we meet up with a surprise. Sometimes it is an agreeable one and sometimes it is not so agreeable. This one was an agreeable one. Last summer we stopped at Oakland, Iowa, to call on Mrs. Mable Hockenberry, who operates the Liberty. We had a very short visit with her, as she was just leaving the theatre to go to a quilting party, or some other function, but she expressed surprise and pleasure that we called on her and she told us she would send us a check to have her subscription renewed to the HERALD as soon as it expired. Yesterday's mail brought a very fine letter from her together with her promised check. That part we had completely forgotten but we hadn't forgotten Mrs. Hockenberry and her Liberty theatre, and we would like to suggest that when you go to Oakland you should call at the Liberty and you will see a good show and meet a very fine lady. Thanks, Mrs. Hockenberry.

When we were in Glenrock, Wyoming, some time ago, we called on Mr. and Mrs. Jung, who operate the theatre, and they told us they had given a magazine peddler twelve dollars in cash for the HERALD, Almanac and Motion Picture Daily, but they had never heard from them. We wrote the circulation department of the HERALD and were informed it had never received the money or heard of him, but that on our sayso they would send them the magazine just the same. Now, wasn't that swell? But then an office has to be swell that has a Gertrude Merriam. But speaking of Gertrude reminds us, boys, that she would be tickled if you would send her one of your theatre passes to paste in her scrapbook.

We trust that you will pardon us if we reminisce a bit.

Last night we went to the Moon theatre and saw "Empty Holsters," with Dick Foran and Patricia Walthall. As a rule we are not overly strong for "Westerns" though it is a fact that Westerns have been a lifesaver for many small theatres. When we saw Miss Walthall on the screen our mind immediately went back to the time when we hunted grouse with her father and mother for a week in Cherry country, Nebraska. Miss Walthall is the daughter of the late Henry B. Walthall, who played the "Little Colonel" in "Birth of a Nation," and her mother was Mary Charleson, who appeared with him on the stage and in subsequent pictures.

When we saw Miss Walthall and remembered we had hunted with her father and mother before they were married, we were again reminded that "tempus fugit." Oh, well, doggone it, what if it does? We can't stop it.

A report says that some of the producers are requiring some of their screen stars to reduce as much as twenty pounds. Suppose Sophie Tucker should reduce twenty pounds, she wouldn't be Sophie Tucker. Stick to your beans and sowbelly Sophie, we're for you.

When we came to Nebraska we could dig down two feet almost any place and strike water. The sand hill country was full of ponds and small lakes, but today the water table is 16 feet below the surface. Instead of building shelterbelts, if the government would dam the rivers and creeks and fill up the drainage ditches there would be some sense to it.

Educational TWO-REEL COMEDIES

"At The Head Of My List"—

says

W. WARD MARSH, famous critic of the Cleveland Plain Dealer

(From the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Sunday, Jan. 11)

Educational Tops

The crying need in the film field is for good short subjects.

I don't see all of them but I do see enough to know that I believe the greatest strides forward in the two-reeler class have been and are being made by Educational comedies. There has been a steady rise in humor in these Educational two-reelers until today they stand at the head of my list.

Educational has, more than any other company, fetched up from the silent past the old brand of nonsense and horse-play humor, changing it to fit the demands of today and has regained a great deal of that convulsive quality which belonged to the old slap-stick two-reelers.

First U. S. Theatre Restored With Help of American Seating Co.

The grandfather of America's great theatre industry was the Dock Street Theatre in Charleston, South Carolina. Built in 1736, 40 years before the Declaration of Independence, this historic theatre burned twice, was made into a hotel—and now after more than 200 years has been completely restored as a theatre.

Although everything was made to look as it did in Colonial days, a note of wise modern theatre management was added—comfortable as well as historically authentic seats were provided by the American Seating Company. The combination type of seating installed has the appearance of the original benches yet offers genuine theatre chair comfort.

This is an excellent example of how well equipped the American Seating Company is to handle any special architectural problem. No matter what your seating problem, American can solve it with smartly styled, comfortable, quality built chairs priced to suit every requirement. Theatres all over the country are adding substantially to their profits and finding it most economical to reseat with American.

VOLUME 130 FEBRUARY 8, 1938 NUMBER 6

Conquered by the Film, Broadway Goes Modern

BROADWAY IS modernizing—starting somewhat later than less publicized areas of the nation, but modernizing nevertheless, and substantially enough to present a definitely changed appearance today. By Broadway is meant, of course, the theatrical area spreading principally north of Times Square, and including Seventh Avenue and 42nd Street. Property values here naturally do not invite headlong divorcing of the past, while many a playhouse has to consider the importance of a reputation won in another day which might become less convincing with a complete change in personality.

Dominated today by the motion picture, physically as well as economically, Broadway has joined the nation-wide modernization movement largely by replacement of worn furnishings and obsolete fronts. The old New York and Criterion theatres are gone, and a single theatre, a new Criterion, has taken their places, but it is the only entirely new theatrical structure of the past ten years. Another new theatre was added, however, in the remodeling of the building at 49th Street and Broadway to create the Trans-Lux theatre, which was opened in December, succeeding the original Broadway Trans-Lux theatre a block to the north.

More than $200,000, however, was spent last summer on the Capitol, MGM's week-stand showplace. With the essential style retained, this house was completely recarpeted and reseated, its decorations refurbished, and the front modernized to the extent of a huge marquee providing greater attraction board space, and a towering vertical sign. The front lettering follows the general Loew policy of using opal blocks, but a general modern effect is achieved in the greater use of the front as an advertising medium.

The Roxy, a block or two away from the Capitol, is now undergoing similar treatment, but in a more modest way. About 3,700 of the 5,900 auditorium chairs are being given new seats, with loge chairs covered in velour, the others in mohair. It is also definitely planned to replace all or most of the present sound system, while the original fancifully ornate marquee has given place to a simple corner structure trimmed in neon and with sides consisting almost exclusively in silhouette-letter attraction boards.

Seven Theatres in Single Program

A general program of modernization being conducted by the Harry Brandt circuit has already effected notable face-lifting in six subsequent-run theatres in the Broadway sector, with revision of another to follow. Three—the Gaiety, Central and Globe—are on Broadway itself; the others—Apollo, Times Square, Selwyn and Liberty—are on 42d Street. All of them are ex-legitimate houses which have succumbed to the new hegemony of the film. The Globe and Apollo have been treated to modern carpeting, an entire new set of chairs with mohair coverings, modern indirect lighting fixtures, new box offices and complete air-conditioning systems. All of this group of theatres have new marquees of modern lines and carrying silhouette letter attraction boards. In addition, the Liberty is to be presently overhauled throughout, its decorative scheme and front completely modernized, and its projection and sound equipment replaced.

Warners' Strand theatre today represents substantial modernization, the front and lobby having been thoroughly revised last summer with modern patterns and materials erasing all vestiges of the original French period ornamentation.

There are today in the Broadway and Times Square area proper, 24 motion picture theatres having a total of 39,150 seats. With the inclusion of Radio City Music Hall, this total becomes 45,350.

481 Theatre Projects Reported Last Year

NEW THEATRE construction projects reported during the year 1937 totaled 481. This figure does not represent new theatres constructed during the year, but at least planned during that period. The reports were received by Better Theaters' Bulletin Service from correspondents throughout the country.

The last quarter of the year saw fewer reports than the second quarter, but more projects were reported during each of the last two quarters than in either of the first two of the year. A total of 186 projects were reported during the first six months, and 295 during the last half-year.

Projects reported during the last quarter are listed on page 47.

Throughout the year, seating capacities tended to be substantially higher than the national average, which is about 650 seats. While there is considerable difference between the average seating capacities among the various sections of the country, national average in 1937 was approximately 900. Not enough of the reports included construction costs, but of those on which such figures were available—about 40% of the total—the average cost was $85,000.

Figures released by the Dodge Corporation, which maintains a building report service, show that in 37 states east of the Rockies, 885 theatres were actually constructed or substantially remodeled during 1937. In giving these figures, it was pointed out that such actual construction and reconstruction may have been greater, since complete data are not always supplied in the case of a theatre built in conjunction with a commercial building.

Although projects reports received by BETTER THEATRES during the last half-year were larger in number than those of the first six months, the Dodge figures indicate a falling off of actual construction during the latter period. This is attributed in part to a "catching up" on construction which was quickly taking up the depression slack; and partly to a rise in construction cost, both in labor and materials.

According to the Dodge statistics, the chief increase has been in lumber, which has gone up 40%. Labor costs have gone up from 20% to 30% since a year ago, the figures show.

The total number of operating theatres in the United States at the end of 1937 was about 17,000, according to a statement of Will H. Hays, who said that approximately 740 theatres were opened during the year.

Cleveland Site for First Ohio Drive-In

THE FIRST drive-in theatre in Ohio will be built for opening about May 1, according to plans of the Drive-In Theatre Corporation of Boston, headed by Phil Smith. This company, which already operates several drive-in theatres in New England, has leased property 355 x 800 feet near Cleveland, for a reported period of 15 years, for the construction of suitable ramp and projection arrangements at a cost said to be $30,000.

And the outdoor-movie is making progress in South America, a news report from Cartagena, Colombia, would seem to indicate. But with some differences—strictly local. For there a bull-fight arena is being converted into a motion picture exhibition establishment, for which RCA is supplying the sound equipment.

Altec to Acquire Other Service Firms

NEGOTIATIONS for the acquisition of a number of sound servicing companies, particularly in the New York area and Middle West, have been started by the Altec Service Corporation, according to L. W. Conrow, president.

One such acquisition has already been made in the absorption by Altec of the Exhibitors Sound Service Company, operating in Brooklyn and on Long Island.

Exhibitors Shown Most Air-Conditioning Minded

THAT THEATRE operators are far more air-conditioning minded than the proprietors of other kinds of businesses is indicated in a survey of Minneapolis by the publication, Air-Conditioning Trends. Because of its average character as an American city, the publication regarded Minneapolis as a source of significant data, and it found that of 75 theatres in that city, 38, or 51%, were air-conditioned.

This compared with 16% among restaurants, less than 10% for retail merchandise establishments, and still smaller percentages for several other classes of business.

Something different for American towns

Modernized-Colonial Theatres

Night view of the Community theatre in Hudson, N. Y.

■ There has been some discussion in Better Theatres of whether the strictly modern styles of theatre architecture were always best adapted to a community. Perhaps what is meant is "popular modern," or "modernistic," not modern patterns based on architectural interpretation of function. At any rate, ordering a theatre to fit the town has been just what Walter Reade has done in his group of Community theatres, and in these pages is told the story of the idea and how it has been realized in four unusual playhouses

WITH THE return of the motion picture theatre to the city neighborhood and the extension of high-grade exhibition facilities to the small town, both of which have taken place during the last few years, adaptation of architectural and decorative style specifically to the local scene has assumed a new importance for the theatre operator. He finds himself not merely less restricted in his choice of the kind of theatre he wants, but often urgently advised to fit his property precisely into the physical and social fabric of its community. Increasingly, the motion picture theatre has become a recreational center of a town or residential section, and when it is that, its associations are inevitably those of life in and around the home.

The four theatres of a modernized-Colonial style erected during 1937 by Community Theatres, forming a part of the Walter Reade circuit in the States of New Jersey and New York, represent just such adaptation to local environment. One of the largest of the four towns in which these theatres — all named Communtiy — are located, is Saratoga Springs, N. Y., long a famous health and recreational resort and definitely non-industrial. Another, Toms River, N. J., has only 4,000 inhabitants, many of them retired business men. Morristown, N. J., is a small pre-Revolutionary town, site of a notable battle. Hudson, N. Y., where the latest of the Community theatres to be opened is located, is a community of small trades people serving an agricultural area with a population of about 40,000 people; the city itself has a population of 15,000. All of these towns are relatively small communities tracing their origins in some way to early American settlements, essentially rural, more expressive of leisure than of industry, each with a distinctive charm borne in the features retained from its own peculiar past.

It is to be noted, however, that the application of Colonial architecture to theatres in these towns (as well as to several theatres recently built or being constructed elsewhere by operators other than Mr. Reade) has meant adaptation rather than adoption of Early American forms. The technique, in principle, is to call upon the older patterns for the theme (we might say, the tone or feeling), without sacrificing to mere purity of rendition those modern elements which make the building

THE COMMUNITY THEATRE IDEA AND HOW IT GREW

■ The Community theatres were projected as a new and radically different group of playhouses of the Walter Reade circuit about a year and a half ago, and four of them were opened within the single year of 1937. A special type of town was selected, as revealed elsewhere in these pages, and at the time the program was announced, something like 100 theatres were said to be contemplated.

WALTER READE

"We have no set number in mind," smiled Mr. Walter Reade, Jr., assistant to his father in the operation of the Reade theatres, in a recent interview. "However, we are going to continue the policy we have established with the first Community theatres, for these houses have been very successful. In April, for example, we will break ground for another Community theatre in Red Bank, N. J."

And so the first of these theatres are confirming the judgment of a seasoned showman, for Walter Reade, Sr., has been in the motion picture business for over 30 years. Indeed, he insists that his Savoy theatre on 34th Street was the first New York theatre to show motion pictures exclusively. Incidentally, Mr. Reade still operates the Savoy.

At the time the new "moving pictures" beckoned, Walter Reade was operating a roller skating rink on the roof of Marcus Loew's New York theatre on Broadway, torn down only two years ago to make room for the new Criterion. The call of the theatre was a natural one, of course; his father had operated the Metropolis, dramatic stage house, in the Bronx; Oscar Hammerstein, Sr., was his uncle.

New Jersey has long provided principal sites for Reade theatre properties, beginning with the old Broadway in Long Branch. In Asbury Park is the Mayfair, constructed during the hey-day of atmospheric Spanish theatres at a cost of over a million dollars. In all, the Reade circuit now comprises 40 theatres.

Main foyer staircase leading to mezzanine foyer in the Hudson theatre.

The Community theatre idea developed from an accumulation of observations by Mr. Reade concerning small town theatre operation. For one thing, he wanted to bring the theatre close to the people of the town (two of the Community theatres thus far built are located in strictly residential sections). He believed he could dispense with elaborate signs and exploitation media because he had found that most people in small towns and neighborhoods select the picture and theatre before they leave home; and they either walk or drive to the theatre, hence he wanted convenient car parking space and landscaped grounds with park benches so as to provide in summer a pleasant community gathering place. This "community center" idea motivated the entire venture, its architecture and its policy. Each theatre bears the name Community. And even that, according to Mr. Reade, Jr., has had a happy psychological effect—the townspeople take Mr. Reade at his word and make the theatre their own. Which is precisely the result aimed at.

Wherever possible, it is the plan to place the Community theatres in or immediately adjoining residential sections. This, as well as the style of architecture, eliminates revenue from any commercial space, which loss is met by Walter Reade with the comment that "stores make a landlord of a showman, and they're principally a headache."

Warren Street (left), the main business thoroughfare of Hudson, N. Y. Hudson is one of the old settlements along the Hudson river, and is today, as it has ever been, a rural trading center, though it has a population of 15,000. Edward La Rue manages the Community theatre in Hudson.

best suited to its purpose. After all, the motion picture theatre is a modern thing.

As demonstrated in the plans and architecture of the Community theatres, the Colonial pattern is given an altogether faithful reproduction in the exterior; the interior tends to be neutral, with wall and ceiling surfaces white, or nearly so, and unornamented (relating them to the plain plaster finish of many fine Colonial buildings), but adapted to modern illumination schemes, with concealed light sources. This technique is followed especially in the auditorium, the lobby, foyer and lounge treatments having far less functional, and therefore somewhat less architectural, significance to the ultimate purpose of the building.

Naturally, such latitude in the combining of Early American with modern schemes can lead to architectural mixtures that

AIR SUPPLY

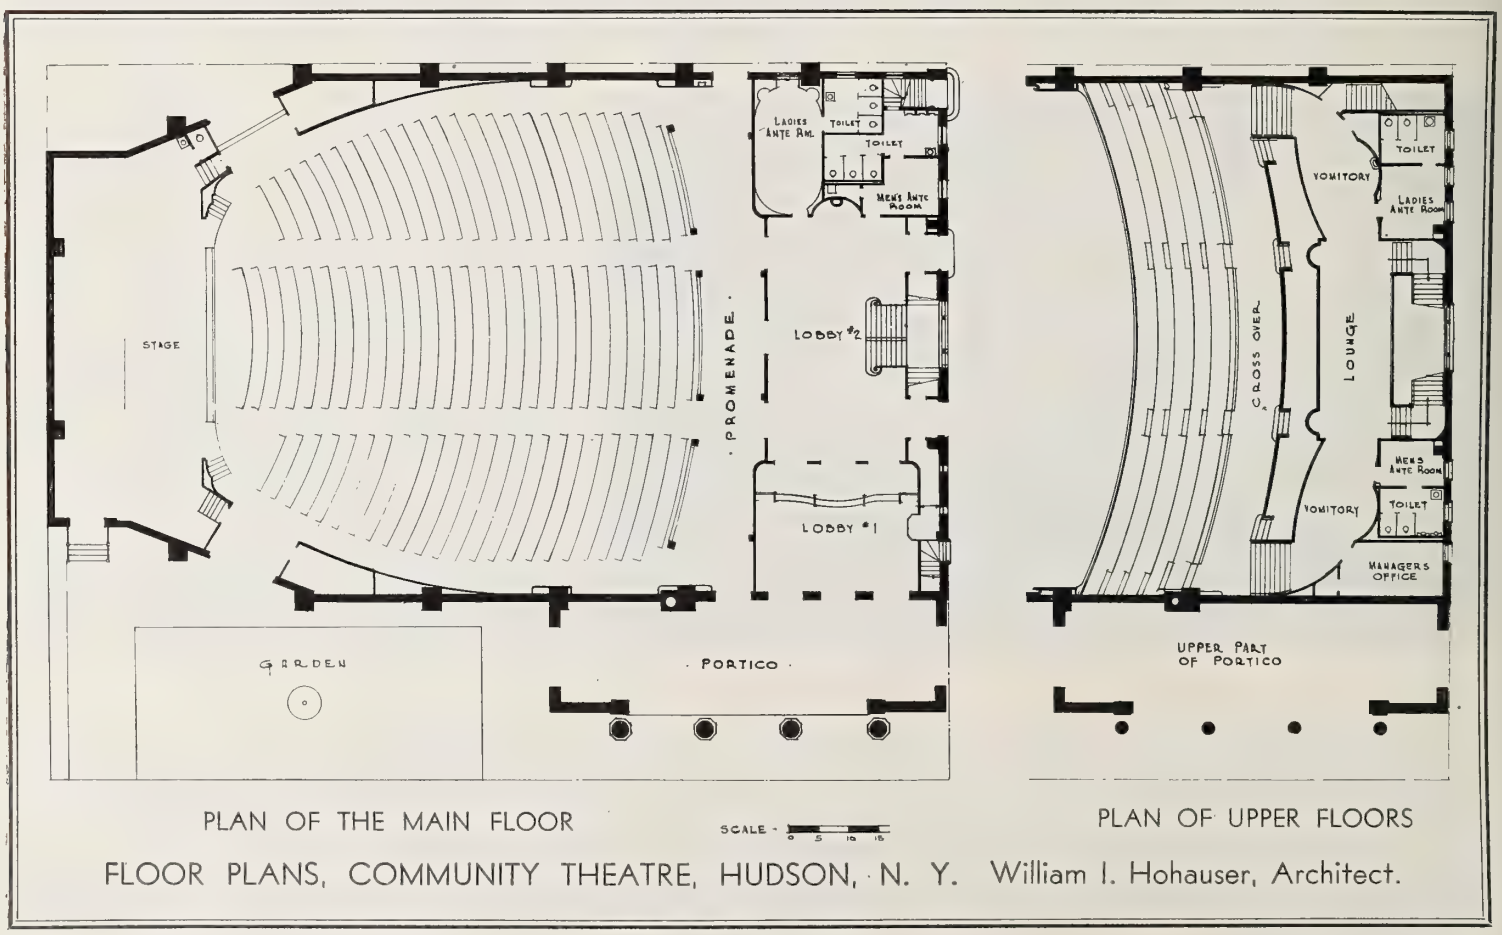
The air supply systems used in the four Community theatres are essentially similar. They are simple ventilating systems, without cooling provisions, supplying the auditorium and foyer and lounge areas. Other rooms have direct contact with the outdoors. Blowers are located above the stage area, and outlet grilles are at the proscenium. Exhaust in all of the theatres is at the stage fascia, while the two balcony houses also have riser grilles. All rooms except auditoriums and foyers are heated by unit heaters. The heating plants are located in auxiliary buildings immediately adjoining.

PROJECTION

All of the four Community theatres thus far opened are equipped with Motiograph projectors, with projection light supplied by Brenkert Enarc lamps receiving current from Forest magnesium copper sulphide rectifiers. The picture sound system in each house is RCA Photophone (none has public address equipment). All of the screens are Hurley white diffusive, and each house is equipped for magnascopic images.

STAGE AND MISCELLANEOUS

Stage equipment is confined to curtain control apparatus operated from the projection room (Automatic Devices tracks and control equipment in the Morristown and Hudson theatres; Vallen equipment in the others), while stage lighting (used for intermission and picture introductory effects) is provided by Brenkert and Chicago Cinema effect machines and spotlights from the projection room.



Seating in all of the theatres, by American, is of full-spring construction with mohair covering. Admission control equipment consists in General Register automatic ticket issuing machines, and Neumade choppers.

would produce, at least among the more sensitive customers, bad cases of the jitters; however, in three of the Community theatres, the interiors may be regarded as really neutral; in the other, the Hudson house, the slight emphasis given the Colonial theme is deftly placed at the rear of the auditorium and in foyer-lounge areas.

The Hudson theatre, of which the architect was William I. Hohauser of New York, was opened during Christmas week, just two days after the opening of the Morristown house. The latter, and the Community theatres in Saratoga Springs and Toms River, were designed by Thomas W. Lamb. To indicate the general architectural scheme adopted by Mr. Reade for these theatres, in a manner calculated to avoid confusion, the Hudson house is described below in some detail; distinguishing characteristics of the other theatres will also be noted.

Design of Community Theatre in Hudson, N. Y.

THE ENTIRE exterior of the Community theatre in Hudson is faced with red Champlain brick. All window and door frames are of wood, which is painted in white enamel. The facade is dominated by a portico, the gables of which are supported by four white-enameled red-cedar columns 30 feet high. The portico is 19 feet deep and 46 feet wide. Its ceiling has a white sand finish. The portico is illuminated by 150 reflector lamps in the ceiling. The floor of the portico is of con-

The building being set in a landscaped lot with the facade well back from the street, the location of the theatre is marked at the sidewalk by a wooden illuminated placard suspended from a pole (in the early inn style), and by seven 16-foot lamp standards. Inside and on either side of the portico are wooden display frames with shadow boxes lighted from the four edges by Lumiline lamps.

This general exterior and lot plan is carried out in each of the four theatres. Parking space is provided in the lot, which is also treated, with benches placed here and there, as a resting and meeting place for patrons.

Lobby and Foyers

Three sets of doors lead from the portico of the Hudson theatre into a lobby. Here is located the box office, at one side, built of wood and finished in white enamel. The walls and ceiling are of hard plaster, delicately tinted, but the doors are of modern materials—Formica with aluminum mouldings and bearing carved glass panels. The floor of the lobby is carpeted in a solid royal blue.

From the lobby, entrance to the seating areas are through a main floor and a mezzanine foyer, both of which are treated in the manner of the reception halls of Colonial mansions. The main floor foyer has tinted plaster walls and ceiling, and blue-carpeted floor. Illumination is by cove sources. There is a fountain of black marble.

The dominant decorative feature of these foyers, however, is the staircase. Construction is fireproof, but finish and carpeting conceal this reference to modern safety codes, while a Palladian window at the landing, 18 feet high and 11 feet wide, with Venetian blinds and blue drapes, render this staircase a faithful reproduction of its charming prototypes. The mezzanine foyer-lounge reached by these stairs, and leading to the balcony, is treated in essentially the same manner employed in the lower foyer. The ceiling, however, is beamed. Furniture, following Colonial patterns, is of bleached maple.

Off the main floor foyer is a promenade, which has blue-carpeted floor, black Formica and stainless steel mouldings, fluted columns, and an acoustical plaster ceiling with light coves. This area is immediately behind the main floor of the auditorium, and structurally a part of it.

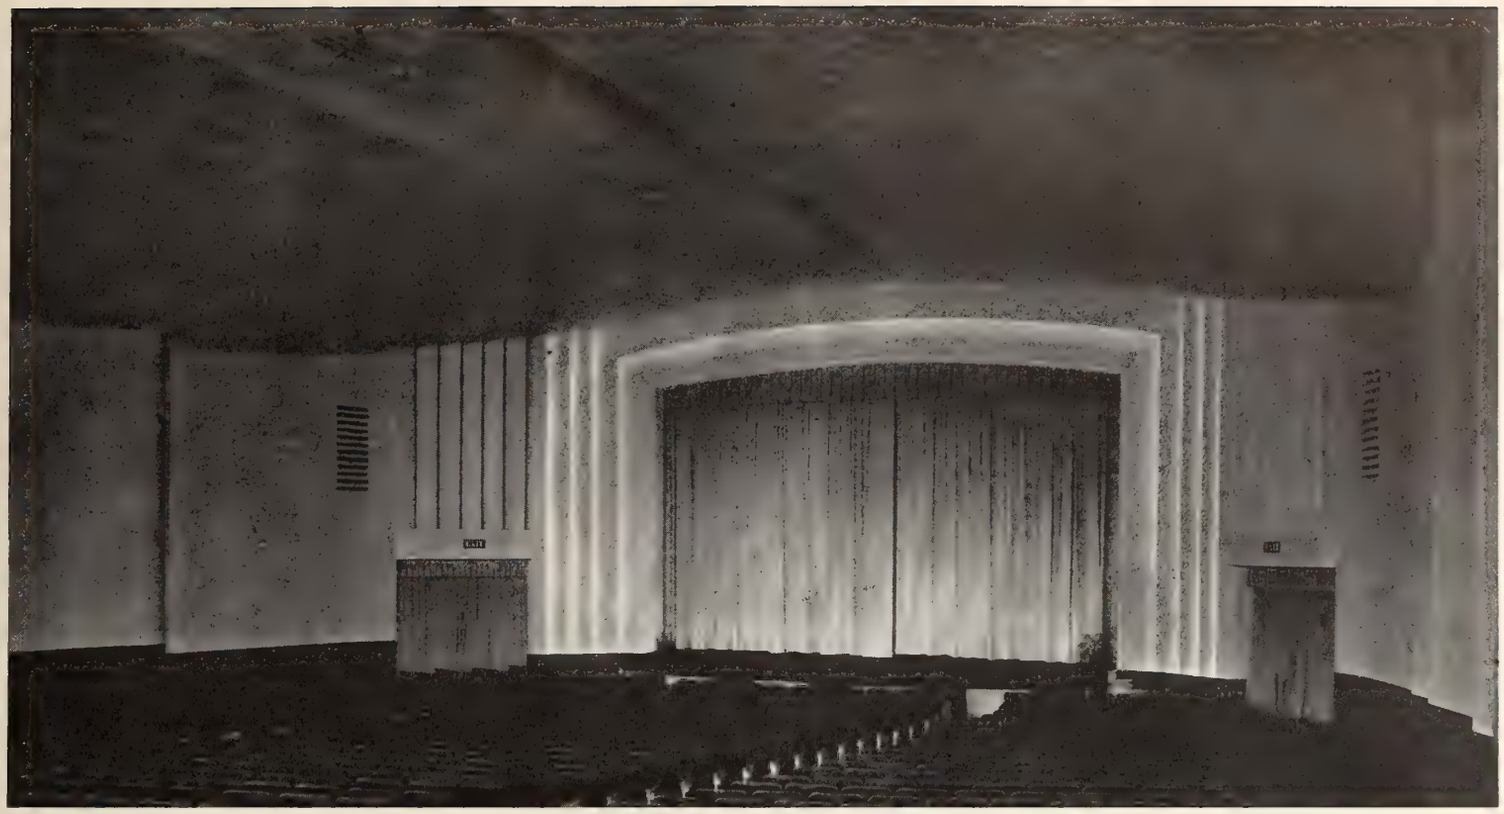
Design of the Auditorium

The auditorium has walls and ceiling finished in acoustic plaster tinted in three shades. Walls are divided into panels with eight vertical lighting coves equipped with three-color circuits. Pilasters are painted white and silver. The wainscot is of trowelled cement painted blue, with a silver band. Aisle carpeting is solid blue.

The main floor seating is arranged in three banks with four back. Row spacing is 34 inches on the main floor, 36 inches in the balcony, and 38 inches in loge sections. Chairs are fully upholstered with covering in plum-color mohair.

Auditorium illumination is controlled by six Austra 4,000-watt dimmers, providing means of "painting" the interior in various combinations of light.

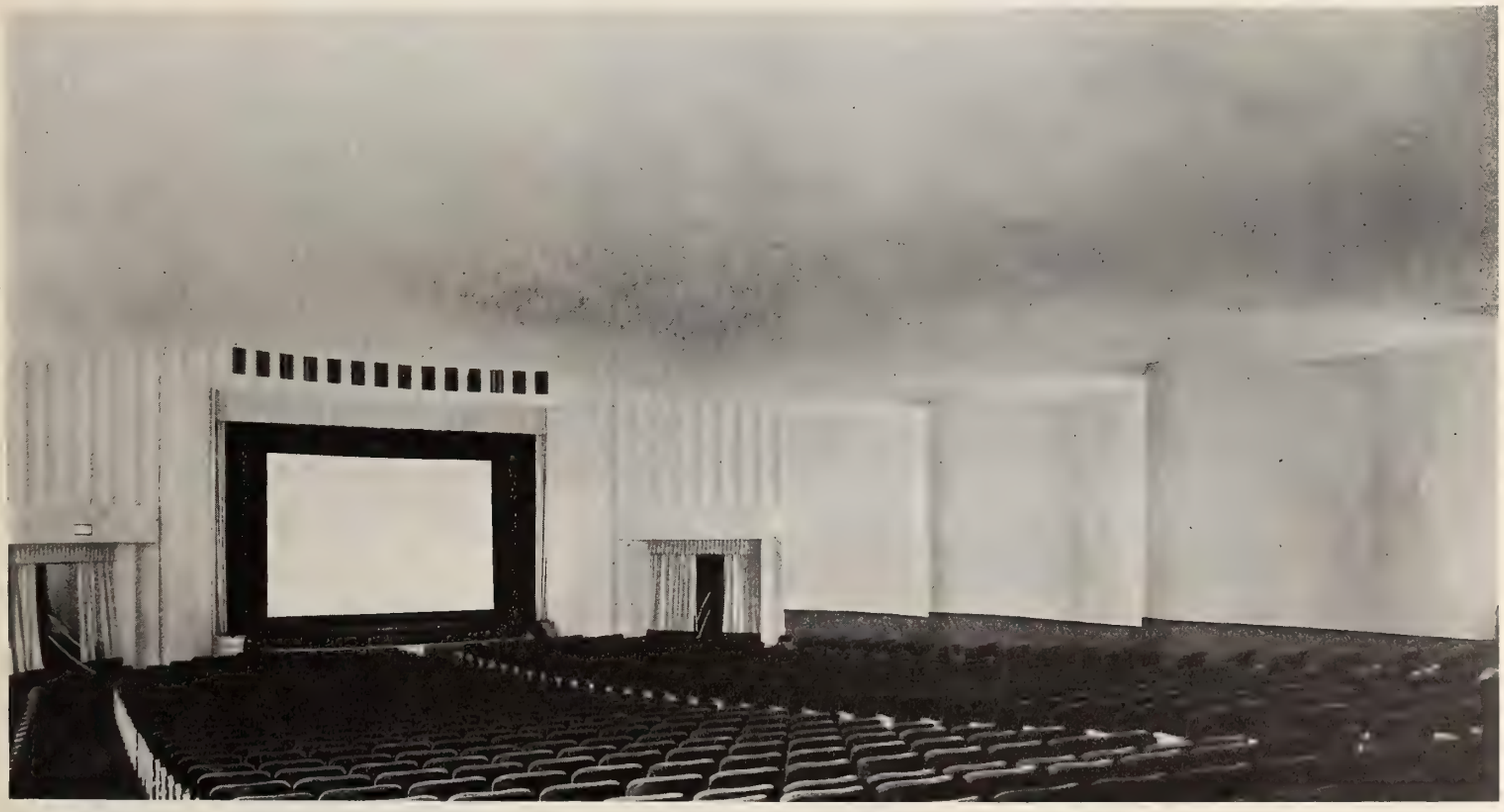
Treatment of Retiring Rooms



Men's and women's rooms have terrazzo floors and bases in two colors, walls of asbestos tiles (ivory in men's room, jade in women's) set in stainless steel slip-on mouldings, and glass lighting fixtures.

There is also a cosmetic room for women off the main foyer. This is an oval-shaped room with ceiling and walls of cream colored plaster, and blue-carpeted floors. Furnishings consist in bleached maple benches and chairs, upholstered in silk damask, dressing tables of bleached maple with illuminated frosted glass tops, and a recessed illuminated glass flower stand.

The other Community theatres, in Saratoga Springs, Toms River and Morristown, of which Thomas W. Lamb was the architect, are similar to the Hudson theatre in exterior treatment, except that they have limestone trim, but as has been mentioned, they have an interior treatment of somewhat greater simplicity. Walls and ceiling are white or tinted plaster (acoustic plaster in the auditorium), and illumination is by vertical coves or cornice troughs. Carpeting, however, carries a modern pattern in red and blue shades, while auditorium seating is covered in rust mohair. Of these three houses, only the Morristown theatre has a balcony.



The window frames of these houses are steel, but frames are faced in wood in keeping with the wood parapet, columns and doors in carrying out the Colonial pattern as faithfully as possible.

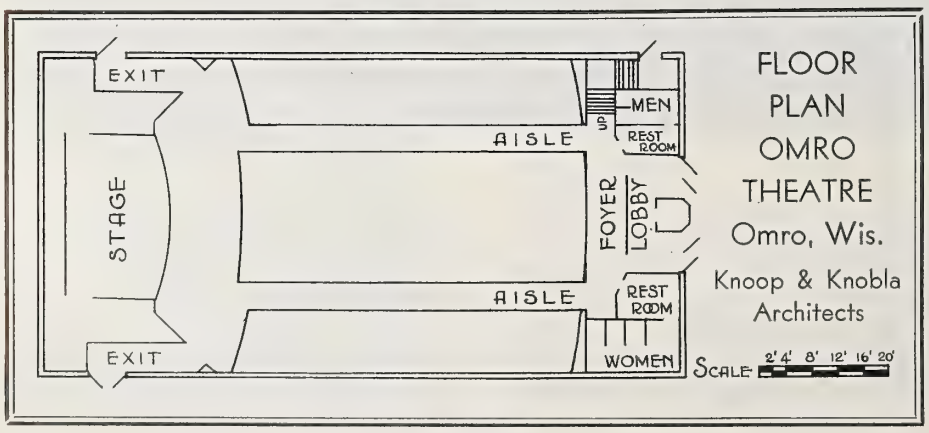
In the Community theatre in Morristown, both the main floor and balcony levels have the foyers treated as lounges. The walls and ceilings in these areas are finished in hard white plaster, and the furniture, while of modern construction, are upholstered in Colonial styles.

All of the main floors of the Community theatres have toilet rooms, while those in Morristown and Hudson also have toilet provisions on the balcony levels.

An interesting feature of each of these theatres is the local reference in the perforated rubber mats recessed in the portico floors. We have noted the figures used in the Hudson house. Similarly, the mats used in the theatre in Toms River, which is an old maritime community, have clipper ships, anchors, etc., worked into the mat pattern. Those of the Morristown theatre use the tallyho motif, and also silhouettes of Colonial men and women; in Saratoga the scheme is racehorses, saddles, etc. The figures are in blue and black, the fields are gray.

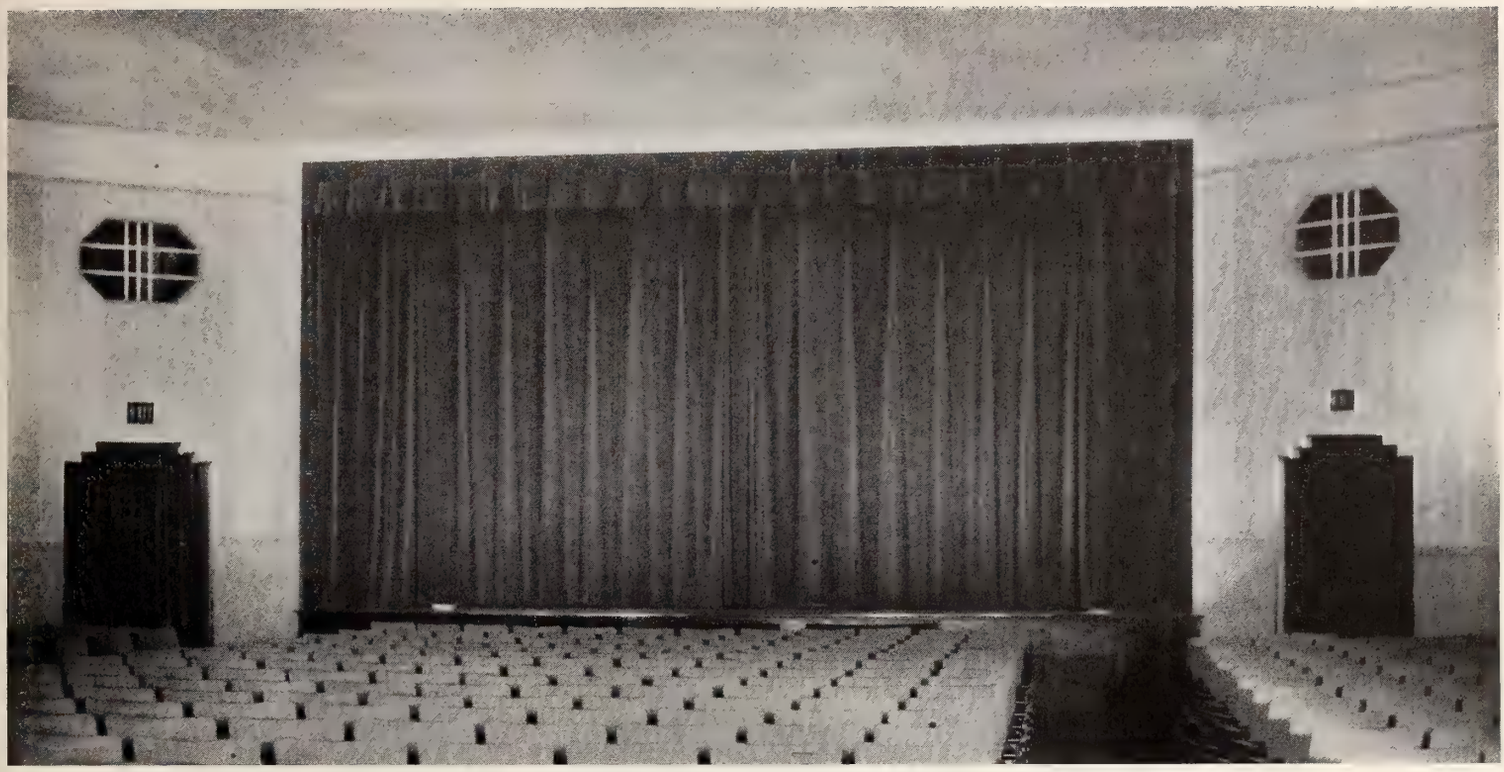
THIS WAS the situation: A town of only 1,250 inhabitants, Omro, Wis., was suffering not only from the reduced purchasing power of the farmers, but from the competition of larger towns nearby, particularly one of 40,000 only ten miles distant. Omro business men organized to attack the problem. And here is the result of one of their first steps —



Looking down Main Street in Omro, Wis.

A Village Theatre Built by Business Men to Stimulate Trade

The new theatre of the business men of Omro.



EARLY IN 1935, independent business men of Omro, Wis., a small farm section trading center in the northeastern part of the state, with a population of 1,250, met and organized the Omro Independent Business Men's Co-operative Association. Depression and the business competition offered by a city of 40,000 only ten miles away (Oshkosh) had reduced trade and business to an unprecedented low level in Omro. The association organized represented 90% of all business activities in the town.

From the first meeting, active measures intended to stimulate trade and business were considered, and among the mediums first discussed was a theatre. Up until 1930, Omro had had a small theatre, independently owned and operated, but it was not considered profitable and it was finally forced, by the depression, to close.

Except for a few progressive, foresighted business men, the consensus was that Omro was too close to larger towns to support a theatre.

A committee of four, composed of Clayton W. Stearns, chairman; Willis Calkins, F. A. Siebensohn, and Max Bieber was appointed. They analyzed the situation and decided that if up-to-the-minute pictures could be secured in time to offer serious competition to the theatres of nearby larger towns, a business men's theatre would probably pay expenses and would at least stimulate trade in Omro. Even the most enthusiastic did not expect the venture to do any more than break even, much less show a reasonable profit.

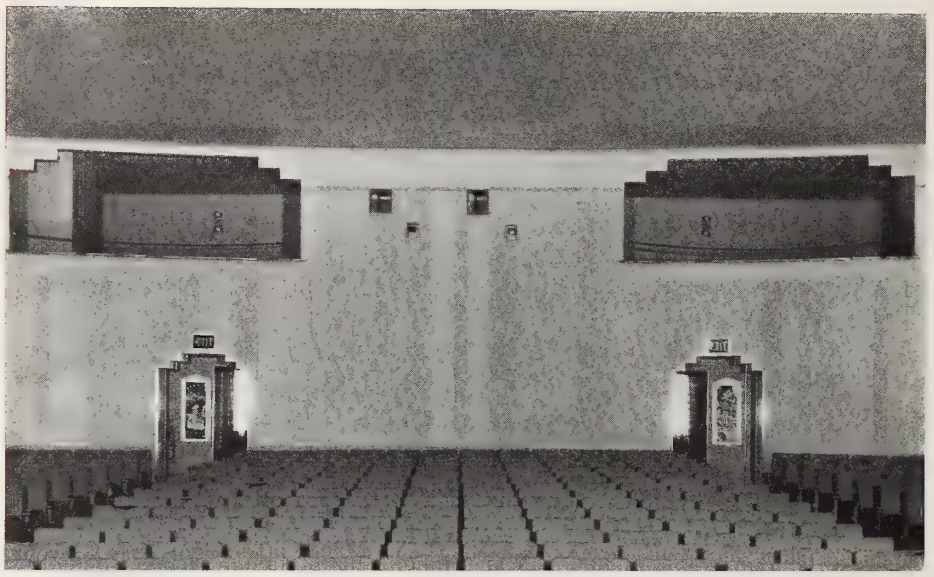
In selecting a place of operation the association passed up the old theatre building, a small, unsuited, poorly built structure, and arrangements were made to use the local High School gymnasium. The building was new, having been in use only a year, and offered a large floor in a fireproof building. Three thousand dollars were spent on projectors and other equipment, and the venture went into operation in September, 1935.

Seating accommodated an audience of 500, and in only a few weeks, the theatre was showing to 1,400 persons four nights a week. From the beginning only high-class pictures were presented, and these in time to keep local people from travelling to nearby cities to see them.

Financing and Design of the New Theatre

THE "THEATRE" in the High School gymnasium, which paid for all equipment purchased the first year, was considered so successful that in the fall of 1936 the business men's association decided to erect a suitable theatre building as a co-operative enterprise. The project was placed in the name of the village of Omro, with Mr. Stearns as chairman. Negotiations for a WPA grant of $20,400, for material and labor, was concluded, and plans were drawn by Knoop & Knobla, architects of Oshkosh, Wis., for a modern, fireproof building seating 560 and costing, equipped $50,000.

A lot near the center of the town and on the edge of the business district was donated by the Civic League, and the business men's association subscribed $15,335. Later on, to complete the project, debenture bonds to the amount of $7,500 were sold.



With the completion of the new theatre, named the Omro, the association broadened its program to include shows on all nights of the week, with either three or four changes of program, and the attendance soon rose to an average of 2,500 a week!

Architectural Scheme and Equipment

The Omro theatre is faced with a specially made shale brick—it is the only building in Wisconsin, to date, using this material. The brick costs 50% more than ordinary brick, but it is correspondingly stronger and longer lasting. Next to the brick facing is an 8-inch concrete block wall. The building is insulated with a 1-inch thickness of balsam wool held in place with 1-inch furring strips nailed to the mortar between the concrete blocks. The Nu-Wood boards (manufactured by the Wood Conversion Company of St. Paul) and to finish the auditorium are nailed to the furring, and those on the ceiling are nailed to 2x6-inch stringers spaced 16 inches apart. The ceiling Nu-Wood strips are 4x8-foot squares and are grooved to make an alternate diamond and square design. The wall strips, with vertical grooves, are 8, 12, and 16 inches wide; they are arranged in a variegated color scheme with tan and rose tints.

The auditorium floor is a 3-inch layer of concrete laid on a Truscan Temprite steel beam construction.

Immediately at the rear of the seating area, and beneath the projection room and balcony sections, is a foyer 8 feet deep. It is finished in Nu-Wood, with wall strips varied in both size and color and laid horizonally. The ceiling blocks have a small diamond design. A 4x12-foot mural, picturing early pioneering days of Omro, adorns the foyer wall. The painter, Chris Olson of Eureka, Wis., pictures, among other things, the trading post of Charles Omreau, first white settler to locate on the upper Fox river, which was made famous by Marquette and Joliet's historic inland water trip in 1634. Omreau located his trading post on one of the camping sites of the two famous explorers. The village bore Omreau's name until later day authorities changed it to Omro.

Auditorium and Balcony

The auditorium is finished in Nu-wood and trimmed with chromium. A two-section balcony at the rear of the theatre seats 60 patrons, the main floor 500. The auditorium seats, spaced 33 inches, are arranged in three seating banks with two aisles. Chairs (by Wisconsin Seating Company) are fully upholstered and covered in pale green leather.

Each balcony section is 16 feet wide and 17 feet, located beside the projection room. Each section has a five row, 30-seat bank. The floor is elevated 18 inches from the first row to the last.

Illumination of the interior is provided by modern vertical bracket fixtures, each carrying ten lamps, which are wired on different circuits to give four colors. A shield of Lumarith glass covers the lamps. The auditorium has three on each side wall, and each balcony section has one. The lobby and foyer have smaller lights of similar design.

The Omro has a 30x18-foot stage, fully rigged for travelling and home talent shows (equipment by Clancy). The stage curtain is velour, goldenrod in color and trimmed with moonbeam green. The stage also has a vari-colored cyclorama background curtain. Stage lighting is by a bank of three-color footlights and three border lights, all rheostat-controlled.

The marquee, which is 19 feet wide at the base and slants to a 9-foot front, is lighted in neon with a red, blue and green color combination. The entire face has flashing neon lights. The two sides are equipped with three-line attraction boards using 11-inch opal block letters.

The base of the ticket booth is shale brick, the rest glass; the inside of the booth is finished with Flexboard.

A 10x20 foot lobby is finished with Flexboard siding in a gray and rose two-color scheme. The floor is finished with Masterpave.

The rest rooms have a painted smooth plaster finish.

The heating system uses a Fitzgibbons boiler and a battery of three copper heating coils (by American Blower). The coils are used for cooling in the summer by means of sprayed water piped from a 160-foot artesian well. Intake provisions allow use of 75% outside air. There are four exhaust vents, each 10 feet square, two at the front, and two at the rear of the building.

The projection room is 14 feet wide and 12 feet deep and is constructed of reinforced concrete with the inside walls plastered. The throw is 72 feet. Equipment includes two Simplex projectors, Brenkert low-intensity arc lamps, Rect-O-Lite rectifiers, Preddey soundheads, Operadio double channel amplification, and Jensen speakers.

The theatre has a basement room running the length of the building which is now being used to house the association's monthly "buck auctions," at which merchandise donated by the business men is auctioned off to customers in possession of "bucks," each received through a 25c merchandise purchase. At some future time it is planned to equip the room as a recreational center.

Local Factors and Operating Policy

THE ADMISSION prices, which are very popular with the patrons and suited to their pocketbooks, are 15c and 10c. These admission prices, lower than that of surrounding city theatres, form one of the big drawing cards. Moreover, a merchant's ticket is given by all the members of the association with sales of merchandise.

Association members feel that a full house at the above price is better than a half a house at double the prices. The more patrons the theatre draws, the more the people who will trade at the local stores. Also, a higher admission price, they feel, would kill the venture because the average earnings of families living in and near Omro do not permit high-priced entertainment.

The only industrial establishments in the town are a creamery, and a flour, sugar, and feed wholesale and retail house. The HEYWOOD STREAMLINE CHAIRS not only add beauty and sparkle to theatre interiors, but they quicken traffic all over the house. The lustrous, streamline edge of these chairs acts as an eye guide for patrons . . . makes it easy for them to locate available seats . . . reduces aisle congestion and its ensuing disturbance to the seated audience. The Heywood Streamline Back has proved the outstanding success of the theatre chair field. By actual tests these sleek, swanky chairs have established themselves as the best box office "draw" you can place on any program. If you haven't yet investigated Heywood streamline theatre chairs, ask your H-W Sales Representative to give you the detailed facts.

How is the theatre operator liable for the acts of his manager? How is the manager personally liable for his managerial acts? Since theatre operation is so important a matter of remote control, the answers to these questions are briefly but authoritatively summarized by an attorney-at-law in this article

The Legal Authority of Theatre Managers

By LEO T. PARKER

THE COURTS have laid down the rule that an ordinary or common employe is one who has little or no influence on his employer's patrons. For instance, any workman, or mechanic may be considered legally a common employe. Also, ushers, cleaning persons, and probably ticket sellers may be considered common employes. However, theatre executives, the managers, and even secretaries and publicity men and the like, are considered by the law as being confidential employes.

Irrespective of whether a contract exists between a theatre operator and his confidential employe, the latter is bound to exercise utmost good faith. He must not take advantage of the knowledge and information obtained while in his employment.

General and Special Authority

It is important to know that a theatre owner, whether an individual or corporation, is liable for the acts of a general agent, while under the same circumstances he may not be responsible for the acts of a special agent. According to the law laid down by the higher courts, a general agent is an employe who has general authority to act for his employer in the conduct of a business or department of the business. For illustration, a manager of any department, or of a business itself, is a general agent.

A special agent is one who is authorized to act for his employer in a limited capacity, as doing only a single act. A theatre owner is not liable on any contract made by a special agent, unless such agent is specially authorized to make the particular contract.

How Personal Liability Is Incurred

ALTHOUGH AN employe, or corporation official, does not intend to defraud anyone, when signing a contract or other instrument, he may be personally liable on the contract. Generally speaking, an employe is personally liable when engaged in the performance of his employer's duties:

1. Where he makes a false statement or representation of his authority without intent to deceive.

2. Where he does a damaging act believing he has authority, but actually has none.

3. Where he acts on authority from his employer and does an unlawful act.

Moreover, an employe is personally liable on contracts which he signs, with proper authority, when his affixed signature does not clearly bind the employer.

Qualifying of Signature

It is well established that an employe is relieved of all risk of personal liability on contracts, or other papers, which he signs with proper authority of his employer provided (1) the name of his employer appears in the body of the contract, or on the letterhead; (2) the word "by," "for," or "per" precedes his signature; (3) the word "agent" follows his signature; (4) and the employer's name precedes the agent's signature, as follows: "The Atlas Theatre Company, by, John Doe, agent."

Sometimes, the mere difference between the words "by," "for" and "of" are sufficiently important to have considerable bearing on the outcome of the liability of an employe who signs contracts for his employers.

This point of the law was thoroughly considered in 98 Mass. 101. Here the contract was signed by an agent without prefixing either the word "by" or "for." The name of the employer did not appear in the body of the contract, and the court held the agent personally liable on the contract, stating the following law:

"The variation between the words 'for' and 'of' seems at first view slight; but in connection in which they are used in signatures of this kind the difference is substantial."

Even Forgery May Bind Employer

It is well established that a theatre owner may ratify a contract and make himself bound thereby although the same was signed by an unauthorized person with a rubber-stamp or other means; and, of course, a theatre owner may ratify even a forged agreement, provided the terms of the completed or ratified contract are agreeable to all parties involved. For example, in the very recent case of Mondragon V. Mondragon, 257 S. W. 215, the court said:

"A signature made by a rubber-stamp, typewriter, or printing, or by another without authority and in the absence of the grantor, or even, when forged, may be adopted and the instrument to which it is signed become binding."

Forgery need not relate to a complete instrument. To constitute the crime of forgery, it is only essential that three things should exist: (1) false making or alteration of a written instrument; (2) for the purpose of fraud; (3) the instrument is capable of effecting fraud.

Although the circumstances of an act of an employe in signing a theatre owner's name by use of a rubber-stamp, typewriter, initials or otherwise, for the purpose of defrauding the theatre owner may render the employe liable to conviction of the crime of forgery, yet the theatre owner always is liable in damages for failure to fulfill the assumed obligations if the theatre owner has made the employe responsible.

Under all circumstances the person who authorizes another to sign an instrument is responsible.

How Ex-Employes May Be Restricted

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that many higher courts have held ex-employes liable and granted injunctions against their utilizing confidential information after accepting employment with a competitor, or personally engaging in the theatre business, it may be advisable and beneficial to include restrictive clauses in employment contracts. In the case of Boone, 287 S. W. 225, the higher court held an employe bound by a restrictive contract which contained a clause, as follows:

"I agree that, in the event my employment is terminated for any reason, I will not injure or attempt to injure your business or the business of your clients or associated interests by communicating with or otherwise getting in touch with your customers, directly or indirectly, in any way, form or manner; but, on the other hand, by my conduct and action, I will at all times do all I can to make friends for you. I further agree that, in the event of termination of my employment for any reason, I will not engage in the same or similar line of business in the same city, either for myself or another person, firm, or corporation, for the period of one year immediately following the termination of my employment to you."

EQUIPMENT and OPERATION

A DEPARTMENT OF PRACTICAL COUNSEL AND TIMELY INFORMATION

CONDUCTED BY J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

[Technical descriptions of products of specific manufacturers appear in this department without distinction between projection and other functions]

The Practical Theatre Man's Approach to Acoustic Problems

● An effort to state as simply as possible basic causes of defective acoustics, and essential considerations in effecting real and economical correction

DEFECTIVE acoustical conditions, even in theatres in which serious efforts had been made to rectify original faults, seem to me so common that I am going to take the privilege of dealing with acoustics in these columns, even though they have been and may be more appropriately discussed elsewhere in the publication. Some of the matters considered have been written about on many occasions, but I should like to approach them in my own way, exclusively from the point of view of the practical theatre man, hoping that I may simplify basic acoustical problems somewhat.

Acoustics as a science had its birth about 1897; it thus is of relatively recent development. About 1895 Harvard University completed the Fogg Art Museum. In this museum was an auditorium in which the acoustics were so terrible that it was practically useless. On the staff of Harvard at the time was Prof. W. C. Sabine.

Professor Sabine undertook the study of acoustics because of the bad results in the auditorium of the Fogg Museum. After two years of study involving many experiments in many auditoriums both good and bad, Professor Sabine presented to the scientific world certain very fundamental but previously unrecognized principles. The work of Professor Sabine, with that of others, now permits the pre-determination of the acoustical qualities or characteristics of almost any enclosed space.

In the final analysis, from a practical theatre man's point of view, there are but three main defects to be overcome in a theatre auditorium. These three defects are reverberation, dead spots and echo, of importance in the order named. Most theatre men are familiar with these terms, so I will merely review them briefly.

Reverberation is a confused and inarticulate prolongation of sound. An auditorium should not be entirely without reverberation—some reverberation is of great help to articulate hearing.

Dead spots are what the term implies, spots in the auditorium where there is no articulate sound. The opposite of the dead spot is the sound focus, a location in the auditorium where sounds seem amplified.

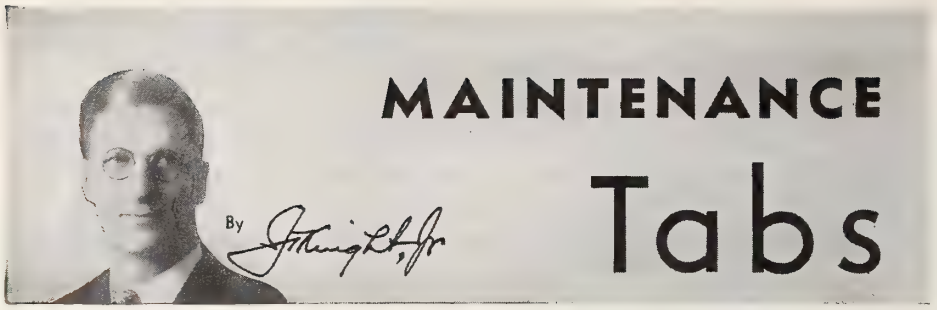
Echo is the term applied when sound is reflected as a definite articulate repetition of the original sound after an interval at least equal to the total duration of the original sound.

Simple Analysis of Sound Action

NOW, AT the risk of repetition, but to see the essential problem clearly, let's see just what happens. When sound produced in a room is reflected back and forth from walls, ceiling or floor, its intensity will gradually be reduced, because at each striking of a surface some of the sound intensity is absorbed, until it becomes inaudible. The time from the origin of the sound until it becomes inaudible, called the period of reverberation, is measured in seconds. The process, as outlined, of repeated reflection of sound, is called reverberation.

Sound travels at a very high speed and many such reflections are taking place at any one instant, thus causing a confusion that makes the original sound inarticulate. The smaller the auditorium, the shorter will be the time of sound travel. In large auditoriums the time of sound travel is appreciable, consequently the period of reverberation is more prolonged than in a small auditorium. It follows from this that acoustics in large auditoriums generally present a much more serious problem than in a small auditorium.

As stated earlier some reverberation in an auditorium is necessary, and the exact amount is in fact an empirical time of reverberation which experience and experimentation have indicated as right. Please note that I used the word empirical. Webster defines empirical as "founded upon experiment or experience; depending upon the observation of phenomena." This definition makes the previous sentence a bit redundant, but it is left that way for emphasis.



The ideal condition for intelligibility of sound are: first, each syllable spoken, or each note of music, should die away to inaudibility before the next is heard; and second, the sound intensity must be great enough for audibility, or in other words, to carry the sound to the farthermost listener.

Echo-Producing Conditions

Dead spots, sound foci, and echo can all be discussed as one, for dead spots and sound foci result as a consequence of echo-producing conditions. Echo arises as the result of regular reflection of sound from smooth hard walls or ceiling just exactly as a mirror may reflect a beam of light.

Should we, in the mirror experiment, roughen the surface, the beam of light will not be reflected without scattering, but it will be diffused and scattered in all directions. So with walls and ceilings—if they are roughened on a sufficiently large scale, the sound will not be reflected as an echo, but it will be scattered in many directions. Sound travels through air as a wave, and along the line of the wave there are alternate bodies of air under compression and rarefaction. A dead spot occurs when the sound wave of a reflected sound is retarded, and returns to a given location in the same compression intensity as the later directly transmitted sound, in this way completely or partly neutralizing the direct sound. If the reflected sound wave is "out of step" with the direct sound wave so that the compressions of the two waves occur at the same instant, an unusually loud sound will be produced. If you suffer from dead spots or sound foci, look for curved walls as the cause of the trouble.

CARPET FACTS: Except in some parts of large theatres—for instance, grand foyers—the bulk of the carpet used in theatres is either Wilton or Velvet. Every theatre manager is responsible for the care of some carpet, and to care properly for any type of equipment or furnishings, and to purchase them wisely, it is really necessary to know something about them. Of the two weaves, the Wilton weave is considered superior to the Velvet; however, there can be several grades of each weave, due primarily to the material out of which it is made.

There are certain determining factors in arriving at the quality of carpet, and, consequently, it is necessary to know these factors in selecting carpet, otherwise the buyer is at the mercy of the carpet salesman. These factors are (1) pitch, (2) number of frames (apparent and buried), (3) number of wires per inch, (4) shot construction, (5) depth of pile, and (6) character of yarn.

The grade of carpet generally found in theatres is of the Velvet weave. The better grades of Velvet resemble Wilton in general appearance, but the details of the patterns differ widely. Velvet has many more possibilities in color combination than Wilton, and for that reason it has appealed to theatre men; however, the quality of the Velvet weave is definitely not equal to that of a good Wilton weave.

In Velvet only one continuous strand of yarn is used—this must be uniform and of general good quality. The natural-colored yarn is wound around a large drum of exact diameter, then colors are printed (or dyed) on the wrapping of the yarn in accordance with the charts of a given pattern. Each strand of yarn that makes up the width of the carpet is dyed separately so that when in its proper place and woven into the carpet it helps to build up the pattern of the carpet.

In all Velvets jute yarn, which has been sized, is used for weight and strength as stuffers (in direction of the warp threads). A velvet carpet is very stiff and the back is usually stained. Water or moisture is very detrimental to Velvet carpets — surface shampooing has in some instances practically destroyed Velvet carpet because jute, even though sized, is not impervious to water and softens quickly.

Wilton is woven on a Jacquard loom, which is really operated by a number of cards in which holes are punched. These cards operate in a manner very similar to that of a music roll. The holes in the cards represent the pattern and the color combinations.

The yarn of the colors not called for by the card are referred to as "buried" —they continue through the length of the carpet, but do not show in the pile. It is this fact that adds to the resiliency and quality of Wilton over Velvet.

Each yarn is raised into position to form the tuft, and looped over a wire, the depth of which establishes the height of the pile. As this wire is withdrawn from the loops, a knife attached to the end of it cuts each loop, thus forming the tufted pile surface of the carpet. The number of tufts to the lineal inch of carpet is the measure of the compactness of the weave. The number of tufts is determined by the number of wires; these tufts can be most easily counted from the back of the carpet. The number of wires per inch thus is one of the determining factors of quality.

The strands, usually of cotton, that run lengthwise, are called the warp; those that run across the carpet, the weft (the carpet man refers to them as shots). It is always necessary to have at least two weft shots (strands) of cotton yarn to secure properly the tufts. In better grades of Witlon weave, a third weft shot is put in on the surface side between the tufts in order to hold down the pile more securely.

In the final analysis, Wilton carpeting is recommended for theatre use, but good grades of Velvet give excellent service, and immediate cost factors may advise its selection.

handling of acoustics because the intensity of the sounds at the source (loudspeakers) can be varied. But in many instances engineers for sound companies have recommended so much acoustical treatment that they have reduced the efficiency of theatres for the spoken voice. This is one reason for the tremendous increase in the number of installations for voice reinforcement with stage acts.

Some while back Prof. V. O. Knudsen, a physicist eminent for his contributions to the science of acoustics, has developed a chart which shows at a glance the acceptable (optimal) time of reverberation for auditoriums of certain cubic foot contents. This chart is about as authoritative as any thing we have today. However, the acceptable times as shows on this chart are not to be accepted as absolutely rigid. There are auditoriums which exceed these limits in either direction by several tenths of a second and yet are satisfactory. The time of reverberation can be expressed as:

$$T = \frac{0.0sv}{-s \log_e (1-a)}$$

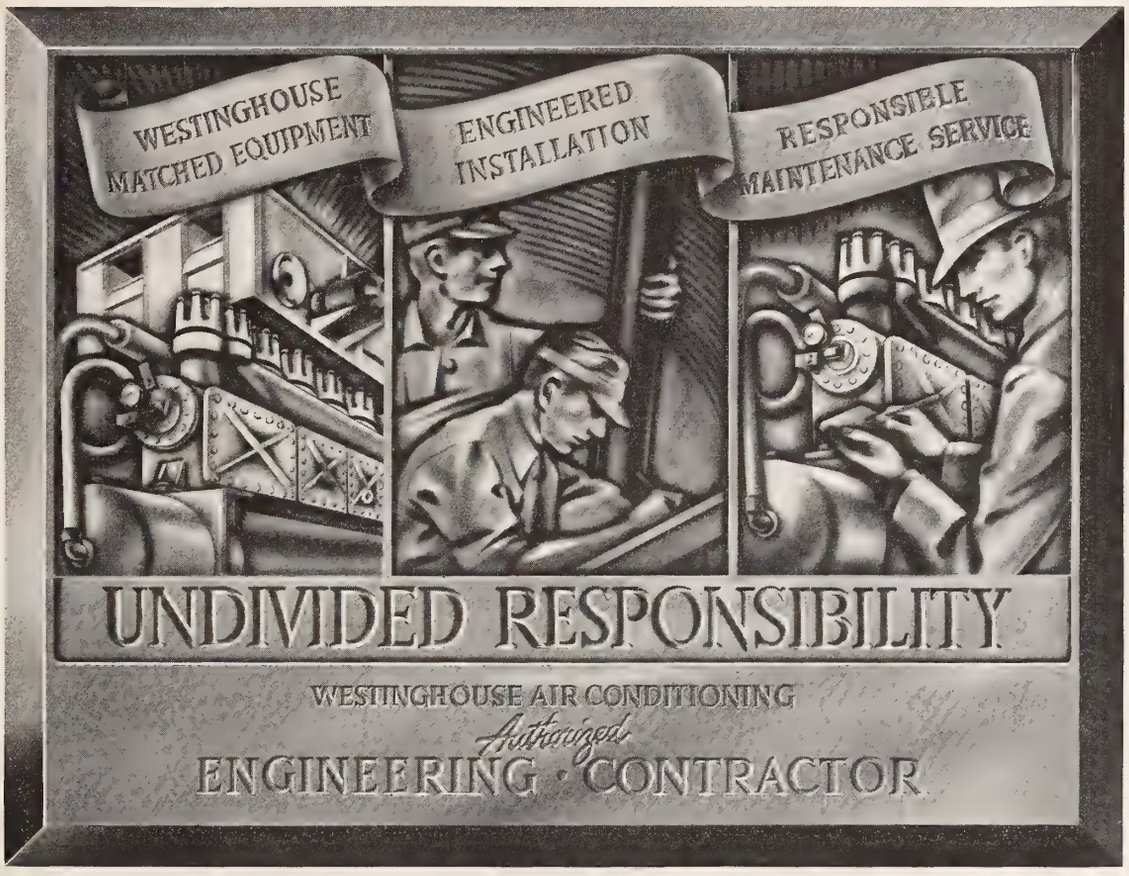
where T = reverberation time in seconds
V = volume of room in cubic feet
S = total area of absorbing surfaces in square feet
A = average coefficient of absorption of these surfaces

Prof. Sabine's formula is somewhat simpler, but is regarded as less accurate:

$$T = \frac{0.0sv}{A}$$

where T = reverberation time in seconds
V = volume of room in cubic feet
A = the area of absorbing surfaces times the coefficients of absorption

Sabine's formula is sufficiently accurate for our use in theatres. Different materials differ widely in their capacity to absorb sound. Any one of the outstanding manufacturers of sound absorbing materials will be glad to furnish you with the coefficient of absorption on any materials which he manufactures. The coefficient of absorption for most materials of course varies with the frequency of the sound.



Consideration of Materials

Past experience has indicated that the acoustical surveys by some companies have left much to be desired from a practical point of view. In the first place they were wont to recommend only the most expensive materials and the materials that are hardest to use architecturally. In the second place, they leaned very much toward overdoing the acoustical treatment to the point where the auditorium became "dead," and in many instances we theatre people have removed expensive treatment after installing it to obtain satisfactory results.

Today we usually can obtain excellent recommendations and results from the engineering departments of the larger manufacturers of sound absorbing materials.

Though the new types of speaker systems for mid range and high frequency are still directional, they are nevertheless somewhat less directional in actual practice than the earlier models. This has aided the acoustical problem very much. However, the expanding of the frequency range in reproduced sound has definitely aggravated the problem in theatres, so we are left just about where we were acoustically. Still with acoustical problems on our hands, we must provide money for sound absorbing material. It is my belief that we of the theatre must devote more time to the study and understanding of our acoustical conditions if we are going to get really satisfactory sound at a cost we can afford to pay.—J.T.K.

Appel & Company, New York uniform manufacturers, says, "I believe that we will never revert to the Prussian major-general type of costly braided uniforms, but instead will have simple designs with cloth pipings and solid-colored colors and stripes of contrasting materials, as in this design. The high colors come in perhaps twelve different shades and are usually of serge, whipcord, gabardine or broadcloth. Two-tone combinations are arrived at by placing light and dark fabrics together."

A New Maintenance Weapon: Electrostatic Air Cleansing

[Cleansing the air of dirt which has heretofore defied all filtering methods, has been brought about by an electrostatic process developed by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, which is said to be proven successful by various experimental tests and by the notable installation of such equipment in the Field Building, tallest structure in Chicago. Engineers assert that this development may well mean the inauguration of a new branch of the electrical industry. It is reported here because few types of buildings are more critically affected by dirt in air than theatres, with their various fabrics, areas reached with difficulty for regular cleaning, and motion picture screens. Electrostatic cleansing is, at all events, a most interesting new approach to the problem of maintenance, with which theatre operators are vitally concerned.—THE EDITOR.]

The ionizer and collector cell assembly, with the tubes and wires from the ionizing chamber shown at left, and the collector cells in which the ionized dirt particles are forced from the air, at right.

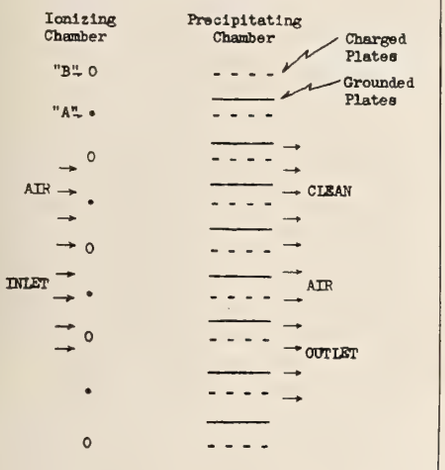
CLEAN AIR, rid of 99% by weight of all particles present upon introduction from outdoors, is being provided the Field Building in Chicago by a simplified process of electric precipitation. The dirt is removed, not by filtering, but by charging all of the particles electrically, then "attracting" them out of the air by passing them through an electrostatic field.

In the cleaning process the air is first bombarded by ions (minute electrical charges) emitted by very fine wires carrying a charge of 12,000 volts. The ions attach themselves to particles in the air, thus giving the particles an electrical charge. Next the treated air is drawn through a series of cells consisting of alternately spaced high-potential and grounded plates. By charging the high-potential plates at 5,000 volts an electrical field is established. As the treated air passes through these cells, the charged particles adhere to the plates and the air so freed of all solid matter passes on through ducts that lead to the areas being served by the equipment. According to the Westinghouse statement:

"In the Field Building in Chicago, first to have an electrostatic installation, 18 units have been installed which are capable of cleaning 272,000 cubic feet of air each minute. In a year's time, it is estimated, the installations will have collected approximately 600 bushels of impurities, 90% of which will consist of particles one-hundredth the diameter of human hair. By weight, the collection will consist of one-third ash; another third fixed carbon, soot lampblack and other derivatives; and the remaining third volatile matter such as oils and greases. Sulphur, bacteria, pollen in season, and other substances found in suspension in the atmosphere of any city, are also deposited on the plates."

Tests conducted by Westinghouse for several years show that in Pittsburgh, where units have been installed as part of warm air heating systems, curtains which ordinarily are changed every two weeks, remained clean for months. The Westinghouse statement continues:

"Particles under two and one-half thousandths of an inch in size pass readily through 200-mesh screens of mechanical filters. Although otherwise invisible, these particles may be seen as motes flickering in sunbeams; however, they are exceedingly coarse when compared with the atmospheric type of dust that fills the air of cities and removable only by electrical treatment.



"The average particle in cigarette smoke is approximately four-millionths of an inch in diameter. Billions of such tiny particles are emitted with each puff of smoke. If magnified 250,000 times, the larger particles which readily pass through 200-mesh screens would appear to be 50 feet in diameter. An averaged sized dirt particle of the type which fills the atmosphere, at this magnification, would appear to be as big as a baseball. However, enlarged to the same degree, the average sized smoke particle would be a little more than an inch in diameter or slightly smaller than a golf ball. The ability of the electrical air cleaner, to remove particles of the smallest size from the air provides the engineers' solution to the dirt problem of city buildings."

Although the Field Building installation is the pioneer installation for office buildings, Westinghouse engineers have found applications for the process other than those for homes and offices. It will soon provide clean air in one of the chemical laboratories of the Bureau of Standards in Washington; it is being considered for hospitals; in an automatic telephone exchange it prevents dust from collecting on switch contacts and failures from this cause have been reduced 60 per cent; one industrial application now cleans the gas for steel mill furnaces to prevent the nozzles of the burners from clogging with foreign matter; art galleries may use it as a protective measure to prevent dirt scum from deteriorating precious paintings and sculpture.

Current costs to operate the equipment are low. A unit for the average home requires about as much current as is consumed by a 60-watt lamp, and the Field Building system, cleaning air for the lower arcade, the first, second, third, and fourth floors, operates on a proportionately low basis.

The precipitator consists primarily of a system of cells made up of flat aluminum plates. In each cell there are 111 plates, each 8x9 inches in size. The Chicago system includes 369 cells, or 40,959 plates. The tungsten ionizing wires are but .005 inches in diameter, and nearly half a mile of this wire is required for this installation. Dirt collected by the units is cleaned off every month or six weeks.

HOW THE ELECTROSTATIC AIR CLEANER WORKS

Schematic diagram showing how the electrostatic air cleaner draws ("magnetizes") impurities from the air. A fan draws the air through an inlet between a series of grounded metal tubes, "B". The dots marked "A" represent small wires between cylinders, one wire between each pair. These wires are supplied d. c. voltage generated by a small power pack, and this voltage ionizes the air between the wires and the cylinders. All particles passing through this area are electrically charged. The air then passes into a precipitating chamber, in which are closely spaced plates parallel to the air stream. Alternate plates are grounded, the others are connected to d. c. source, creating a secondary electrostatic area between the plates. As air passes through the parallel plates, an electrostatic force is exerted upon the charged particles, drawing them to the grounded plates, upon which they are deposited. The clean air is then discharged through the cleaner outlet.

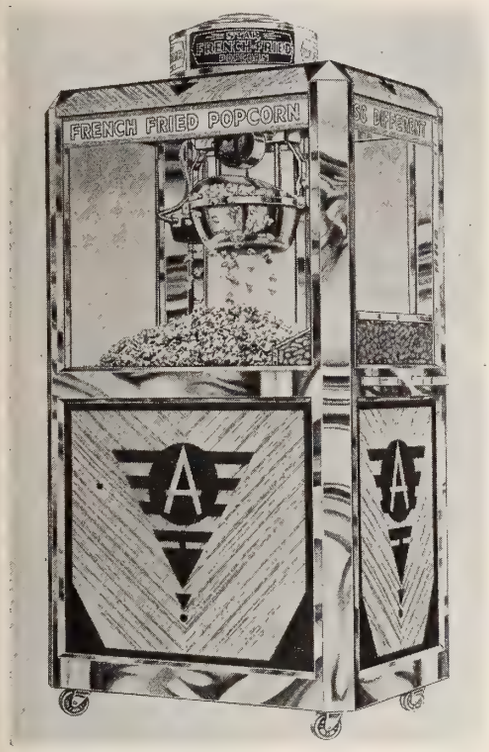
Sees Air-Conditioning No Cause of Water Shortage

In contradiction to the fears expressed by some investigators, including the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Walter Kaempffert, science editor of the New York Times, gave in a recent article an estimate that air-conditioning demand in 1936 was less than 1% of the water consumption of cities of 100,000 population or more, and can be further reduced by universal resort to water-economizing devices mentioned.



Use of a cooling tower or evaporative condenser to permit repeated circulation of the same water in air-conditioning systems, was cited by Mr. Kaempffert as a ready means of reducing water costs and ending fears that the spread of air-conditioning results in water shortage. Either device, he pointed out, will reduce the water requirements of an air-conditioning installation by 90 to 95 per cent.

Pop-Corn Machine Designed Especially For Theatre Use

AN ALL-ELECTRIC pop-corn popping machine specifically designed for theatre lobby use has been developed by The Advance Manufacturing Company of St. Louis. The makers claim that it will produce a dollar's worth of pop-corn for less than a penny's worth of electricity and will show a profit of approximately 70c on each dollar's worth of pop-corn sold. It has a maximum capacity of $20 worth of pop-corn per hour.

The decorative design rests on red and black porcelain enamelled panels, with chromium trimming and an illuminated revolving advertising sign at the top.

The machine is a modification, suited to theatre purposes, of a similar device used at the Chicago World's Fair, and is known as the "World's Fair Special Model."

It is a model of this company's Cutawl and is designed for theatres whose needs do not justify purchase of one of this manufacturer's larger models.

Cataloged as model Q1, the new device possesses sufficient power to cut through two thicknesses of ¼-inch plywood, or corresponding thicknesses of other materials, at

What to Do While Waiting for The Sound Service Engineer

● Even though actual repair may be impossible, the theatre staff can do much to help the service man rectify the trouble more quickly. Here's how

By AARON NADELL

WHENEVER A sound emergency is serious enough to justify calling in the service engineer, there are always a number of things the theatre staff, in and out of the projection room, can and should do meanwhile to save time. Since prompt repair of any difficulty known to the audience, or likely to become known to them, is the first interest of the theatre, any steps that will facilitate the work of the sound man when he does arrive are obviously in the theatre's own interest.

Many such steps can and should be taken. In an occasional instance, intelligent preliminary efforts of the type to be described may turn out to go so far that they actually cure the trouble, even though at first it seemed one that required more expert assistance. But where this unexpected benefit is not realized, the time needed by the sound man to effect a cure can still be cut down very materially.

Information Saves Time

The first thing any sound engineer needs on entering a theatre that has sent a trouble call, is full and accurate information as to the nature and location of the difficulty. The very first thing he does is to obtain that information. Many engineers, however, no longer ask questions. They have found by sad experience that the information given them is not always skillfully collected, and sometimes far from accurate; they all too often rely on their own observations—which take time. But if they can get the same data, or most of it, through trustworthy answers to simple questions, time can be saved; a great deal of it in some cases.

For example, the engineer may need to know whether a given trouble sounds the same with both projectors, and he may have to spend twenty minutes doing nothing until the changeover allows him to observe the point for himself. Again, in the case of an erratic trouble, such as a noise or hum that comes and goes, the visiting engineer may just have to sit down and wait until he hears it—hears it two or three times under different conditions, from both projectors, in the feature and in the shorts. All or most of this the theatre staff might have done while he was on the way.

Collecting accurate information is the first thing the theatre staff can do while waiting for the sound engineer. The need for accuracy, however, cannot be stressed too strongly. It is far from common, in spite of the obvious fact that no clue at all is much better than a false one. Information should be gathered not only in the projection room, but also (except in cases of complete loss of sound) in the auditorium.

A System of Accurate Observation

THE AUDITORIUM observer should know not only what to listen for, and how, but also how to describe intelligently what he has heard. The "sound observer" in very large theatres which have been serviced by this writer, formerly spoke of all sound defects as "distortions." There was no way of telling whether he meant hum, noise, distorted quality, fluctuating volume, flutter, wows or poor recording. A little simple education was necessary; after which the observer became so valuable that his information sometimes made it possible to diagnose sound troubles quite accurately over the telephone, and to recommend by long distance telephone remedies that worked.

Only two things are necessary in observing sound troubles in the auditorium. The first is to classify the difficulty; the second to note accurately the conditions under which it is heard.

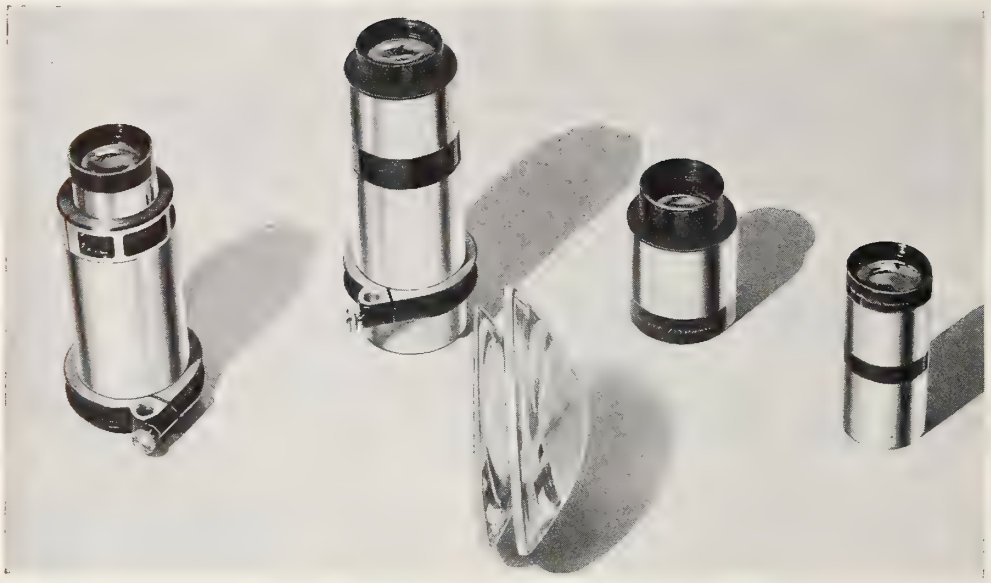
Instructing Staff Members

For purposes of classification a theatre of moderate size can well afford, and profit by, an hour's empty-house instruction, in which the projection crew co-operate with all members of the staff who may at some future time be called on to describe what some trouble is like. The following classes of trouble can be produced artificially at will: line frequency hum, sprocket hole hum, dividing line hum, flutter, noise.

Line frequency hum can be created by exposing to the photo-electric cell (while the projector is running) a trouble lamp or other bulb lighted by the a.c. power source.

Sprocket hole hum and dividing line hum can be created by temporarily misadjusting the film guides in the soundhead.

Flutter and wows can be created by temporarily misadjusting the take-up, skipping one of the two sound sprockets in threading, interfering manually with the action of the rotating stabilizer, or other simple means, depending on the design of the soundhead.



Noise can be created by running a piece of intentionally dirtied sound track.

Equipment and film used for such simple instruction are readily restored to proper condition, and the auditorium staff will know how to describe the commoner sound difficulties in the future.

What and How to Check

They should also know exactly what conditions to look for when any trouble appears. The following should be checked: Is the defect recorded? Is it confined to one projector? Is it confined to one amplifying system (if there are two)? Is it in the loudspeakers?

The first is easily determined by listening for it in different reels, and in both feature and shorts; the second, by observing promptly which projector is operating; the third, by telephoning the projection room to learn which amplifying system is operating; the fourth, by listening in different parts of the auditorium, perhaps even behind screen to the individual speakers themselves.

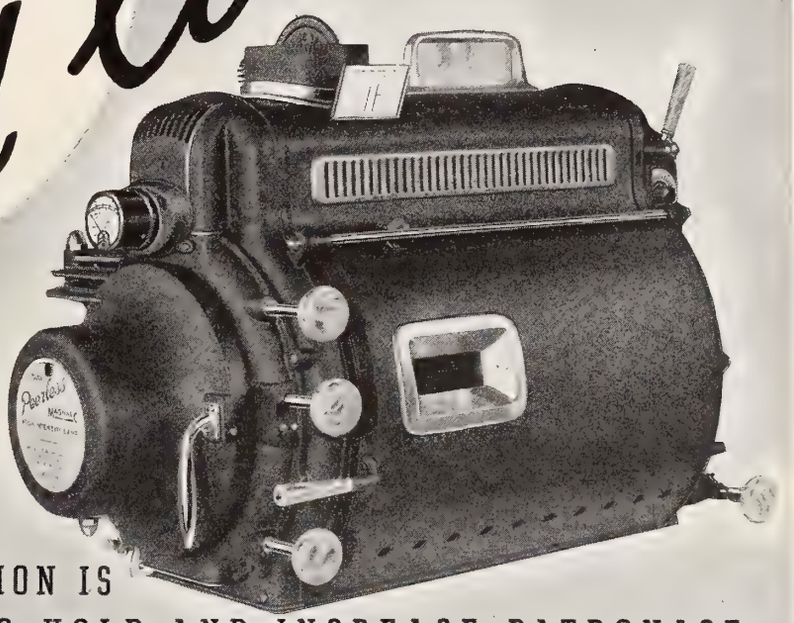
Tests Projection Staff Can Make

WHEN THE house staff have reported a trouble accurately and completely, both as to nature and conditions of appearance, they have done their share. The projection crew can go further.

One thing they can do is note their meters very carefully. For example, in the case of irregular noise: the location of the fault is sometimes indicated by a meter needle that fluctuates, however slightly, in synchronism with the disturbance. The indication thus obtained may or may not enable the projection crew to complete repairs themselves, but at least will tell the service engineer, when he arrives, just what amplifier or rectifier needs attention, and keep him from wasting time on any others.

Similarly, the projection staff often—in fact, usually—can run any trouble down to some one item of apparatus, even though repair of the faulty item itself may be beyond their resources.

In cases of complete loss of sound, headphone tests made while the engineer is enroute will always reveal approximately, and perhaps exactly, the panel, cabinet or connecting line in which the fault exists.



Noises and hums can be treated similarly, although if there is an intermission, even a short one, better results may be achieved by first disconnecting the projectors, then the amplifiers in succession from input to output, until the disturbance disappears. If the trouble is found to be in a projector, and the intermission allows, the machine may be run without film, in the case of noise, to determine if the cause is microphonic; or the arc feed motor may be operated in cases of hum. In these tests the loudspeakers are, of course, switched off.

Checking Speaker Field Excitation

Or, assuming for example that the observer in the auditorium has reported sound weak in one part of the theatre, indicating speaker trouble, the projection staff (or stage crew) can use their meters to check the field excitation of the suspected speaker, and headphones to test its voice input. Thus, while they may possibly be unable to repair a fault in either of the two lines or their associated apparatus, they can at least tell the sound engineer definitely which one needs repairing. Compare the assistance the engineer receives in this way with the more common condition in which he arrives at the theatre knowing only that someone has reported loss of volume—a trouble that can have its source almost anywhere!

Assured of genuine and really informative co-operation, the sound engineer himself will almost always be pleased to suggest and outline procedures that the projection crew can follow, in all the commoner types of troubles, according to the

HIGH INTENSITY PROJECTION IS NOW INDISPENSABLE TO HOLD AND INCREASE PATRONAGE

● A superior and outstanding quality of projection is required to hold the interest of the highly critical present day audience. Brilliant, Snappy, Snow White Magnarc High Intensity Light adds tremendously to the quality of your picture, be it black and white or color photography.

For the past four years theatres the country over have been modernizing projection with Peerless Magnarcs. Projection is the heart of the picture theatre and the most important place to modernize.

Don't think that high intensity projection is a luxury. It is a necessity. 4000 theatres having 75 per cent of the nation's total seating capacity are already using high intensity projection. Such wide use and immediate adoption must prove that it is the small theatre's only alternative to hold and increase patronage.

Peerless Magnarc Lamps produce 200 to 300 per cent more light on the screen than low intensity lamps, at the same current cost. Peerless Magnarc will modernize your projection and will keep it modern for years to come. It's the finest arc lamp ever built.

The projection crew can go still further. Knowing approximately the nature of the difficulty and the steps that will probably be needed to remedy it, they make due preparations for the actual work. The most efficient projection crews, when they believe a soldering iron will be needed, have it hot and ready when the service man arrives; the spare parts that may be called for are laid out and waiting, panels and cabinets that may be involved are opened and their wiring made instantly accessible. These last services save only minutes; some of them only seconds, but it all helps. It does not, in the last analysis, help the service man. It helps the theatre.

The Menace of Careless Oiling And Lack of Needed Repairs

● Often discussed with respect to sound, these matters are here examined from the point of view of pictorial values, which are more important than ever today

PROJECTIONISTS, and their bosses as well, seem not always to realize how large a part of the attractiveness of current Hollywood productions rests on sheer beauty of photography, and how easily that beauty can be ruined in the projection room. Film that reaches the theatre a potential delight to the eye is often capable of producing only an unimpressive image by the time it has finished its first trip through the projectors.

The injury is often of an incurable nature; but even when it is not, the print may be in urgent demand next day, leaving the exchange no time to make repairs. Thus the whole industry suffers through loss of an important element of audience appeal, created at considerable cost not only to help a single production, but also to foster the theatre-going habit in general.

There is nothing a theatre can do more easily than spoil the eye appeal of a reel of film.

A projector out of repair, in which lubricating oil seeps from the bearings on to the parts that come in contact with the celluloid, will do all the damage necessary. If the projector is in good condition this can still happen, assuming that the projectionist is not careful to wipe away surplus oil, between reels if necessary; but a worn projector, one in which some bearing has become enlarged, may drip or almost "rain" oil to the point where no human vigilance can keep the film from becoming smeared with it.

Yet replacement of such a bearing is one of the less expensive projector repairs.

The Drippy Oil Can!

Careless or hasty lubrication may leave oil on sprockets, idlers and other places where it shouldn't be, and is far from unknown; but a much more common fault is a drippy oil can. The projectionist can wipe away the drippings, of course, but he may overlook a drop or two that has slipped into an odd corner and will presently be whirled against film or sprockets by the action of the mechanism. Then thousands of dollars worth of fine photography will be ruined for want of a 50c oil can of proper design.

Oil creates smears on the film which are projected to the screen; the edges of an oil spot have a lens effect upon the light, bending the rays somewhat and impairing the sharpness of the focus; focus is affected also in another way, inasmuch as the presence of oil on the celluloid interferes with the proper action of the tension pads that are intended to hold the film firmly at the point where it passes through the light beam. Naturally, oil on the sound track, or excess seepage into the soundhead, does a great deal of harm to the reproduction; a factor that has often been mentioned in these pages and needs no further elaboration now.

Scratches and Dirt And Whence They Come

DIRT AND scratches do even more harm than oil. All three forms of damage can and do go together, however, when the cause of all of them is improper lubrication plus dirty lubricant. Oil cans with a layer of grit at the bottom are incredibly common in projection rooms. One reason may be that many cannot be so opened that they may be wiped clean. But they can be flushed clean by using up a bit of oil for the purpose. If the dirt clings, because of old, thickened oil at the bottom, hot oil or Carbona will flush it out. At the worst, new oil cans are cheap. Exhibitors may find it a good policy to buy new ones, and see to it that the old ones are thrown away, every few months. The condition of the oil cans should always be an item of the periodic inspection routine.

Protection of the Emulsion

Dirt that is projected on the screen, or that scores the film with scratches which

COMMENT ON PROJECTION AFFAIRS

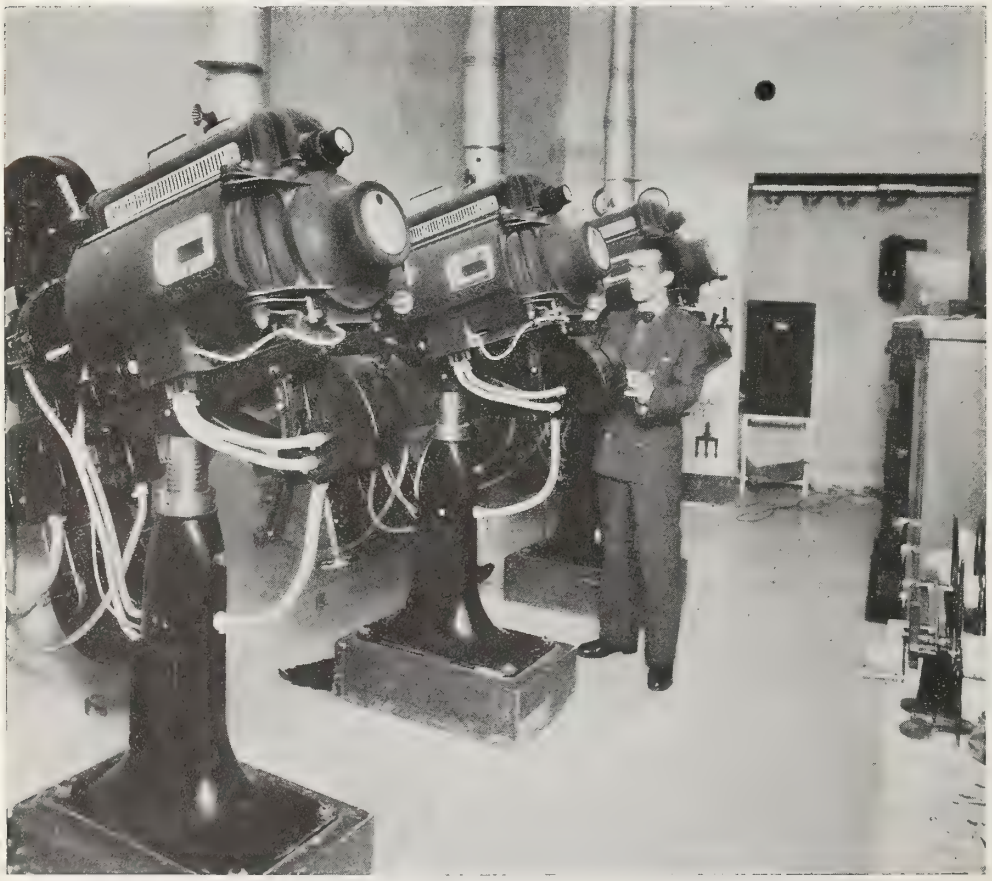
PROVIDING EFFECTIVE DEFENSE AGAINST FILM DAMAGE CLAIMS

PROBABLY AN average of six samples of damaged film reach my desk each week, accompanied by a request for an opinion as to how the damage was inflicted, and whether or not the theatre should be compelled to pay for the film. Such samples are not always accompanied by adequate information upon which to form an opinion based upon certainty; moreover, it is by no means always possible either to locate the source of damage, or to say it was caused in the theatre accused.

Before me lies a roll of damaged film about 30 feet in length. It comes from a theatre in an Illinois town of about 1,700 people, with a request for an opinion as to cause of the damage. The damage consists in one deep, thin scratch mark extending through the entire 30 feet, plus several shorter scratches of varying length and at different positions in the width of the print. In addition, at many points the film is cracked clear through for from two to five sprocket holes, along the inner edges of the holes. At some points from two to five sprocket holes are missing. At three or four irregularly spaced points chunks of film one to one and one-half inches long by an average depth of half an inch, have been torn away. The film is relatively new. The exchange, of course, asserts that the theatre in question did the damage and has billed it for 543 feet of film.



Little information is supplied except that since the theatre has projected many prints before and after showing this picture, with no indication of, or claim for, damage, their projectors cannot be at fault. The reader may see what I am confronted with in such cases. However, let us discuss this damaged print under the light of cold common sense and known facts familiar to every projectionist of experience.

First of all, since the scratch marks are all on the cellloid side of the film, we may omit deposits of film cement or emulsion as the cause. Unquestionably, the long scratch mark is due to contact with some tiny point of metal somewhere along the path of the film through the projector, or while being pulled through a film measuring machine or some sort of film cleaning device. Much the same conclusion applies to the shorter marks, except that the effect is intermittent.

As to the broken sprocket holes, there too a most careful examination discloses no indication pointing to the probable cause of damage. The same is true concerning the large pieces ripped out. In the whole film there is nothing that would justify expression of an opinion, save only that we may say with every confidence that a projector that would inflict all this havoc on one reel of film most emphatically would not project other prints faultessly.

And now to the point of these remarks: The projectionist who wishes to protect himself and his employer from the possibility of unjustified claims by the exchange for damaged film has just one possible course open. When a print is received, even before it is placed upon a projector, he must carefully inspect it, reporting all damage worthy of note to the theatre manager in writing. If the damage be serious, as in this case, the prints should be shown to the manager. If a damaged print be projected just once before this be done, there is no protection. The exchange can and probably will say the damage was done during that projection.

Many years of experience has conclusively demonstrated the fact that the only real protection in cases of film damaged before its receipt is the course above described. With such an inspection and report on file in the manager's office the projectionist is safe—and so is the manager and theatre operator.

HOW TO OBTAIN CERTAIN TOOLS

E. W. WITLE, projectionist of Marion, S. Dak., writes, "Regarding the recent article on projectionists' tools, may I ask a few questions? Where can I get offset screwdrivers, a soft jawed vise, rawhide hammer and watchmakers' screwdriver? No local hardware store handles anything like that. Omaha would be our closest source of supply and that's quite a jaunt, even in a good car. Another thing: are the patented preparations for cleaning glass okay for lenses? I have tried one on port glasses. It worked fine, but I'm afraid to try it on my lenses.

"And now here is a point on which I am seeking your advice, rather than information. You probably know we small town projectionists must have some source of income other than projection if we are to keep the appetite satisfied and a roof over our heads. I've been doing whatever came to hand in the daytime, but am thinking of spending some of my spare time and coin in a home study radio course. Out of reams of advertising, in which each is "best" according to its own statements, I have finally selected one backed by RCA. If you have not looked it over, will you do so and let me know what you think about it."

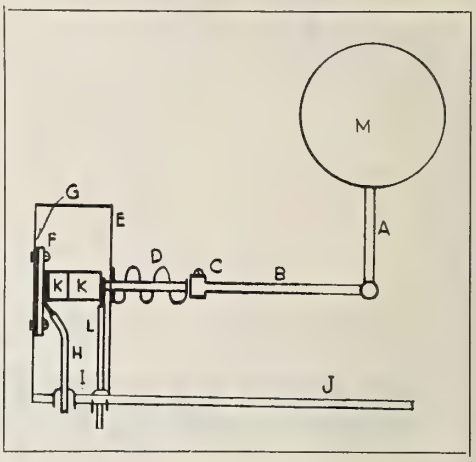
As to the tools, a catalogue is being sent to Friend Witle which will, I think, meet at least some of his requirements. As to where the split screwdriver is to be had, I have not as yet been able to find out myself. Such a thing is made, but where? Do any of you know? A copper hammer, or one made of lead and babbit will serve very well in lieu of one of rawhide and may be made by any projectionist. Lead alone is too soft. A soft-jawed vise may be made by bending a sheet of brass or copper or suitable thickness (1/16-inch will serve, though ⅛ would be more serviceable) over the vise jaws to fit. If properly done, it will extend around the ends of the jaws, and the top and sides be soldered together. It then may be removed or installed at will.

As to glass cleaning preparations, some are all right, but it is safest, and probably cheapest, too, in the long run, to follow the directions on page 118 of the Bluebook of Projection. Lenses are pretty costly, so why take chances? As to watchmakers' screwdrivers, surely the local jeweler can obtain anything you may need. Why not have your local hardware merchant order a long blade, ⅛-inch wide, for you, if he does not carry it in stock. If its blade be too wide, it can easily be trimmed down on an emory wheel.



Concerning advice as to correspondence courses, I must decline. Too much of success or failure in such courses depends upon the individual himself. One man will take such a course and shout its praises. Another will take the same course and declare it to be not worth Adam. And there you are!

MAKING REWINDER AUTOMATIC SWITCH

J. L. HOWARD of St. Joseph, Mo., pays me the honor of complimenting my efforts in the field of projection and asks, "Can you advise as to the best method of constructing a switch that will open the motor circuit and thus automatically stop the rewinder the instant rewinding is done. The slapping of the film end around for some seconds after rewinding is finished is certainly not beneficial to it."

In the first place, Friend Howard, if your rewinder speed is reduced properly there will be no injurious "slapping." One simple and effective method of constructing such a switch is illustrated in the accompanying diagram. Any projectionist can readily construct it.

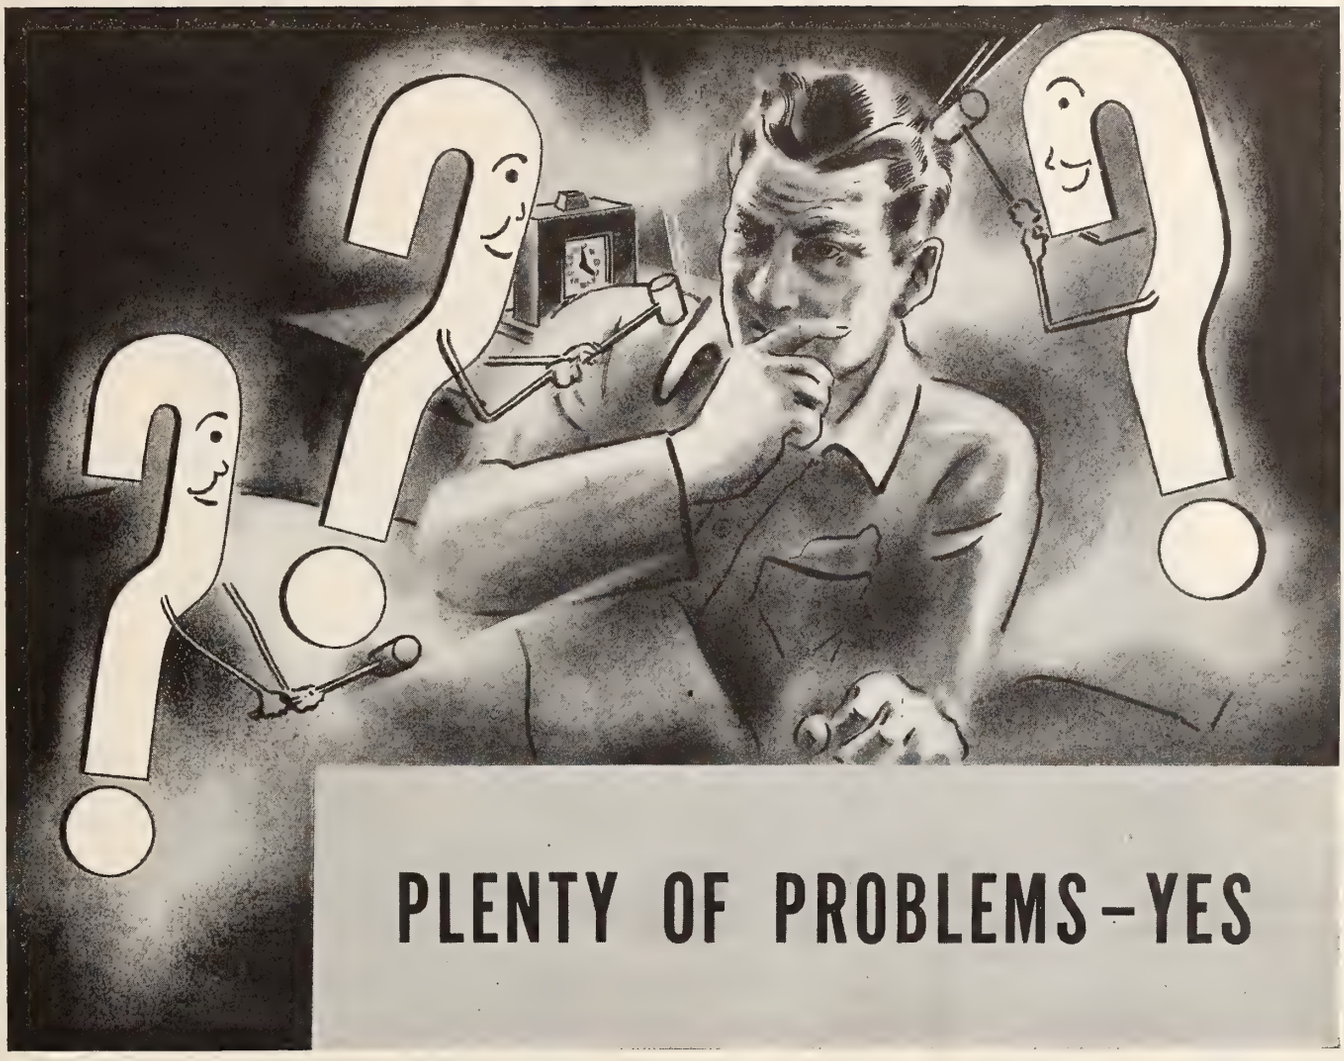
Either upon rewinder table top J, or upon a wall (if that be more convenient) attach a metal box E, to the rear wall of which attach metal plate F, mounted upon insulating sheet G, first having drilled and threaded a hole in the plate center and inserted a screw of suitable diameter as hereinafter indicated. Wrapped around this screw, against plate F and soldered thereto, locate one end of one of the circuit wires (H) supplying the rewinder motor with current, these being carried down through the table top through porcelain insulator I. Upon this screw mount a suitable length—say, half an inch or so—of the largest cored carbon available, having drilled the core out the length of the protruding screw. This establishes one end of the wire circuit and insulates it from the box.



Next, through a suitable hole insulated by a poreclain insulator such as are used to carry wires through floor joist, establish rod B (say, 1/6-inch in diameter), which must be suitably connected with part A, which you have connected firmly with rewinder clutch M—in such manner that it will be moved to the right (as we look at the sketch) by the friction pull when film is being rewound.

Upon the threaded end of rod B establish another bit of carbon, K, from one end of which a short length of core has been drilled. Upon the rod also place collar C, held by a suitable set screw, and a coil spring which, upon proper adjustment of collar C, will exert sufficient strength to move rod B to the right when friction pull of film is removed at completion of rewinding, one end of the spring of course resting upon the wall of box E.

It is now only necessary to fit contact surfaces of carbons KK together by use of bits of No. ½ sandpaper attached to opposite sides of a thin piece of flat wood, and to attach circuit wire L to rod B by solder. Such a switch should work perfectly, requiring only an occasional resurfacing of facings of carbons KK.

PLENTY OF PROBLEMS—YES

. . . but the big problem, how to increase public interest in motion pictures, is easy to solve. Here's the answer. Simplified High Intensity projection that puts picture quality on the screen, makes every picture seem a better picture, whether it is black and white or color.

When you install Simplified High Intensity projection you put your theater in line for successful competition with the best houses. You are giving patrons as much for their money as they get anywhere.

Yet this modern projection is not expensive. It gives two to three times as much light on the screen, but at so much less cost per light unit, that one admission per show will cover it.

More than 3500 theaters have installed Simplified High Intensity projection during the past four years. Theaters accounting for a majority of the nation's seating capacity now offer modern high intensity projection. So should you.

to me by Business Representative Joseph L. Thomas, who asks for my comments thereon through BETTER THEATRES.

There is little comment I can make until such time as the Class B union has proven itself. For the information of all and sundry, Class B unions include all theatre employes outside the projection room and stage, except theatre managers. Ushers, janitors, doormen, cashiers, ticket takers, etc., are eligible to membership.

I am a firm believer in unionism. It is a necessity! It was created to put a stop to many abuses of which I have had painful knowledge, for I started to work at trades while unions were few and very feeble.

However, now that organization has progressed to a point where it is powerful, unions are not always of a mind to deal justly, and that is most emphatically not good. It is not well for men to organize to stop outrages, then when sufficiently powerful, to commit them. I do not mean that Local 115B, which is the title of the new union, will do anything of that sort, but I do mean that with all employes in our theatres organized, great power will be in their hands, and unless that power be used wisely and conservatively, the employer may have exactly the same cause for complaint that labor had when I was young, and to some extent still has.

My best wishes to all Class B local unions. Demand adjustment of real grievances. That is as it should be. But first be sure they are just grievances. There are things an employer cannot do. When your grievances are just, more power to you!

SOME RECENT CHATS WITH THEATRE PEOPLE

RECENTLY I paid a visit to Williamsport, Pa., enjoying the hospitality of William Glodfelter, president of Local 411 in that city. While there it was my privilege to talk with several Williamsport theatre managers.

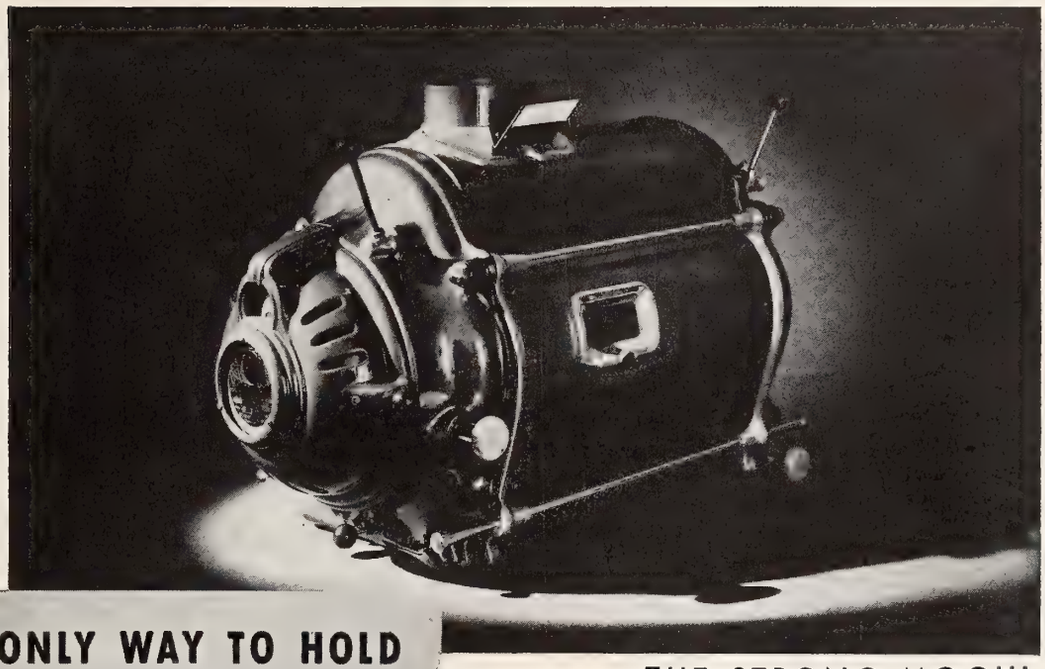
W. B. Wilson of the Rialto, had asked advice by mail some while before concerning size of screen image and kind of screen surface best suited to his auditorium. He had followed the advice given and was much pleased with results.

Mr. Wilson is regarded by some as in the "hard-boiled" class, of which fact I frankly advised him in conversation. His reply is interesting:

"When it comes to business I try to deal fairly, but believe it my duty to provide for patrons of this theatre the very best entertainment it is possible to give. I believe that in the interests of those holdings financial interest in the theatre it is up to me to provide that entertainment as efficiently and economically as is possible. If that proceedure locates me in the 'hard-boiled' class, I am one hundred per cent guilty and not in any degree ashamed of it."

In justification of Mr. Wilson's attitude, let me say that his auditorium is tastefully decorated, his sound excellent and the screen image, considering the light sources, remarkable, for which latter we must also credit the projectionists, Alfred Webster and Carl Crossley. They have Peerless low-intensity lamps with a 21-foot image. Manager Wilson declared business to be at least on a par with a similar period in 1936.

At the Capitol theatre, where President Glodfelter holds forth, I met Manager G. W. Beck, who reported business as normal. On a previous visit, I had expressed disapproval of both the screen location and size of the projected image at the Capitol. This time the day's run had not commenced, but I was advised that at least a partial remedy had been applied in both directions. One theatre employe, however, expressed the opinion that added screen illumination would improve results appreciably. As to that I cannot say. However screen illumination should always be just below that brightness which makes the white areas uncomfortable to the eyes. Anything less fails to do justice to the photographic details and thus tends to make the screen image less beautiful.



At the Park theatre, a newly decorated neighborhood house, I met Manager H. W. Hoffman. The theatre had not opened, but Mr. Hoffman was kind enough to mount to the projection room and illuminate the auditorium. The general effect was pleasing, though it seems a change in the side lights might work improvement. This Mr. Hoffman agreed to saying, "We who see these things day by day do not always quite realize that improvement might be made. We accept them as inevitable and need a visit such as yours occasionally to direct attention to them."

From Williamsport I drove to York, Pa., a city of 72,000 people with six theatres, to call upon Manager P. J. Harvey of the beautiful Warner Strand theatre; also upon District Manager Ed R. Moon. These gentlemen rated business as better than normal. I asked Mr. Moon how he accounted for it. His reply was, substantially, "This city is largely populated by Pennsylvania Dutch; it is not a high wage community, but its workers are employed steadily twelve months every year, therefore we are not largely affected by depressions."

Down Washington way, where I visited Maj. Evars Abbey and his family, my first call was at IATSE & MPMO headquarters, where I found president George Browne absent, but met General Secretary Louis Krouse. Brother Krouse advised me that the organization is spreading its membership as fast as it can, under the conditions, be safely done.

Agreement has been reached covering a two-year period beginning January 1, 1938, between the International Alliance and recognized sound companies for the exclusive employment of Alliance members to perform all work in connection with sound servicing. Engineers now engaged in sound service will make application to I A locals, and in so doing assume a projectionist classification, which will is by taking advantage of the improvements in modern equipment.

Theatregoers today expect highest quality projection. They've been made accustomed to it by the high intensity equipped theatres which constitute three-fourths of America's seating capacity.

Good color projection demands two to three times as much light—the snow white light provided by high intensities.

Projection with Strong Moguls is not a luxury. It actually costs less per light unit than old style low intensity.

tend to permanently eliminate the "sound service" classification. First preference will naturally be given projectionist locals of the I A when there is need for any work in connection with sound servicing.

An understanding has also been reached which will permit such projectionists to travel throughout certain designated districts; however, they must have in their possession special traveling contracts embodying terms and conditions governing their duties in jurisdictions outside that in which they hold membership. The dues and initiation fees of such men entering regularly established locals will be the same as those governing their present membership.

My next and last call was at Warner Brothers zone office, where I had a most interesting talk with John J. Payette, zone manager, who supervises 38 theatres in Washington, Baltimore and the states of Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia.

Mr. Payette said business was somewhat below normal in the downtown district of Washington. This he attributed to the increasing number of neighborhood theatres, concerning which latter he made this most interesting statement:

"It was found that people refused to walk even so far as three or four blocks to attend a theatre. They were remaining at home because of difficulty in finding parking space for their cars within close proximity to the theatre. Recognizing this fact, we inaugurated an educational campaign through the newspapers, the theatre programs and the theatre screens, calling attention to the enervating, weakening effect of failure or refusal to take proper walking exercise, and further, to the obvious fact that parking the car a few blocks away when necessary and walking three to five blocks, or even more, was, instead of a "hardship," merely beneficial exercise. Our campaign was found to increase attendance at Warner neighborhood theatres quite decidedly."

All projection matters at Warner theatres in this zone are under supervision of J. A. Pratt.

I also enjoyed a few moments of conversation with F. J. Stephens, president, and Emil Holz, business representative, of Local 224.

FURTHER SUGGESTIONS ON PROJECTION TOOLS

J. R. PRATER recently wrote that he thoroughly enjoyed M. D. O'Brien's discussion of tools in these columns in the October 16th issue, and added:

"Before taking up projection, I spent three years manufacturing and repairing jewelry. I have found several tools employed for such work, other than the screwdriver mentioned by Mr. O'Brien, to be very handy in the projection room.

"A plander—sharp-pointed tweezers about 6 inches long—is very handy for recovering small parts or screws dropped into the mechanism casing, as well as for removing dirt and lint from tight corners —around the magazine valves, for example. Jewelers' tapered files about 5 inches long may be had in round, half-round, knife-edge and three-corner edge. They are excellent for fine work. A knife-edge engraving tool complete with handle costs about 25c. It can be used to cut initials in steel tools, or identification numbers on tube bases, or charts for inspection chart data.

"Tripoli is used by jewelers for coarse polishing. It is excellent for wearing down new mechanism parts that fit a bit too tightly, or for fitting old gears to each other by 'grinding in.'

Most useful of all, however, is a jeweler's saw for hard metals. Frames for them may be had with 2- or 4-inch clearance. They closely resemble the ordinary coping saw, but the blades are very much finer, ranging in a dozen or more sizes down to as fine as a horse-hair. No. 1 or No. 0 blades are most suitable for the projection room. They may be turned in any direction while in use. While they are intended for use on sheet metal, I have, with a little patience, cut through cold rolled steel half an inch thick."

Menace of Careless Oiling and Repairing

are projected, also accumulates in a number of other ways. One, of course, is neglect of proper cleaning, but another may be any defect in the mechanism that scrapes bits of emulsion from the film. The scraped places show up in the picture, and the fragments of emulsion collect as dirt, which does still further damage. The remedy, of course, is careful inspection of all parts that come in contact with the film, prompt replacement of any that have become roughened, and thorough and frequent cleaning.

First run theatres sometimes damage a print in a way that impairs all its subsequent showings, by scraping off and collecting the thin protective coating. Fragments of that coating, lodged where they will come in contact with the moving film, scratch and score it, and in addition may themselves be projected before the audience. The coating is far less firmly bonded to the film than the emulsion is; consequently exceptional care, and exceptionally well kept equipment, are needed when first run prints are shown.

Like oil, dirt and scratches on the film of course impair sound as well as image —most theatre men know that a dirty or scored track sounds as bad as a streaked picture looks. Most of these troubles can be prevented, all can be minimized, by simple care and the least costly of projection room repairs.

The damage to the entertainment value of the show not only has increased with the stressing of the pictorial values of motion pictures; it threatens to become a major defect, offensive to the least critical audience, with greater use of color.

two employ, together, only about 25 men. The town depends almost entirely on trade from the surrounding farming area, and from families working in nearby larger cities, but living in Omro to take advantage of the lower rents and taxes.

The theatre has turned out to be not only a trade stimulator, but something of a financial success in its own right. At the present time it is netting the association $1,500 a year, which is being applied to redeem the $7,500 in debenture bonds. The bonds, at that rate, will be retired in five years, at which time the profits of the venture will go for civic improvements.

The Business Men's Association supervises operation of the theatre through a management committee of three, composed of Clayton Stearns, Chairman; Willis C. Calgins, and Max Rieber. The house staff has six members.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE DEPARTMENT DEALING WITH ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN AND MATERIALS, DECORATION AND FURNISHINGS

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES: One of the principal functions of this department is to answer queries pertaining to preliminary consideration in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. All questions receive the personal attention of Peter M. Hulsken, A.I.A., contributing editor of this department and a practicing architect who long has specialized in theatre design. He will be glad to offer advice, suggestions and criticisms. Working plans, however, cannot be supplied. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York. In publishing replies, only initials are used for identification of the person inquiring.

THE QUESTION:

I AM thinking of building a new 600-seat theatre, but as I am very much limited on finances, I will appreciate it very much if you could give me some information. Will it be all right to construct the exterior walls out of cinder blocks? I have been told that such walls improve the sound in the auditorium a great deal, but I am afraid that such a wall construction is not as strong as one built out of common brick or hollow tile.

Is there any material with which these walls could be covered? I first thought of plastering and decorating these walls, but the estimates I received for doing this are beyond my means.—F. G. R.

THE ANSWER:

SOME STATISTICS I have on cinder blocks show that they have about the same crushing strength as ordinary common brick. I also find that they have sound-absorbing qualities. So as far as wall strength is concerned, I would not worry about it. However, if you use these blocks, it will be necessary to face these walls on the outside with hard-burned or face brick.

The least expensive way to cover these walls is to strip them horizontally about every 42 inches, and to apply on these strips flannel and waffle cloth, then cover the tacks with painted wood strips. This waffle cloth can be dyed any color you may desire, but it will be well to have each layer in different shades, starting above wainscoting with the darkest shade, and dying out to the lightest shade near ceiling. Two or three shades difference in each layer will be sufficient.

The wainscoting to a height of 4 feet may be in cinder blocks. The surface of this can be painted or decorated. Good care should be taken to lay this wainscoting up very carefully, so that the joints may be even, plumb and true.

Should this method prove to be more expensive than you can afford, you may build some wall panels out of fabric, and paint the cinder blocks surrounding these panels. In that case, recess the blocks about 2 inches in the spaces to be used for fabric panels.

THE QUESTION:

I HAVE a room in a neighboring town, size 35x120 feet with 14-foot ceiling, in which I would like to put a theatre. There is 20-foot vacant lot directly at rear of building to alley line. The basement extends under entire building, and apartments on second floor.

It is impossible to raise the ceiling, and am doubtful about lowering the floor because of prohibitive cost. There is about 18 inches between the ceiling and upper floor which could be used. Can you suggest some way the room could be turned into a theatre with the present ceiling? Could a sub-floor be laid over the present one and yet have the proper drop to rear? We would not want a stage—just a platform. Could you also advise approximate cost of remodeling, exclusive of equipment? How many seats could we use?—J. T.

THE ANSWER:

MANY STATE building codes do not allow one to have apartments above a theatre unless the entire building is of fireproof construction, so my advice is to take this matter up with the proper authorities before you consider your building plans.

If it will be possible to locate the projection room on the ground floor, with entrance doors on each side, you may be able to get by with 14 feet for ceiling height. It will be necessary to have an inclined floor in the auditorium to obtain good vision, even if the cost would be high.

Generally, a basement under a theatre has not much utility except for boiler and coal rooms, and for running heating pipes under auditorium floor. I can find no reasons why lowering a part of the floor should be so expensive, so why not lower half of the floor, and build the other part up on top of the present floor. The last four rows of seats may be raised above the aisle level, and some incline may be obtained from the sidewalk line to foyer floor.

The maximum seating capacity would be 420, figuring on seats 20 inches wide spaced 31 inches back to back.

Not being familiar with existing conditions, it is impossible to give you a comprehensive estimate of cost. You should be able to obtain this from a local contractor.

THE QUESTION:

AS FAR BACK as I can remember, I have read, "You must have at least a 17-foot ceiling." Will you please advise what is wrong with the following set-up? [Sketch shows toilet area beneath projection room, with total height of 13½ feet.] I have checked from every angle and it seems beeter than my present theatre.

According to proposed scheme, ceiling at rear of auditorium would be 11 feet above floor, and 14 feet at front. Projection port would be 8½ feet above floor. Floor slope would be 1 inch per foot for 35 feet, then level. Screen would be roughly 8x12 and 1 foot or less from ceiling and 5 feet above floor.—O. A. B. H.

THE ANSWER:

AFTER GIVING your sketch careful study, I find that in your particular case you may be able to get by with 11-foot ceiling height at the rear of your auditorium. However, the ceiling will look very low. If the projection room is located above lobby or foyer, a 17-foot ceiling height is minimum.

Your sketch shows the height of the projection room as 7 feet. I am at a loss to figure out how the automatic closing device for porthole shutters could be installed according to state or fire underwriters' requirements with such a low ceiling. The ceiling in the projection room should be at least 9 feet. The ceiling height in toilet rooms, 6½ feet, is also too low. Most state codes require a minimum of 8 feet, 6 inches.

I am afraid that the bottom of the screen is too low—persons seated in front might interfere with the projection beam. You should establish a point 6 feet above the floor at the front row and draw a line from the center of the projection porthole through this point; where this line strikes the screen, the bottom of the screen should be located.

A floor slope, of 3 feet for the last 35 feet of the auditorium floor is all right; indeed, it is more than required. It may be better to start the incline closer to the screen platform.

THE QUESTION:

AT THE PRESENT time I have a raised floor set upon the original floor of my building and am planning to take it out and drop the original floor. What slope would be best for a straight incline from foyer-lobby to the stage? The auditorium is 78 feet from the stage to rear, and there must be a single incline. Would 4 feet be too much slope in 78 feet?—C. W. R.

THE ANSWER:

FOR AN auditorium floor 78 feet long, a 4-foot incline is really not at all too much; 4 feet, 6 inches would be better, but if 4 feet is all there is available for the slope, that much might do.

I suggest that the first 18 feet from the stage be left level, and the remainder sloped at an increasing rate determined by sightlines from each row.

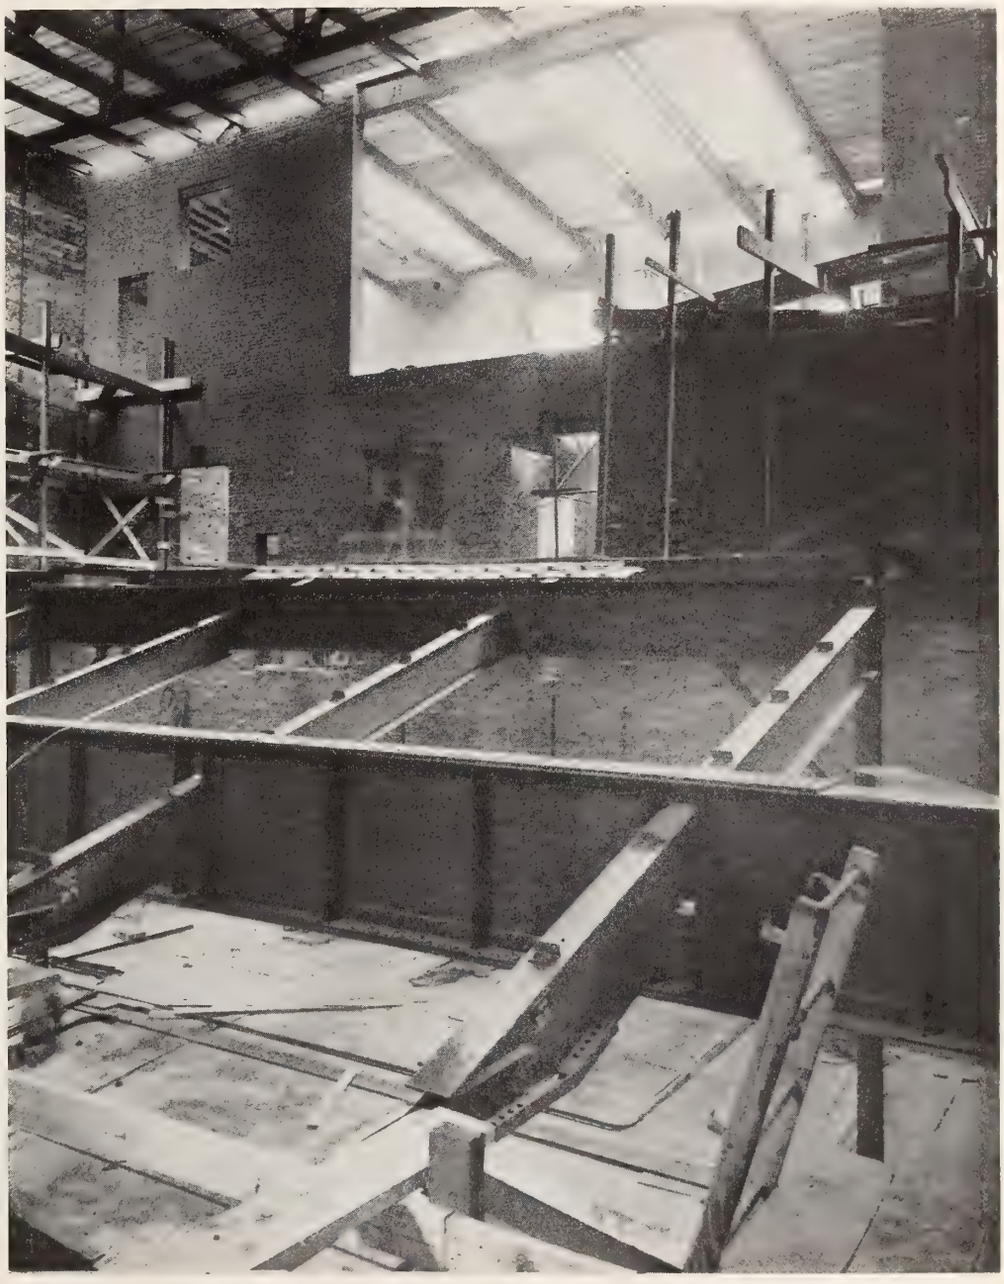
THE QUESTION:

I AM remodeling a small theatre and plan to put in a set of lights in the auditorium. It is 22 feet wide and 42 feet long. How many lamps should I have, and what color should I paint the ceiling. The distance from floor to ceiling is 14 feet.

Would you advise direct or indirect lighting? The state inspector advised me that I would have to have 2 inches of plaster on the inside walls of the booth, and 1 inch on the ceiling. Could you advise me how to put it on? Also, what color should I paint the inside of the booth.—E. A. S.

THE ANSWER:



IF THE LENGTH of the auditorium wall between the stage and rear wall is 42 feet, you should have three bracket fixtures on each side wall, one fixture located in center of wall space, the others 10 feet, 6 inches from stage and rear wall. It is difficult to advise you concerning choice of indirect or direct lighting without seeing your auditorium, but quite probably with fixtures exclusively, indirect lighting would not give you enough illumination. If so, fixtures combining the two methods, without glare, would be suitable. Use small lamps, of about 10 watts, of different colors for running light, and a 75-watt lamp in each fixture for house lighting.

The color of the ceiling depends a great deal on the treatment of the side wall, but a deep ivory goes pretty well with nearly any color scheme. Two inches of cement plaster can be easily applied to expanded metal lath.

A good color for projection room walls is buff, another is light green. A buff tint may be obtained by mixing colored sand in the plaster material, eliminating the cost of decorating.

In the March 5th issue, which will be especially devoted to remodeling, Peter M. Hulsken will discuss decorative schemes particularly suited to small theatres.

Construction from Top Down To Get in Ahead of Winter

■ This is a construction view of the theatre being built by the Cataract Theatres Corporation, headed by Charles Hayman to replace the obsolete Cataract theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y. One of the problems of this project was presented by the necessity of getting the building entirely enclosed before the severe weather of winter set in—and winters in this region begin early. Moreover, although begun in October, the owners wanted to open it in March, spring being an important season because of honeymooners. The construction contractor, M. Shapiro and Son of New York, designed the structure so that the new shell of the new structure would be 80% wall bearing, eliminating wall columns and enabling the brick work to proceed without waiting for steel. Despite the rather severe weather conditions in December, the structural enclosure has been completed. Through the further use of gyp-steel roof plank on most of the roof areas (as shown in the picture), the construction crew was able to get the roof on before starting intermediate floor construction. The steel was fabricated while the walls were being raised, and the roof steel was erected even before the balcony steel went up. In other words, the procedure was to work from top down. As each section of roof steel went in, the construction crew started to cover each section with gyp-steel plank (steel-reinforced gypsum) cast ready to lay. The theatre will be of modern design, empoying the new materials, and will seat 600 on two floors. The architect is Eugene De Rosa of New York.

THE EXHIBITOR'S SCREEN—HOW SHALL IT BE USED?

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

IN keeping with predictions recorded in various quarters in the industry, the current issue of "The March of Time," entitled "Inside Nazi Germany," is creating a condition which borders on chaos in many theatres throughout the country. Meanwhile it is hastening the day upon which organized opinion in the industry must decide what position, if any, material of this character is to be given in programs of motion picture theatres.

The Editors of "The March of Time" have developed for their medium a distinct form and treatment which have received widespread approval. They have in many instances made valuable contributions to the interest of the screen, frequently compelling the attention of persons who are not ordinarily regular patrons of motion picture theatres. Exhibitors have registered their approval of these contributions by giving the medium generous and widespread support.

The Editors of "The March of Time," however, pursuant to their professed delusion that as fabricators of this subject they are at the same time publishers of it to the world, have allowed themselves on occasion to adopt material which has been useful to their purposes but not commonly helpful to the best interests of the theatres, which are in reality the publishers and the factors of immediate responsibility on everything that reaches the public via the screen.

Pointed up by the repercussions incidental to "Inside Nazi Germany" and the sensationalism to which "The March of Time" and its associated publications are so heartily devoted, there is provided a situation which requires the thoughtful attention of theatremen everywhere.

WE hold that the motion picture theatre is and should remain devoted to the mission of providing entertainment. Entertainment in the sense used here must of course be accorded a latitudinous definition but certainly not one that may be stretched to include controversial political material. It might be argued that Nazism is not or should not be a controversial political issue in the United States. Unfortunately this is not so. The political theory of totalitarianism which lies at the root of Nazism is not—it is gravely to be regretted—without adherents in this country. But even though it were, there still remain in the press, the platform and elsewhere ample facilities for exposition and argument without resort to the one place where millions of the public come regularly and pay an admission fee in their quest for entertainment and relaxation.

"The March of Time" and its associated publications regularly give evidence of an irreverent disrespect for many traditions, conventions and principles. It may well be that these interests hold that the industry's policy of entertainment only is just another idol which they are ordained to demolish. If so, the industry ought to make quick realization of it and should be equally quick and sufficiently emphatic in making its answer. That answer must necessarily be that the industry has accumulated experience over the years which teaches it that it has no intention whatsoever of allowing its theatres to be converted into bedlams of turmoil and dissension.

"INSIDE Nazi Germany" is a subject well-calculated to provoke bitter friction among audiences everywhere. To certain giddy minds that might look like a great idea. As a matter of fact this subject is susceptible of causing this result even among people who are in agreement on either their hatred or their love of Nazism for the obvious reason that it set out to be one thing and in its process of fabrication tried to become something else and in the end became, in so far as its argument is concerned, a hodge-podge.

Plainly the photographic material showing, with the exception of a few shots, a healthy, happy and prospering Germany was official bureaucratic propaganda. To this was added a monologue which attempted not altogether successfully to present a critical argument. The overall effect in this writer's opinion is a screen document of some service and satisfaction to Hitlerism. We do not believe that the editors intended this. They obviously made an effort at impartiality—for which they will be damned by millions of Americans—or else they imagined they had compiled an adverse report. As to the latter there are other millions who will remain unconvinced.

The Editors of "The March of Time" very likely are right now quite contented about it all. They may reason that they have put on a provocative screen document and that according to design it has gone right ahead and produced a world of controversy. But these gentlemen are reminded that they have started a fire in a neighbor's house and that while they may be sitting across the street contentedly licking their chops the neighbor is having a bad time of it and the house which is in disorder is one in which he intends to go right on living for years to come.

THE Editors of "The March of Time" are not alone in the enjoyment of perverted ideas as to what constitutes proper screen material. There are thousands throughout this country who in a headlong rush for a change in political, social and economic order are in a fever of covetousness to gain the screens of the nation for their stump speeches. Our precious constitutional guarantees give to all of these abundant oppor-

Fighting Lewd Films

Government—federal, city and state—is joined this week in the fight against "sex," "clinical" and "stag" pictures which have been troubling the motion picture industry for years.

The federal branch is studying "stag" reels, Akron exhibitors have won a fight to eliminate "sex" film luridness in newspaper advertisements, New York City is cleaning up "off-color" out-front poster and marquee copy, and state censor boards are continuing their actions against the objectionable.

THE EXHIBITOR'S SCREEN—— HOW SHALL IT BE USED?

tunities for every conceivable freedom of expression. An indulgent government even gives to some of them a grant of money from the Federal Theatre Project to help them along. But these constitutional guarantees do not mean that they can use my home or my office for their speeches. Neither do they mean that these propagandists may commandeer the exhibitor's screen for their purposes.

But the Editors of "The March of Time" are accepted and in fact cordially welcomed factors in the motion picture industry. They should know better. They should know that there is a great difference for theatrical purposes between a subject which provokes discussion and legitimate controversy and one which kindles the embers of violence. It is quite all right to have the villain on the screen hissed. But it is not all right to foment a condition in a theatre in which members of the audience hiss each other. Personal insults are not normally far-removed from personal violence. Theatre patrons are supposed to be seated in comfortable opera chairs and not crouched behind barricades.

The exhibitors of the country ought to tell "The March of Time" that it is welcomed when it behaves itself but only then. They should tell it that they want the subject in all of the pleasing virility and graphicness which has so often characterized it. They should tell it, however, that they expect it to be mindful of the proprieties of theatrical presentation—that they do not want controversial political material which is calculated to destroy the theatre as the public's escape from the bitter realities, the anguishes and the turmoil of life.

"Sponsored" Reels

Because it has been approached by many advertising agencies and advertisers to produce socalled "sponsored" reels, officials of Columbia Pictures Corporation said this week that it is weighing the advisability of entering that market. It was made clear that no decision has been reached and that in any event the company would not distribute any of the subjects it might make.

Paramount and Warner Brothers both engaged widely in the business of producing advertising shorts some years ago, but were virtually compelled to withdraw after a storm of protests from exhibitors and the press.

Anti-Trust Appeal

The United States Supreme Court will rule on the rights of motion picture distributors to dictate admission prices and practices to be adopted by exhibitors. The court this week granted distributors and two Texas circuits a review of the decision of the Federal District Court in Dallas where the government successfully prosecuted its conspiracy case. The film industry's position in regard to any contemplated anti-trust investigations continued to be uncertain in Washington.

Universal Counsel

Williard S. McKay, general counsel of Universal Pictures, will withdraw from the company upon the expiration of his contract March 15th. He plans to resume private law practice in association with attorneys prominent in film work. Mr. McKay will continue to serve as special counsel for Universal and also will continue as vice-president and general counsel of the Meyer Schine Circuit. In addition to being general counsel to Universal, Mr. McKay is a member of the board of directors, representing first preferred stockholders, and secretary of the company.

His duties, it was announced Tuesday, will be assumed by Charles D. Prutzman, attorney for J. Cheever Cowdin, Standard Corporation and Universal Corporation, the parent holding company for Universal Pictures.

Sues Morgenthau

Jewel Productions, Inc., charging it has been prevented from exhibiting the motion picture "Mysteries of Science," filed suit Wednesday in United States district court in New York against Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the U. S. Treasury, and Harry M. Durning, as collector of customs for the Port of New York. A permanent injunction is sought to restrain seizure of the film which the complaint says was passed by customs authorities when it was imported from Vienna in 1935 under the title, "Science of Mankind." In July, 1937, it is charged, customs authorities made repeated efforts to seize a print without search warrants. The plaintiff also contends that "many thousands of dollars" have been spent for advertising and $918 for tariff duties, but that now it is impossible to exhibit the film.

French Crisis Averted

A shutdown of the French cinema industry, threatened by exhibitors and distributors, was averted on Tuesday when the Government announced that application of the new theatre tax law increasing by 25 per cent the levy on cinemas not using musicians or stage shows would be postponed indefinitely. The announcement said that the law had been enacted hastily by Parliament in an effort to avert a musicians' strike at Christmas time and that negotiations would be started immediately among representatives of the finance department, the film industry and the muisicians' syndicate to arbitrate the matter. The films committee of the Senate is expected to press for abolition of the new tax to prevent arbitrary demands by the industry for drastic reduction of other taxes.

That "Nazi" Film Issue

Accusations that March of Time's "Inside Nazi Germany" not only is "pro-Nazi propaganda" but really does not show "inside" conditions, were heard this week from the news press and from exhibitors in New York. Entering the argument, too, is the position of America's screens in the matter of entertainment versus political controversial subjects.

Time, Inc., had challenged Harry M. Warner's charges that the picture is "pro-Nazi," but subsequently Mr. Warner was supported by Martin Proctor, German newspaperman, recently arrived in this country, who, writing in the New York Post, asserted the film "is a flaming pro-Nazi story."

Mr. Proctor, Archer Winsten, also writing in the Post, and the Independent Theatre Owners of New York characterized the "real inside" pictures as nothing more than clips from newsreels either already shown or easily obtainable from "official German" newsreel sources.

To which March of Time issued a flat denial.

The March of Time Nazi-film controversy is reported on page 33.

4th Week for "Snow White"

Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," the world's first feature-length cartoon, made in color, this week set further precedents, when, for the first time in its history, the Music Hall at Rockefeller Center in New York, held over a picture for a fourth week. The industry generally agrees that its steady climb in grosses from the opening day is unique in exhibition history, box office receipts in the third week being greater than the first and second weeks. Grosses for the opening period totaled $108,000, mounting to $110,000 in the second week, to an estimated $113,000 for the third week.

No decision has been made on a fifth week. Some look for a change for a fifth week on the same booking from the Rockefellers' Music Hall to their nearby Center theatre, also in Rockefeller Center.

Guild Dissension

Differences among the groups composing the Associated Actors and Artistes of America which have been negotiating the formation of a united front for stage, screen and radio talent became marked with an open threat by the American Federation of Actors to support the claim of jurisdiction made by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees unless its demands for control of night club entertainers were met. The position of the Screens Actors Guild, holder of the controlling vote and previously in a bitter dispute with the administration of Actors' Equity, was a controlling factor.

Next Year's Product

Although mid-season sales drives are still in progress, the first discussions and announcements concerning next season's product came forth this week. In the case of Twentieth Century-Fox, actual commitments already are being taken and the company plans to hold its annual sales convention a month earlier than usual. In other cases specific product decisions were announced while other announcements pertained to conferences at which to make product decisions.

Three Companies' Earnings

Warner Brothers, Loew's, Inc., and Paramount this week reported earnings for the last 1937 quarters. The Warner net profit was $1,685,599 as compared to $2,047,936 in the 1936 quarter. Loew's earnings were $2,917,409 in the 1937 quarter and $3,457,973 in the previous year's quarter. The comparative figures for Paramount were $754,000 as against $3,700,000 but, it was pointed out, this comparison was distorted by "special influences."

Details of the earnings statements are published on page 64.

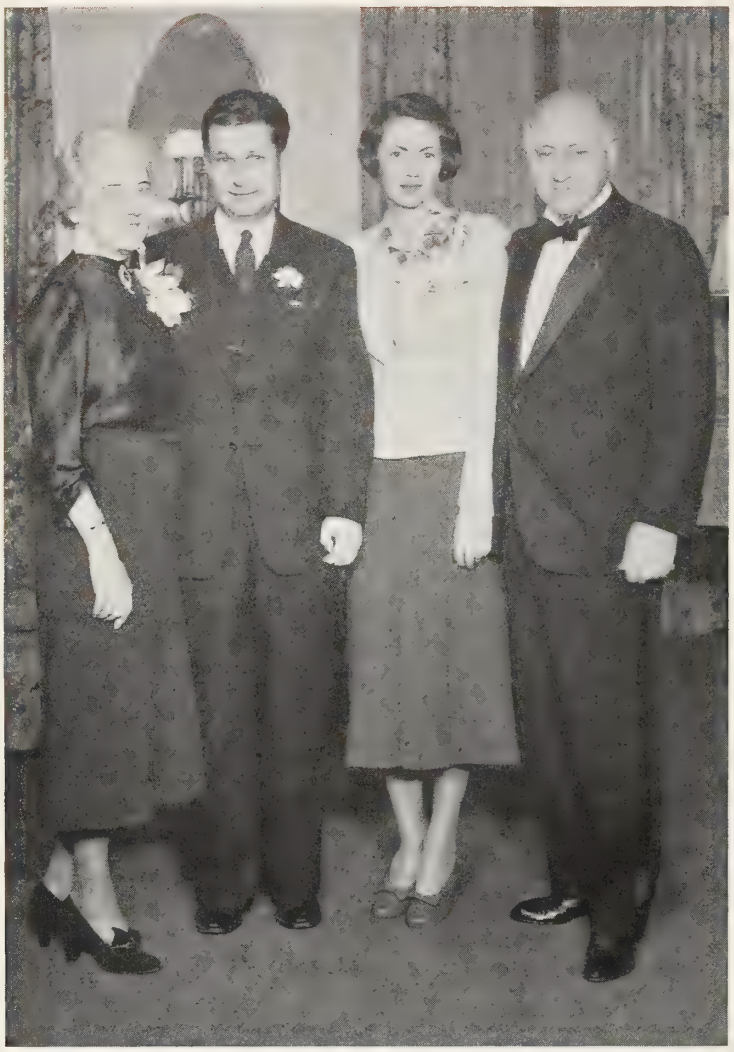
Songs and Hollywood

Analysis by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers of tastes in popular music, as expressed in the repetition extent of performances on the air, discloses that last year Hollywood lost out as the principal source of the nation's "hit" music, so-called. During the year, only 38 "hit" songs, representing some 29 per cent, of 132 in the "hit" class, came from Hollywood motion pictures, compared to 58 in the previous year, representing 52 per cent of 112 played.

A breakdown of the sources of "popular" American music, and the names of the 132 "hit" songs of the year, with full credits, appear on page 39.

Exports Increase

Despite the efforts of foreign countries to develop their own motion picture industries, American distributors shipped 6,000,000 feet more of film in 1937 than they did in the previous year. The shipments had a declared value of $4,797,641 in 1937 as compared to $4,531,639 in 1936, according to the United States Department of Commerce. An increase in the export of sound equipment also was reported by the government.



Additional figures are given on page 60.

Chance Games Study

The Post Office Department this week concluded a lengthy investigation of the methods pursued by Affiliated Enterprises, Inc. of Denver, in the making of contracts with exhibitors for Bank Night, and took under consideration the recommendation of its attorneys that the mails be closed to the company on the ground that it was operating a lottery. The issuance of an order would, it was said, put the company out of business since it would not be permitted to send or receive mail concerned in any way with Bank Night.

In his own words, Cecil B. DeMille's "greatest production" was the marriage of his daughter, Cecilia, to Joseph W. Harper, Hollywood publisher. Pictured at left are three of the personalities most interested in the fact that for the first time in its history the Radio City Music Hall has held a picture for a fourth week. Closely allied with the box office career of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," the paintbrush and celluloid creation which set the record are, left to right, Gus Eyssell, assistant to W. G. Van Schmus and secretary of the Music Hall Corporation; Roy Disney, business manager for his brother who produced the picture, and Ned E. Production in India has been stimulated by the award of a prize at the annual motion picture exhibition at Venice to the Prabhat Cinetone production, "Sant Tukaram," a still from which is reproduced above. An historical picture, the film tells the simple story of the life of an early Hindu saint who rose from a low caste to command the respect of learned Brahmins and Pandits in spite of the machinations of a pretender who sought to destroy his influence.

U. S. IS PROBING "LEWD" PICTURES; EXHIBITORS WIN FIGHT AGAINST ADS

Federal and Postal Agents Launch Movement to Rout Producers of Objectionable Films from Hollywood

"Sex" films, "clinical" pictures and other types of socalled "adult only" exhibitions, and the advertisements accompanying them, both of which for years have been plaguing the motion picture industry, have finally become the target of organized militant opposition.

Already fighting for their life for years against the condemnations of church, civic and social objectors and in the courts against the bans of state and municipal censor bans, and against police attacks, "sex" films now are confronted with the opposition of the United States Government.

The "off-color" newspaper and out-front advertising usually introducing the showings of "clinical" films is occupying the attention not only of the authorities, but also of legitimate motion picture exhibitors, to the extent that organized opposition of owners in Akron, Ohio, as an example, has effected elimination of them from the press.

Meanwhile, Samuel Cummins' "Ecstasy," also "The Birth of a Baby," "Nocturno" and "Remous," of the type of films generally complained of, continue to be the subjects of censorial controversy.

In the field of organized censorship itself, developments of the week included establishment of a new board for censoring in Omaha, introduction of a state censorship bill in Massachusetts for all time, instead of the present Sunday-only censoring, and an attack on the Quebec censor board for its reputed inconsistencies. Virginia's state censors this week reported a favorable monetary balance for 1937 on fees collected from the industry. The censor board also reported an increase in appropriations.

Arrest "Sex" Film Promoter

"Sex" films, principally the socalled "stag-film," have caused the United States Government to send federal and postal agents scurrying around for evidence to be used to stamp out offensive material. Working quietly, the agents have finally arrived in Hollywood and undertaken a strong move to rid the place of those producing "lewd" films. The bulk of the "stag" films are reputedly made by socalled "promoters" in Hollywood outside of the realm of the industry, of course. Most of the "adult only" "sex" and "clinical" pictures shown publicly, on the other hand, are imported from abroad.

Regardless, Hollywood on Monday witnessed the arrest of one of the "sex" film "promoters," in the federal drive which was started when the traffic in these reels showed noticeable increases. Identity of the person arrested was withheld because, it was said, he had agreed to aid the government in unearthing other offenders.

Akron Owners Win Fight

The Akron Independent Theatre Owners Association, three weeks ago, asked Akron's daily newspapers, the Beacon Journal and the Times Press, to tone down their advertising on "sex" pictures claiming that superlatively lurid advertising of sex pictures injures business at all other motion picture theatres by making the public censorship-conscious and unfriendly generally toward the screen.

Roger Burrell, advertising manager for the Akron Beacon Journal and K. M. Keegan, advertising director for the Akron Times Press, both pledged their support to eliminate the sensational copy submitted on sex pictures and especially to tone down the art work used in much of this copy.

Fears that sensational, lurid advertising of sex pictures would awaken Akron movie patrons to a possible need of increased censorship materialized into fact when heads of the Akron Parent-Teachers Association issued a statement that "increased supervision of picture entertainment is necessary in order to protect the youth of the city."

First indication that a parental storm was brewing occurred early in December. Theatre owners report that at that time, which was coincidental with the showing of sex pictures, parents either stopped at the theatres or telephoned the theatres to inquire what type of picture was on exhibition before sending their children to the show. This was true especially in the neighborhoods.

Press Executives Join Fight

Representatives of the Akron Independent Theatre Owners Association then approached the advertising managers of the Beacon Journal and the Times Press with their plea for cooperation to tone down lurid copy aimed to arouse the curiosity of the younger element. Both Mr. Burrell and Mr. Keegan were told of the danger to all theatres if lurid advertising of sex pictures continued, and pledged their support in the campaign to "soft pedal" the most sensational aspects of this type.

It is to be noted that immediately following this conference, the art work was either cut to a minimum or eliminated entirely. It is also to be noted that the Akron newspapers continued to keep their pledge to the Akron Independent Theatre Owners Association at the expense of reduced advertising space.

Two Theatres Involved

Involved in the attacks, as representative of the type of pictures being exhibited, was Akron's State theatre, which was advertising "Marihuana," a "daring drug expose"—"for adults only." The Alhambra, at nearby Cuyahoga Falls, asked: "What Price Ignorance?," in its advertisements of "Guilty Parents," adding: "Are the parents responsible for the ignorance of their children?"

Prior to the "cleanup," the State's "Marihuana" advertisement carried a sensational half-tone picture, promising that the film contains "weird orgies, wild parties, unleashed passions." There were pictures of hypodermic needles such as is used by drug addicts, and a picture of a girl in disarray, supposedly after a marihuana "party."

Only One-half of One Per Cent Stills Were "Unsuitable" in 1937

The Advertising Advisory Council, voluntarily established some six years ago by members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and by certain non-members, released on Tuesday a report for 1937 on its activities pertaining to the regulation of the type of still photographs and advertising material used for motion pictures. The producers and distributors submit all such matter to the Council, on both coasts, for approval. Of 123,711 still pictures submitted in 1937, only 739, or one-half of one per cent, were ordered discarded or revised on the east coast, and only 85 pictures were similarly involved in Hollywood. Publicity stories, advertisements, exploitation ideas, advertising accessories, posters, trailers and press books fared even better, as shown by the comparison on material submitted in 1937 and 1936. Out of 176,711 pieces of copy, and stills submitted last year, only 1,276, less than four per cent, were ordered discarded or revised, as follows:

CENSORSHIP ACTIVITIES INCREASE

got some results in his warnings to Times Square independent theatres to clean up their lurid advertisements on theatre fronts.

"With the exception of some copy on signs and marquees, which still has to be toned down, the theatres are now behaving," he said.

Acting upon a formal complaint against the out-front ads, as filed by the Rev. Joseph McCaffery, Police Department chaplain and pastor of Holy Cross Roman Catholic Church, off Times Square, Commissioner Moss summoned to his office the managements of the Sam Harris, Liberty, Apollo, Lyric, Selwyn, Wallack and New Amsterdam theatres, on West 42nd Street, and the Gaiety, on Broadway, all in Times Square, to issue the warning. These theatres show either burlesque, under the revised standards, or "sex" and other similar forms of motion pictures.

The record shows that no advertisements of the organized motion picture industry are involved in either the Ohio or New York move. Their advertisements are voluntarily submitted to the Advertising Advisory Council at the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, for approval, before publication or other usage.

"Sex" Ads in Tampa

The "sex" film, "Body Beautiful," has been drawing considerable public attention in its showings at the Casino and Ritz in Ybor City and the Royal in West Tampa, the Latin sections of Tampa, all three controlled and operated by Casino Amusements. Newspaper advertisements, advertising "Body Beautiful"—"for adults only"—as "The screen sensation of the year," and featuring "Living models on the stage" as an added attraction, also contained crudely drawn pen sketches of females virtually in the nude. "SEX" in bold display adorns each advertisement.

The stage is set for another review of "The Birth of a Baby" by the Board of Regents of the Department of Education in New York. Announcement that the Board would meet in Albany February 11 and 12 was accompanied by word that two rejected films also on appeal, "Nocturno" and "Remous," would be viewed and that "The Birth of a Baby" might also be on the same schedule. (Details of these cases appear on the opposite page.)

Injunction Suit at Portland, Ore.

An injunction suit to restrain the Portland, Ore., censor board from interfering with the exhibition of "Ecstasy" has been filed by W. G. Smith of Jewel Productions. It is alleged that the censor board refused to permit the City Council to view the picture as required by city ordinance.

After considerable controversy with the censor board in Kansas City, Missouri, Samuel Cummins announced that "Ecstasy" had finally "made the grade" and could be shown in Kansas. The film opened at the Empress theatre, beginning January 30th.

Paramount Film Service Limited, Toronto, reports it has received information from Montreal that three complete scenes have been deleted from "True Confession" by the Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors. Before the feature was approved for showing in the Province of Quebec, the board also ordered the insertion of a special subtitle which reads: "The courtroom scenes herein depicted should be construed as fiction only and could not occur in a Canadian Court of Justice."

The Quebec censors have been reprimanded from an entirely new quarter because of their decisions which are frequently quite different from those handed down by the censors of other Canadian provinces. Criticism this time is from Prof. H. D. Brunt, director of the Department of English, Macdonald College, Montreal, who publicly condemned Quebec film censorship as "illogical, inconsistent and unintelligent."

The Professor declared that the wholesale deletion of scenes and other alterations frequently destroyed the whole sense of a story on the screen.

Massachusetts Censorship Bill

Held by the record of past performances to have little chance of passing, a censorship bill filed with the Massachusetts legislature by Senator Thomas Burke is nevertheless troubling the local industry. The bill calls for a five-man commission, politically appointed, as did a similar bill which was defeated at the last session.

That such a commission would pay its way is said by the sponsor to be assured by inclusion of a clause requiring a $3 viewing fee for every 1,000-foot reel of film. Reels on additional prints brought into Massachusetts could not be shown until $2 per 1,000 feet had been paid, although it is more or less widely admitted that duplicate prints are just that and seldom need additional censorship.

Newsreels, although they drew more than their share of cuts under present Massachusetts laws last season, would not have to be censored. Neither would scientific (a broad definition) films if not shown at "amusement" theatres nor religious or educational films.

Films shown in Massachusetts are at present censored for Sundays and all but first-run metropolitan prints are generally cut to abide with Sabbath restrictions.

State Censor Honored

In Boston, Paul Kirk, state film censor until he was appointed a few weeks ago to the superior court bench, was guest of honor at a gathering at the Hotel Continental this week. Eugene McSweeney, present censor head, was chairman in charge.

A city welfare board for censorship of films, books and stage plays will be appointed soon by Mayor Dan Butler, in Omaha, who has been in the spotlight the past year for his active censoring of pictures, literature and shows.

Mayor Butler said he would revive the welfare board after he clashed with prominent club members over a marihuana picture at Augie Herman's Muse theatre. The club approved the film, but Mr. Butler ordered it not shown. Later welfare officials approved the film and it was exhibited.

In an announcement in newspapers, Mr. Butler said, "Theatre ads had better be more circumspect or I can extend my censor powers to them, too."

Virginia Censors' Funds Rise

Virginia's State Division of Motion Picture Censorship, created 20 years ago, is not only proving more profitable each year, but is to receive an increased appropriation for use during the next biennium.

Salaries of the three censors have been increased from $2,500 each to $3,000 since the establishment of the division. Now the salary of the director is expected to be $3,600 instead of $3,000, the state budget now providing for the increase.

Colonel Peter Saunders, of Rocky Mount, who was secretary to four governors of the state, has succeeded Mrs. Elizabeth C. Chalkley, formerly of Big Stone Gap, as director. Heretofore, the censors have alternated in holding the position of director. Under a new plan Colonel Saunders has become permanent director.

Producers Submit Plan to Correct Box Office Abuses

The League of New York Theatres, representing most of the producers, have submitted to the Actors' Equity Association a plan designed to correct the evils of ticket distribution in the legitimate field and to develop new branches of the theatre.

If the plan is accepted it will revive many of the fair trade practices set up for the theatre under the National Recovery Administration. The Federal Government at that time lacked the power to enforce its NRA code.

Under the new plan Equity would enforce the fair trade practices by according preferential treatment to producers cooperating in the reforms. The producers ask Equity to sign a contract to this effect at once, so that they may begin their steps to "revitalize" the theatre.

The plan is intended to limit the premiums charged on tickets by brokers and to make it easier to get theatre tickets. To this end the league proposes that telephone reservations be held until within 24 hours of a performance and that offices be opened in large department stores to sell tickets at box office prices.

The plan was signed by a majority of the board of governors of the league, who pledged themselves to gain the support of other producers if Equity approved it. The signers included Lee Shubert, Herman Shumlin, Max Gordon, William A. Brady, Gilbert Miller, Guthrie McClintic, Brock Pemberton, Dwight Deere Wiman, James F. Reilly, Sam H. Grisman, Marcus Heiman, Warren P. Mansell and Milton R. Weinberger, counsel for the league.

Asks Free Admission Into Canada of Cultural Films

J. W. Noseworthy of Toronto, representing the Canadian Federation of Teachers, has entered a request for the free importation from the United States of films of any width which could be classed as strictly educational. The request was made to the Rowell Commission on Tariffs and Taxation, which is investigating the excise situation in Canada.

Mr. Noseworthy made a plea for consideration of this type of film whether it is intended for schools or theatres because of the advantages of visual education and the increasing value of films in school work. He also pressed for the expansion of the Canadian Government's own Motion Picture Bureau to include the production of suitable films of Canadian life for presentation in schools.

National Screen Accessories, Inc., has opened a new branch office in Cleveland.

NEW YORK REGENTS BOARD TO HEAR APPEALS ON 'IMMORAL' PICTURES

License Applications Made for 'Birth of a Baby,' 'Remous,' 'Whirpool' Go to State Body Under New Censor Ruling

Having shorn Dr. Frank P. Graves, commissioner of education, of his powers as an official reviewer of films, the Board of Regents, governing body of education in New York State, is faced with the necessity of reviewing three "immoral" pictures on appeal this month.

When the board assembles in Albany February 11th and 12th, it will be obliged to determine the merits of "Nocturno," "The Birth of a Baby," and "Remous," also known as "Whirlpool." Each of these films has been rejected by Irwin Esmond, director of the Division of Motion Pictures, New York State's official motion picture censorship board.

Meeting in Albany last month, the board altered Regents Rule 245 so as to assume the responsibility of reviewing those films rejected by Mr. Esmond and entered on appeal.

Previously, appeals were carried to Dr. Graves and, in the event he upheld the division's opinions, recourse was found in the courts. The Regents may, under their new ruling, refer the reviewing task to a committee.

The rule now reads: "In the event any application of license or permit is denied by the director of the division, the action may be reviewed on appeal by the applicant to the Board of Regents, which said appeal may be heard by the Board of Regents or a committee thereof."

In undertaking a review of "The Birth of a Baby," the board concerns itself with a controversy of long standing. It faces the combined influence of more than a dozen influential medical societies and hospital and nursing associations, among others.

The picture, now in the hands of the American Committee on Maternal Welfare, Inc., of New York City, was produced by Jack Skirboll and Charles Christie, under the name of Christie Productions, Inc., and, according to the original application for a state license made by Sam Citron, a cutter for Educational Pictures, who edited the film, it was financed by the Mead Johnson Company of Evansville, Ind., manufacturers of infants' diet preparations. The first application, in January, 1937, was denied by the censorship division and in October Mr. Citron carried the appeal to the commissioner who upheld the division's rejection.

Appealed by Medical Group

Said Dr. Graves, at the time, "This is a story of a young mother during pregnancy and birth. It is a medical treatise on the subject in pictorial form and is presented by its producers for the alleged purpose of educating and enlightening prospective mothers and fathers.

"It has the endorsement of medical societies. While it may well be that the presentation of this picture would be of value for clinical purposes, its presentation, in my opinion, to audiences at places of public amusement is estopped by the education law."

Dr. Graves said the film is "indecent, immoral and would tend to corrupt morals."

Upon the Regents' action assuming reviewing responsibilities, a new appeal was entered by the American Committee on Maternal Welfare, Inc., through Dr. George W. Kosmak, its vice-chairman, and Dr. Philip F. Williams, a member. Dr. Kosmak is chairman of the medical board of the New York Maternity Center Association. Dr. Williams is assistant professor of obstetrics at the University of Pennsylvania.

Upon learning of the new appeal, Mr. Esmond countered with the opinion:

"In this country, the birth of a baby is regarded generally as a biological experience to be accomplished in the privacy of home or hospital and not to be exposed to public gaze."

"Nocturno" was first submitted for licensing by Gustave Schwab on October 7, 1937. After it had been reviewed several times, Mr. Esmond officially rejected the film and recommended certain revisions.

"At best," he wrote, "the play is a sordid story of wifely infidelity."

He said the setting is that of an immoral house, objecting to that also.

"Remous" Up Three Times

Kurt Laemmle submitted "Remous" for licensing in August, 1936. It was rejected a month later as "immoral, indecent and would tend to corrupt morals."

It was revised and submitted again by Arthur Mayor and Joseph Burstyn in November, 1936. Eliminations had been made, the division said.

Then the name was changed to "Whirlpool" and "English titles were superimposed" and the film was entered again in February, 1937. Again it was changed by Mayer and Burstyn and a second revised version of "Remous" was submitted with "scenes reinstated" that "were found objectionable," according to Mr. Esmond.

Mr. Esmond said of an earlier version: "The story originally told of a sexually impotent young man, the sex frustration of his wife, her affair with a virile young athlete and the suicide of the crippled and impotent husband."

Later, of the revised version, he remarked: "It is the story of a young and able engineer, injured in automobile accident. His wife is young, dances, likes sports and becomes lonely."

The National Legion of Decency, as reported recently in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, commended the ban of "The Birth of a Baby" from New York screens.

Mr. Esmond said the decision on that film "received wide publicity, quoted and referred to in many newspapers and periodicals throughout the country, and in so far as could be judged was favorably received by newspaper comment."

Griffis Reduces Wall Street Duties

He is chairman of the executive committee of Paramount.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers will hold its fall meeting in Detroit. The spring meeting will be held in Washington, D. C., April 25-28.

Paramount, Cohen Seeking to Settle Dispute Amicably

The status of three stars, chief topic of speculation in Hollywood following the recent break between Paramount and Emanuel (Manny) Cohen, producer, became known this week as negotiations got under way for an amicable settlement of the Paramount-Cohen dispute.

Bing Crosby, whose latest picture, "Dr. Rhythm," figures prominently in the conferences concerning a settlement, is under direct contract to Paramount with an option for one outside picture annually. Mr. Crosby exercised his option last year by making "Dr. Rhythm" and the year before by making "Pennies From Heaven," both of which were produced by Mr. Cohen's company, Major Pictures Corporation.

Mae West completed her contract with Mr. Cohen with the production of her last three pictures and Gary Cooper is under contract to Samuel Goldwyn. Except for the film "The Adventures of Marco Polo," Mr. Cooper's latest pictures, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," and "The Plainsman," were produced by Paramount.

The conferences under way in Hollywood this week indicated that Mr. Cohen will be "satisfactorily" compensated for the last two pictures he produced, "Every Day's a Holiday" with Mae West, and "Dr. Rhythm," with Bing Crosby. The Crosby film was completed but not edited at the time Paramount abruptly severed its relations with Major Pictures.

After being served with a notice of cancellation of his contract, Mr. Cohen immediately announced the entire matter had been placed in the hands of his attorney and "we expect to use every available remedy to protect our rights."

Mr. Cohen also indicated he contemplated court action when he said: "We believe there will be some very interesting facts brought to light when this matter gets to court."

Although this week's negotiations, if successful, would prevent court action there was no indication that Mr. Cohen would continue with Paramount.

Mr. Cohen attributed the break to a long standing feud between himself and Adolph Zukor, head of Paramount production. "Major Pictures has had an exceedingly difficult time in making its motion pictures ever since Adolph Zukor assumed control of Paramount production," Mr. Cohen said.

Mr. Cohen formerly held the Paramount production generalship, but gave it up to form Major Pictures.

"GIRL OF GOLDEN WEST"

by GUS McCARTHY
in Hollywood

JEANETTE MacDONALD and Nelson Eddy trace their career as co-stars through "Maytime" and "Rose Marie" to "Naughty Marietta." The commercial success of those pictures, due primarily to the appeal and charm of their vocal ability, caused America's exhibitors to regard them individually and as a unit among the 15 Honor Stars of 1937 as recorded in a poll conducted by MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

"The Girl of the Golden West," as it shortly will be seen as a motion picture, has been adapted, with specific modernizations, from the stage play as written and produced by David Belasco some thirty years ago. It bears no relationship to the opera of the same title. A completely new score, for which Gus Kahn provided lyrics, was written by Sigmund Romberg. The musical content includes such melodies as the semi-classical "Liebestraum," sacred "Ave Maria" and several topical numbers sung by Miss MacDonald and Eddy as solos, in duet and to choral accompaniment.

Thematically the story to be told in "The Girl of the Golden West" is the romantic love saga of a Robin Hood desperado and a girl who, though she was the owner of a saloon, was an inspiring angel, beloved by all. Its time is approximately 1850; the locales are the picturesque California gold mining areas, the towns of Cloudy Mountains, the then California capitol Monterey and the rugged Sierra Mountains.

The picture is approaching screen actuality under the production guidance of William Anthony McGuire, long associated with Florenz Ziegfeld during the years when he attained his greatest fame and who recently produced "Rosalie," which presently is attracting considerable attention as box office reports from widely scattered theatres indicate. "The Girl of the Golden West" is being directed by Robert Z. Leonard, who among many other accomplishments, was measurably responsible for the favor which accrued to "The Great Ziegfeld," "Maytime" which featured Miss MaDonald and Nelson Eddy and "Firefly" in which Miss MacDonald was seen with Allan Jones.

When MGM undertakes the production of a story property which it esteems highly, it is a matter of record that there is no inclination to stint in expense, time or ingenuity. Evidence that the inclination was subjugated in no detail may be gleaned from an examination of the accompanying illustrations.

While it is natural to assume that Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy will be the primary objects of public attention when the picture is available for inspection, one who seeks to incite the attention of the greatest number of people would be derelict in his duty, did he not devote some time to a consideration of other figures, of more or less screen fame, who will also be presented. As but few of the supporting company are but slightly known, it is merely necessary to list several of the identities; Buddy Ebsen, Walter Pidgeon (particularly recalled for "Saratoga"), Ray Bolger, Cliff Edwards, Priscilla Lawson, Leonard Penn, Leo Carrillo, who at the moment threatens to steal the show, Inez Seabury, Billy Bevan, Brandon Tynan, Bob Murphy, Victor Potel, Olin Howland and Noah Young. The feminine singing-dancing chorus, upon which much dependence is being placed that the production will not be lacking in eye glamour or emotional stimulation, is being supervised by Albertina Rasch.

As "The Girl of the Golden West" is visioned in introspect, "Naughty Marietta," "Rose Marie" and "Maytime" must be revived in retrospect. They are the form charts. It is an axiom that it is good judgment to stick to a champion. They were champions. "The Girl of the Golden West" will come up to the barrier as an immediate pre-Easter release. How "pre" or otherwise is not definite for the very definite reason that nobody at MGM, connected in anyway with the show, has the faintest idea. But judging from what other companies are planning, "The Girl of the Golden West" will be on lots of screens about that time.

GRAINGER HEADS REPUBLIC PICTURES; BUYS INTO H. J. YATES' COMPANY

Former Sales Executive of Universal Has Made "Extensive Investment" in Republic, Says Its Owner

James Ross Grainger, former general sales manager for Universal, has made an "extensive investment" in Republic Pictures Corporation and will be elected president and a director of the corporation at the board of directors next meeting.

The announcement was made this week by H. J. Yates, owner of the company, who said, in Hollywood, that Mr. Grainger will join Republic on or about June 1st. He is to have charge of sales and will advise on production.

The possibility that Mr. Grainger would join Republic was discussed "for months," Mr. Yates said. The deal consummates negotiations begun after Mr. Grainger on December 3rd resigned his post with Universal. His contract with that company, however, does not expire until next June. It was at first understood that there had been a cash settlement, but evidently it has been liquidated on a weekly basis.

Election of Mr. Grainger as president of Republic will not affect the production company, Republic Productions, Inc., of which Moe Siegel is president.

Goes to Coast in Week

Under present plans, Mr. Yates, head of Consolidated Film Industries, will leave the coast for New York next week and the board of directors at that time is expected to convene and officially name Mr. Grainger president.

During the next two weeks Mr. Yates plans to line up production for the 1938-39 season. He said the program would be increased by 10 features over the current schedule of 30 features, 24 westerns and four serials.

Republic has scheduled its national sales convention for the coast May 3rd, 4th, and 5th. Franchise holders as well as home office executives, sales supervisors and field staffs will attend. Mr. Yates said he planned to have three or four pictures completed for screening before the delegates at the convention.

Autry Under Injunction

Meanwhile, the controversy between Republic and Gene Autry, first ranking western star in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD poll, was carried to court when the company obtained an injunction against the actor from Judge R. B. C. Howell, of the Chancery Court, Nashville, Tenn. The order enjoins Mr. Autry from appearing in motion pictures for any other company in vaudeville, radio, stage or shows of any kind, during the life of his present contract with Republic.

Mr. Autry, the company said, refused to report for work for several weeks. The actor, on a personal appearance tour of the South, was reported to have declined to return to the studio for his scheduled picture, "Washington Cowboy," until he was guaranteed an increase in pay from $5,000 to $15,000 a picture. He also was said to be insisting upon the featuring of Smiley Burnette with him in all films.

JAMES R. GRAINGER

Grainger Started in Teens

The distributing company which Mr. Grainger will head has had no president. Walter Vincent is chairman of the board. J. J. Milstein was sales manager until he resigned several weeks ago and since then the company has not filled the position.

Mr. Grainger entered show business while still in his teens, serving as advance man and publicity agent for road shows. Later he became advance man and publicity agent for circuses and other outdoor attractions. He left the outdoor amusement business to handle the roadshow screen attraction, "Cabiria."

Other positions he has held included western division sales manager for Edison Talking Pictures; general manager of Thomas Ince Pictures Corporation; general manager for Marshall Neilan Productions; vice-president and sales manager of the old Goldwyn Company; and vice-president in complete charge of sales and distribution for Fox Film Corporation. He resigned from the Fox position to become sales manager of Universal.

Johnston with Wanger

John Leroy Johnston, former western manager for Photoplay, Movie Mirror and Radio Mirror, has been named publicity and advertising manager for Walter Wanger Productions. Russell Phelps will be his associate.

Trade Discussions To Include Films

Films and theatre equipment will be included in discussions of a new reciprocal trade agreement with Canada on which public hearings are scheduled to begin April 4th.

Negotiation of a trade treaty between the United States and Great Britain makes necessary a revision of the Canadian treaty which has been in effect for the past two years. Briefs and requests to be heard must be filed in Washington by March 12th.

The present Canadian trade treaty did not affect the three-cent-per-foot tariff on film sent into Canada, which has been in effect for many years. The Canadian tariff on film brought in from the United Kingdom is only one and one-half cents per foot. Due to the fact that it has been possible to have prints made in Canada, the three-cent tax has not been an undue burden on American film companies in the past, but the increasing number of color productions, the prints of which must be made in the U. S. due to the lack of Canadian color printing facilities, is making the three-cent tariff increasingly costly.

The present treaty reduced the former 30 per cent Canadian ad valorem tariff on raw stock to 25 per cent. The old tariff on theatre equipment varied according to specific items. The trade treaty set a uniform 15 per cent tariff, effecting a total reduction of about 29 per cent. The Canadian tariff on advertising and printed matter formerly was 15 per cent, then was reduced to 12½ per cent, on the basis of pounds sterling, by the trade agreement.

All or most of these items may be involved in readjustments in the negotiation of a new treaty with the Dominion Government. Canada does not have a quota law on films.

Plans for New Theatre Approved by Skouras

Spyros Skouras, head of the National Theatres circuit, has approved an appropriation of $100,000 for construction of a new theatre in Sterling, Col., discussed by him with Rick Ricketson, Intermountain division manager, at conferences in New York last week.

In addition a theatre in Durango, Col., will be reconstructed and several others in the Intermountain division will be renovated.

Charles E. Ford is completing his affairs as head of Universal newsreel at the home office in New York preparatory to leaving for Hollywood to enter production about February 15th.

Warner Brothers this week announced the elevation of Hugh Herbert, Wayne Morris and Anita Louise to stardom, making a list of 27 players accorded "star" rating at the studio.

Outlook Depends on Industry's Own In-Look, Say Leaders

N. L. Nathanson and Nicholas M. Schenck express some opinions

by TERRY RAMSAYE,
in Miami

N. L. NATHANSON, the movie master of Canada, sitting where the tropic breezes stir through the bougainvillea and the jasmine bowering the walls of palm-lined gardens of Miami Beach, views the state of the industry of the screen without large alarms and with an apparent conviction that the motion picture makes its own troubles, and that mostly they are on the inside.

We talked long of the sales drives, the promotions, the pressures and million-dollar budgets of Hollywood, the international situation, radio and exhibition policies.

The twilight of the cocktail hour had lengthened into dusk when he summed it all up in a sentence.

"The motion picture collects enough money to make a profit, to be prosperous in all divisions. The public pays enough."

Mr. Nathanson's opinions come for the point of view rather broader than the special interest of the screen. While this side of the border his name means control of exhibition in Canada; he is up there an industrialist among whose larger interests are the motion picture. He is to be found on the official roster of many corporations, with interests as diverse as the Dominion can offer. Through his conversation shone the fact that he is not of those who say so persistently, "But the motion picture business is different." He is very sure that it is not different, that it is to be conducted with success only by a level-eyed adjustment to the basic laws of all business, that it consists of product, distribution and consumer. He is aware, rather beyond the awareness of most of the spokesmen of the motion picture of today, that the final authority is the customer.

"And the motion picture industry is not doing much about making more customers, either of today or tomorrow," he observed. "There is terrific pressure on this and that production, or special picture, but no attention at all to the motion picture itself."

It is his estimate that the industry spends some seven or eight per cent of its gross intake in advertising its products, competitively battling for the attention of the existing customers for this or that production, and forgetting about making more patrons. "And," he remarked, "when you get above, say, about three per cent, it is not business."

"We need," he said, "a consistent telling and selling of the fact that the motion picture is a great value to the box office customer, an entertainment for the whole family, the most entertainment and the best that can be had."

Mr. Nathanson's opinions are not empirical. He had ready and rapid figures on tests in Canadian houses of varying situations which indicated to him that the common competitive advertising practices of the day make the "last eight per cent of the box office receipts" cost more than they total.

"There is nothing wrong with the industry that good pictures cannot cure." — NICHOLAS M. SCHENCK.

Inevitably, as he spoke, one came to the reflection that the concentration of control in Canada was empowering disciplines and protection from invasive practices in a degree that would currently appear impossible in these United States. In Canada the giveaway and lottery is almost unknown. The double bill is unimportant in the broad picture. The theatres under the Nathanson administrative control and influence are so dominant a factor that he has a plan to spend three thousand dollars a week on selling not motion pictures, but the motion picture, and is expectant of cooperative appropriations from the picture makers.

"The motion picture should be able," he insists, "to do for itself something like the great job that has been done for insurance —or, to take an older example, the great fruit growing industry of California."

Incidentally, or maybe not so incidentally, Mr. Nathanson is a member of the Canadian Broadcasting Commission, and a rather active member, too. He is very much addressed at the keeping of broadcasting in its own special channel of service. The Canadian government controlled broadcasting stands in practice somewhere between the rigid institutionalism of the British Broadcasting Company and the rampantly commercial American networks.

It is Mr. Nathanson's forecast that in the future Canada's broadcasting will include less rather than more commercial programs. Probably, too, that is more than a forecast.

Speaking of American broadcasting as it percolates over the northern border, he had no enthusiasm for motion picture programs and personalities on the air.

"When Hollywood puts a show on the air, we always feel it," he remarked. The way he remarked indicated that the feeling was not profitable.

SCHENCK, BRISBANE AND A SWIMMING POOL

OUT where Collins avenue skirts the sea there is a crisp street number sign "5369" on the narrow strip of greensward between the pavement and the lofty wall. Within is the home and garden where Nicholas M. Schenck takes repose from the concerns of movieland and Broadway—except for a telephone call now and then.

Someway motion pictures and the industry issues of the day, seeming amazingly remote from that palm shaded, flower bordered terrace, did at last come into the conversation.

And so it chanced that the visitor quoted again that now world famed line, "There is nothing wrong with the industry that good pictures can not cure." Probably nothing that has been said in the world of the motion picture in a decade has travelled so far to be repeated so often.

"It was Arthur Brisbane who picked that out of our conversation and started it on its way," Mr. Schenck observed.

The talk turned to the late and industrious Mr. Brisbane, and how he and Mr. Schenck became friends, so long ago. The beginning, it seems, was not so auspicious. The Schencks, Nicholas and Joseph, back in about 1913, had somewhat newly engaged in the Palisades Amusement Park over the Hudson from New York. It was a period of considerable aggressiveness and militancy with Mr. Brisbane, who was looking about for things to be militant about. There were aspects of the swimming pool at Palisades Park that seemed to him vastly less than perfect. He devoted spectacular space and editorial invective to saying things about it. It cost the park a lot of business.

"There was not much we could do at the time, for that reason," Mr. Schenck remembered, "so we kept still. When you are in the wrong is a very good time to have nothing to say.

"But as quickly as we could get it we installed a big pumping and purifying plant to bring water up from the river and make that pool as nearly perfect as possible.

"Then when things were right, I went looking up Mr. Brisbane. He was big and important and not so easy to see, but eventually I saw him. I told him that we would like to have him come and see for himself and since he had had so much to say about what had been before it would be proper for him to report on what he found now.

"He was quick enough to answer: 'That's fair, and I'll have a look.'

"Mr. Brisbane did go over to the park. He approved with great enthusiasm, and he said so in print. I think he said something about the new arrangements being an example that the city of New York might well follow.

"And often after that he had friendly things to say about the park, year after year, until one could almost say that he made the place."

So it came that Mr. Schenck and Mr. Brisbane, both purveyors of showmanship to the masses, became good friends and often conferred. And there was another great journalist among Mr. Schenck's friends, the late Adolph Ochs of the New York Times, with much sage observation, information and counsel on affairs on the tangled world map.

And that brought one the occasion to relate to Mr. Schenck a tale of unaffected simplicity of Mr. Ochs. It was at a luncheon to Thomas A. Edison at the Ritz-Carlton in New York and the writer was seated alongside Mr. Ochs.

As he surveyed the guest list Mr. Ochs looked down the table a few chairs and then leaned over to whisper: "Is that Miss Pickford?"

Assured that indeed it was Miss Mary, he looked thoughtfully a moment and asked: "Do you suppose she'd autograph my menu for me?"

The answer was that she would. And so it proved.

Paramount Partners To Meet in Spring

Paramount's theatre partners and operators will all convene in Hollywood in the late spring, with the home office and studio executives participating in a week of discussions of theatre operations and product requirement, Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president and theatre head of the company, said this week.

The meeting will not be held before May 15, and probably will be as late as the first week in June, Mr. Freeman said. A similar conference of the Paramount theatre partners was held in Miami last spring.

The Hollywood meeting is expected to attract about 50 theatre men from the field, 15 or more home office executives and studio officials. It is expected that the conferences will afford the theatre men an opportunity of getting the exhibitor viewpoint written into Paramount's 1938-'39 production schedule, which will be in the planning at that time.

National Decency Legion Classifies 10 Productions

Of 10 pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week four were approved for general patronage, five were listed as unobjectionable for adults and one was cited as objectionable in part. The pictures and their classification follow.

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "The Daredevil Drivers," "Everybody Sing," "Hawaiian Buckaroo," "Love on a Budget." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "Bordertown" (reissue), "Happy Landing," "Look Out for Love," "Penitentiary," "Swing Your Lady." Class B, Objectionable in Part: "The Rat."

Academy Recognizes Editors for Awards

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences through the Research Council has taken official recognition of the Society of Motion Picture Film Editors, which holds a collective bargaining agreement with producers. A joint committee to handle the Academy film editors' award selection was named and consists of the following members: Anne Bauchens, Phillip Cahn, William Holmes, Harold J. McCord and Gene Milford, representing the film editors section, and Martin G. Cohn, George Hively, Otto Meyer, Conrad Nervig and Louis Sackin of the society.

Frank Capra, president of the Academy, has named Roland Anderson, Lionel Banks, William A. Horning, Mark-Leo Kirk, John Hughes, W. B. Ihnon, Jack Otterson, Carroll Clark and A. Toluboff as members of the art direction award committee.

Ed Kennedy, chief engineer, and Herbert Richards, promotion manager for Motiograph Company, arrive in Hollywood from Chicago this week for several days' conference with the Research Council's Committee on Standardization of Theatre Sound Projection Equipment Characteristics. F. C. Gilbert and G. L. Carrington, chief engineer and vice-president, respectively, of Altec Service Corporation, New York, are expected in Hollywood sometime this month to confer with the committee.

Loew's Constructing Five Foreign Houses

Loew's, Inc. will build five more houses in foreign territory, all to be opened by the end of the year. Arthur M. Loew, vice-president, is now in Italy on a globe-girdling tour in which he is approving plans for the new units. He is expected back in New York in June.

A theatre going up in Sao Paulo, Brazil, will be opened the middle of March and will seat 1,800. The others will seat 1,500. These are under construction in Bombay, India, to open the middle of May; in Milan, Italy, and Amsterdam, Holland, to open the end of the year, and in San Juan, Puerto Rico. The additions bring Loew's foreign territory theatres up to 26.

Atlanta Guild Elects

The Atlanta Theatre Guild held an executive meeting at its headquarters in the Castle, Atlanta, Ga., this week and elected Paula Causey, director and chairman; Donald A. Bolton, executive vice-president; Ellen Brent Senay, treasurer, succeeding Kenneth Davidson; Dorothy Hinman, corresponding secretary, and Eva Truslow, recording secretary.

Newspaper Man Resigns

C. H. McGlothlin, who handled theatrical and film advertising accounts for the Baltimore News-Post and Sunday American, has resigned. Bill Schnader has taken over Mr. McGlothlin's work.

H. B. Silent, west coast engineering superintendent for Electrical Research Products, Inc., visited New York this week for conferences with company officials. Whitford Drake, ERPI president, returned to his office this week after several weeks illness.

Customers Rule Films, Ramsaye Tells Art Patrons

"From the beginning it has been the customers, the people who buy at the box office, who have really ruled the motion picture industry, and it always will be true," Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, told an audience of patrons of the arts at the Museum of the City of New York on January 20th.

"At the moment there is a notion that Hollywood and production are in control. There have been times when distribution was alleged to be the boss. Both of these branches of the service have variously tried control of exhibition, sometimes by dictation, sometimes by acquisition of theatres. The great arrays of chain theatres are a manifestation. But the producer and the distributor find, when they take in theatres, that they have taken in with them the responsibility of theatres to audiences.

"The customer with a quarter in hand at the box office window is still in power. He wants what he wants, and at a price. The motion picture was born into a world that gave it little competition. Today it has many competitions. The customer can be 'choosy'; also he can stay home and listen to the radio.

"Just now—today, in fact—there have been announcements that New York must yield to Hollywood and that there will be the new headquarters of both the art and the industry.

"The real issue is whether the art or the industry is the boss. The industry is concerned with the customers, who are boss. New York is the market place, basically for both the United States and the whole amusement world, because it is the center for the concentrations of population which not only support but empower the industry and give an outlet to the art.

"It is axiomatic that business is done where the customers are. This is peculiarly true for the motion picture because of the element of concentration—because diffuse populations are not such good customers for merchandise that is tied to an hour and place."

Mr. Ramsaye told his audience of old New Yorkers of the rise of the industry here, its discovery of the box office magic of sex coincident with the birth of the screen in 1896, how screen advertising began with Haig & Haig on a screen billboard that stopped Broadway traffic in 1896.

Miss Lillian Gish, who appeared in the audience, was presented by the speaker as he came to the "golden days of Old Biograph."

Mr. Ramsaye's talk was second in a series opened by Miss Geraldine Farrar, who spoke on the opera in New York in December. To follow are talks by Donald Oenslager of Yale on scene design. Earl Chapin Mau on "The Circus from Rome to Ringling," John Martin on the dance, and Daniel Frohman on the theatre in New York.

The Ninth Annual Dance and Entertainment sponsored by the Press Photographers' Association will be held at the Hotel Commodore, New York, on February 18th.

Einfeld Transfers Office to Coast

Mort Blumenstock will be in charge of the New York publicity and advertising department of Warner Brothers under the company's new plan to have Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, transfer his headquarters from New York to the Coast. The change, the company announced, will not affect Bob Taplinger who will continue in charge of the Hollywood office.

In New York, Herb Crooker will become Mr. Blumenstock's assistant and Mitchell Rawson will become eastern publicity manager. Ruth Weisberg remains in New York as office manager to Mr. Blumenstock.

Mr. Einfeld who planned to leave New York for the Coast Saturday, announced that although his headquarters will be in Hollywood he will make periodic visits to New York. All of the national advertising and publicity activities of the company will originate from Hollywood, according to Mr. Einfeld. Harry M. Warner, president, also returned to Hollywood on Saturday.

All of the department's service activities, he said, will continue in the East. These service activities, he continued, include pressbooks, posters, accessories and a press bureau. A trade paper advertising unit also will be maintained in the East, he said.

The board of directors of Warner Brothers was to meet Thursday to elect Gradwell Sears to the presidency of Vitagraph, Inc., sales and distribution subsidiary of Warner Brothers Pictures. Mr. Sears, vice-president in charge of sales, for Warners, started with Vitagraph as a salesman in 1919.

Warner Brothers this week reported it had a net profit of $1,685,599.46 for the 13 weeks ended November 27th, 1937, and, in addition, the board of directors voted authority to the officers to formulate a plan for offering new debentures in exchange for existing debentures and for offering common stock in exchange for part of the preferred stock. (See Page 64.)

Irving D. Hyland, of the home office advertising department of Warner Brothers, has been promoted to the post of eastern field representative for the company and will take over the position Monday. He succeeds Phil Engel, resigned.

"Chicago" Road Show Results Studied

A national road show policy for "In Old Chicago" has not been determined by Twentieth Century-Fox and its formulation will depend on the results of present two-a-day engagements, it was said by the distributor this week. In addition to the New York, Los Angeles and Chicago engagements the picture will start an indefinite run at the Erlanger, Philadelphia, February 10th. On February 13th it will open for two weeks at the Nixon, Pittsburgh and the following day it will open at the Colonial, Boston, for four weeks. These showings and a few others set by National Theatres in the west, all at $1.50 top, are in the nature of tests.

Because of the increasing use of color in films, Paramount has opened a school at their Hollywood studio in which all of the company's ace cameramen are being given instruction in color photography.

FOREIGN INVESTMENTS AID ITALIAN STUDIOS

Alliances with French and German Industries Bring Increased Production Schedules

by JOSEPH D. RAVOTTO in Rome

A burst of production enthusiasm has resulted in an imposing list of films shortly to go before the cameras in Italian studios and it is indicated that if the same pace is maintained until the end of the year, last year's total of 36 features will be exceeded easily.

One factor in the present production increase is the investment of considerable foreign capital in the production of films in two versions in Italian studies.

The first of these companies is a Franco-Italian combine under the title of Latinia Films. M. Forgerais, producer of "Carnet du Bal," the French film which won the Mussolini cup at the last Venice Exposition, is one of the directors and S. Ghenzi of Colosseum Films, producer of "Il Fu Mattia Pascal" in French and Italian versions, is one of the Italian backers.

It has been announced that the company's first venture will be "Quota 2300" to be produced in the studios at Cinecitta. It will be directed by Jean Benoit Levy.

The second of the companies is an Italo-German arrangement to be known as the Astra Otzup Company. Italian industrialists are reported to have invested heavily in the company.

Franz K. Franchy is presently in Capri finishing the story which will serve as the subject for the first film to be produced at Cinecitta with exteriors at Capri. The title will be "Piccoli Segreti di Capri", "Small Secrets of Capri") with the English star, Lilian Harvey in the leading role. Opposite her will be the German actor Willy Fritsch and the Italian, Vittorio de Sica. The story is based on the Viennese stage play "Summa Cum Laude."

First of Seven Started

The shooting of the first scenes of the English version of "Tredici Uomini e Un Cannone" (Thirteen Men and a Cannon) on January 10th at the Tirrenia Studios unofficially ushered in the New Year in the Italian cinema industry. This is the first of seven films which will be produced by the new Italo British combine formed by the Two Cities Films of London and Gioacchino Forzano, Italian playwright and owner of Tirrenia.

The picture, which deals with thirteen men isolated in a trench with only a cannon to help them determine their fate, was written by Forzano. It will be followed by "La Mezzannotte del Sette" ("Midnight on the Seventh") based on a novel by Georges Barraud; "Un Oggetto d'Irritazione" ("A Cause for Irritation") inspired by a play by Stancy Aumonier; "Byron in Italy," "Spring Symphony," by Signora de Facci Negrati and two comedies by Forzano.

Mario Zampi, who has been absent from Italy for more than 16 years, will direct the English versions of the films while Forzano will take care of the Italian versions. Zampi is well known in London, Paris and Hollywood. To his credit he has 23 silent films, and 152 talkies, 116 of which were produced for Warner Brothers at the Teddington Studios in London.

More than 40 British actors, cameramen and technicians arrived in Rome early this month to collaborate in the first film. Among them are actors Arthur Wentner and Boni Crawford, son of the noted novelist Marion Crawford.

Imperator Reorganized

Imperator Films has undergone a reorganization which will place it among the topnotchers in the Italian industry. Its capital has been raised to 500,000 lire. Marquis Giacomo Dusmet, has been named president, Federico d'Avack, vice-president and general director and Giorgio Ansoldi, counsellor. Dusmet is a well known member of the Roman aristocracy while Avack is an important Italian industrialist.

The first film under the reorganization is "Alta Marea" ("High Tide"). The script is by Corrado d'Erico who will direct the film and the scenario by Telesio Interlandi, editor of the violent utrafascist Rome noonday sheet Il Tevere and an anti-Semitic leader.

Interlandi, who would like to rid Italy of all its Jewish elements, has long preached purging the Italian cinema of all its foreign elements. He hates Americanization in Italian films. Recently he lets out a blast in a strong editorial against the encroachment of the Italian industry by American interests. Its theme song was an "Italian industry controlled and inspired by Italians." This is his first attempt at writing a scenario.

When d'Erico has completed "Alta Marea," he will turn his attention to Rino Alessi's "l'Argina" ("The River Bank").

Already on the lot is "Hanno Rapito Un Uomo" ("They Have Kidnapped a Man). Produced by Juventus Films it is based on subjects by M. De Stefani and G. de Benedetti. Its direction has been turned over to Gennaro Righelli. Vittorio de Sica and Giovanni Manurita, Italian tenor, will share the main roles. The picture will deal with the greatly abused subject of Italy's fight for independence during the 19th century.

Juventus' "Allegro Cantante" ("Happy Singer") has just come out of the cutting room and will be ready for a trade showing within the next few days.

Although "Tarakanova" (Italian and French versions) is ready for the cutting room, several shots have been taken over again. The film deals with the life of a pseudo Russian princess pretender to the throne of Catherine of Russia. Surrounded by a scheming court who play on her innocence and utilize her beauty, she is drawn into a dangerous game.

"Crispino e la Comare" ("Crispino and the Godmother") is under way in the Caesar Studios. Direction of the film has been entrusted to Giovanni Sorelli. The protagonists are Mario Pisu, Silvana Iachino and several new actors who are getting their first test.

RCA Names Dawes, Dunn

General Charles G. Dawes, former vice-president of the United States, and Gano Dunn, president of J. G. White Engineering Corporation, have been elected to the board of directors of Radio Corporation of America. They were elected to fill the vacancies created by the deaths of Frederick Strauss and Newton D. Baker. General Dawes and Mr. Dunn also have been elected directors of National Broadcasting Company, RCA subsidiary. Dr. James Rowland Angell, former president of Yale University and now in charge of educational program development for NBC, also has been elected to the board of NBC.

TRIBUTE PAID TO STEFFES AT ALLIED SILVER JUBILEE IN MINNEAPOLIS

Northwest Unit Had Beginnings in Exhibitors League Meeting of Sept. 4, 1912; 'Overseating' Among Anniversary Topics

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Minneapolis

Undaunted by sub-zero temperatures, 200 members and guests of Allied Theatres of the Northwest gathered at the Hotel Nicollet in Minneapolis this week for a three-day Silver Jubilee gathering to celebrate the 25th anniversary of organized exhibition in the Northwest states.

Like most Northwest Allied gatherings, the meeting centered around W. A. (Al) Steffes, president. In fact, the Jubilee had the earmarks of being a personal tribute to Mr. Steffes, "the Paul Bunyan of Northwest Allied" as well as its "Stormy Petrel."

Exhibitors from Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Montana, Illinois and Iowa were in attendance at the sessions, which were exceedingly informal. All subjects pertaining to exhibitor problems were open for discussion, and everyone was invited to express his opinion.

Northwest Allied was the second state exhibitor organization to observe its 25th anniversary, Charles Picquet's Carolina Motion Picture Theatre Owners having celebrated its Silver Jubilee last December.

Exhibitors and fiilm company officials on Wednesday discussed in open meeting their problems in the convention's final business session, C. C. Pettijohn, William F. Rodgers, Charles Austin Keough, Freeman Buxbaum and others spoke in what was generally conceded to be the most constructive gathering of its kind ever held.

Mr. Pettijohn in a fiery speech told exhibitors the present method of handling industry problems was "disgusting." He said, "We have lost our rights to discuss and adjust difficulties. We sell our commodities cheaper than any other business for the amounts invested." The greatest fault today, he said, is inability of those in business to get together through boards of arbitration and settle their differences. The bringing in of attorneys by both distributors and exhibitors, he added, has resulted in chaotic conditions. He pointed out that no other business had such excellent distribution facilities and cited examples of other businesses that were greatly handicapped by poor distribution.

"There is nothing wrong with the film distribution system other than it is being abused," he said, adding a warning against letting the film industry become a "political football and come under government control as railroads and the bituminous coal business and others."

"The solution of present problems," Mr. Pettijohn concluded, "is the establishment of arbitration boards."

North Dakota and Montana Join

A highlight of the Allied meeting was the joining of North Dakota and Montana independent exhibitors with Allied.

The convention got underway with Mr. Steffes reporting on the progress made by the organization during the last year. He also outlined the aims of the meeting with the declaration:

"The purpose of this meeting is to bring the spotlight to bear on some of the more acute problems now before the independent exhibitor.

Mr. Steffes in his progress report called attention to the success of the "strike" against Paramount over withheld pictures, and declared that Allied was directly responsible for halting the unionization of cashiers, doormen and ushers in all theatres in the Minneapolis territory.

The granting of additional licenses for theatres in Minneapolis was stopped by Allied, which convinced the City Council that the city is overseated, Mr. Steffes declared. Mr. Steffes said the rates charged against the industry were higher in the city affairs today than ever before.

Exhibitors effected great savings through the organization's defeat of operators' demands for a 15 per cent salary increase.

Exhibitor-distributor relations are better than in many years, and double and triple feature bills and price cutting have been suppressed in Minneapolis through the organization's efforts, he continued.

Charges Misrepresentation

In conferring with the men present, Mr. Steffes pointed out that it would be most advisable for them to see to it that they in no way violated their contracts with the distributors. If this is done, Mr. Steffes said, the exhibitors will have a clear case against distributors who, he alleged, had misrepresented their product and could be sued on such charges in district courts.

Claims that certain amounts of money would be spent on films were made by the distributors at the time contracts were signed, Mr. Steffes said. Later the companies announced curtailment of production costs, with the result that the pictures did not merit the rentals charged, he held.

Reports of committees featured the meeting on Tuesday. A nominating committee consisting of Bennie Berger, chairman, Sol Lebedoff, Ben Friedman, Andy Anderson and C. F. Vondra, recommended that the present officers of the organization remain in charge until June 1st when the next election will be held. This recommendation, and a suggestion that John Pillar and Julius Overmoe of North Dakota be added to the board of directors, were approved.

Don Buckley, chairman of a committee selected to investigate the cost of films, submitted a report which was referred back to the committee for changes.

Serving with Mr. Buckley on the film costs committee were W. D. Gowan, W. L. Hamilton, George Granstrom and Lowell Smoots.

STEFFES IS HONORED BY NATIONAL ALLIED

In recognition of his services as president of Northwest Allied, W. A. (Al) Steffes was presented with a platinum wrist watch by National Allied. The presentation was made Wednesday night at a banquet which climaxed Northwest Allied's silver anniversary meeting in Minneapolis.

Contributions to pay for the gift were sent by members of National Allied throughout the country.

Lyle Carish, Max Torodor, Fred Holzapful, Sol Fisher and Martin Lebedoff made up a committee for auditing the books of the organization, and its report, showing Allied to be in the best financial condition in its history, was accepted.

The meeting passed a resolution condemning the practice of percentage sale of pictures. The percentage policy precludes any profit for the exhibitor, the resolution stated. The report was drafted by a committee on which Abe Kaplan served as chairman, with Al Lee, Paul Mans, J. R. Ullman, and Ben Ashe assisting.

Mr. Steffes appointed Bennie Berger chairman of a committee to confer with Abram F. Myers, counsel of National Allied, and H. M. Richey, secretary of National Allied, who arrived in Minneapolis after attending a meeting of the board of directors of National Allied in Washington.

Mr. Berger and his fellow committeemen, Andy Anderson, Will J. Glaser and Dave Gillman were instructed to submit a recommendation on whether Northwest Allied should participate in the plans of the national organization. This device for action on the national situation was adopted because Northwest Allied had not had any delegates at the Washington meeting.

"Overseating" Problem

One of the problems, to which the organization gave attention was the building of new theatres "inspired by promises to the builders from major companies that the new theatres would be given product."

"This problem is growing more acute every day," one exhibitor leader declared. He pointed out that many theatres had been built in situations that did not warrant them because distributors had promised product.

In most cases, the exhibitor continued, the theatres had been proposed to the builders by distributors in an attempt to get higher rentals from theatres already operating.

Mr. Steffes told this correspondent that he was hopeful that some way would be found to discourage unwarranted building of theatres. "If we can't we'd better quit," he added.

When it appeared that Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager of Warner Brothers, would not be able to attend to defend his opposition to socalled chance games, Mr. Steffes commented: "We would like very much to have Mr. Sears with us. It would perhaps help matters a great deal if he could come and tell us how to get along without giveaways and still stay in business with the type of product we've been getting."

Speakers at the banquet which closed the convention included: H. M. Richey, Y. Frank Freeman, Ray Branch, Austin Keough, W. F. Rodgers, George Dembow, Charles Reagan, Harry Buxbaum, Pete Harrison, H. P. Green, John, Friedl, A. F. Myers, Judge Devaney, Governor Elmer A. Benson of Minnesota and Governor William Langer of North Dakota.

Statements by leaders on convention topics were printed in an elaborate silver anniversary program. They said:

MR. MYERS: "During the quarter of a century that has elapsed since the formation of Northwest Allied the motion picture industry has passed through many phases. The most threatening from the standpoint of the independent exhibitors and the public is the existing trend toward monopoly. Many of the current practices of the Big Eight are repugnant to American concepts of fair play and are becoming an open scandal. This monopoly phase constitutes a lull in the march of progress which will disappear in the wake of a reawakened moral sense in American business and political life. The exhibitors by unity of purpose and action can set the pendulum again in motion."

Yamins Points to Manpower

NATHAN YAMINS, president of National Allied: "Allied has always been fortunate in man power because much of the inspiration to carry on Allied's fight for the preservation of the independent has been furnished by Minnesota through its 'Al Steffes.' . . . I am confident that with the plans outlined at the annual meeting in Washington, with the government more cognizant of the evils of monopoly than ever before, Allied is in a strong position to effectively protect the investments of independent theatre owners."

JOHN P. DEVANEY, general counsel to Northwest Allied: "That the independent motion picture theatre owners are faced with a definite crisis cannot be doubted. In my opinion they now stand at the parting of the ways and cannot move forward toward a solution of their common problems without united action." He cited as problems confronting independent theatre owners: monopoly ownership, the uniform contract and "the problem of a divided leadership which permits the Northwest Allied theatres to go in one direction, and other groups to follow their own devices as to a solution." Mr. Devaney suggested legislation, such as the North Dakota "divorcement" bill; regulation of monopoly, taxation, amendment to copyright laws and maintenance of a united front.

Ramsaye Cites Press Responsibility

TERRY RAMSAYE, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD: "The industry press, or that constructively minded portion of it which is addressed at the service of the best interests of the whole institution of the screen, must, on such an occasions as this, be impressed with its sharing of responsibility for the fair, accurate recording, exposition and interpretation of the day to day facts of which the years are made.

"We of the press shall, I hope, never cease to be mindful that it is our function to provide a place for the saying of all that may properly be said concerning the problems and issues of the motion picture. The American idea requires for its survival unrestricted expression, the forum of the public rostrum and the printed page."

Saperstein Protests Duals

AARON SAPERSTEIN, leader of Illinois Allied: "From an economic standpoint, a double feature policy is disastrous to the theatre primarily because it definitely increases operating costs through the use of twice as much feature product as would ordinarily be used under a single feature policy. Secondly, the exhibitor is obliged to make commitments for short subjects which he cannot possibly use, but has to pay for nevertheless. From the standpoint of patronage, attendance, since the inception of double features in Chicago, has dropped off 40 per cent, and this can be attributed to the fact that the public has difficulty in finding a double feature combination at any one theatre where they have not seen one of the features. . . . To sum the matter up, the attendant evils of double features are: increased cost of operation, reduced patronage, encouragement of the production of inferior product."

Began Sept. 4, 1912

Organized exhibition in the Northwest had its beginning in St. Paul, Minn., on September 4, 1912. The association then was known as The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Minnesota. At the first annual convention in the St. Paul hotel the guests included the late W. J. Sweeney, national vice-president from Illinois; C. M. Christensen, national secretary; Thomas Furniss, exhibitor from Duluth; S. L. Rothapfel (later known as Roxy) and E. F. Purdy of Minneapolis.

Otto N. Raths was elected president; Mr. Furniss, vice-president; James Gilowsky, chairman of the executive committee; George Osborne of St. Paul, national vice-president; A. B. Robbinson of Winona, constitution and by-laws; H. A. Sherman, treasurer and Mr. Purdy, secretary.

Prior to this meeting there had been an organization known as the Twin City Theatre Owners Association, of which Mr. Gilowsky was president. This association in 1912 became part of the League.

Mr. Steffes, Mr. Myers and other officials conferred on Wednesday morning with Attorney General William Street of North Dakota regarding the theatre "divorce" bill in that state.

Cleveland, Kansas City and Virginia Exhibitor Units Elect New Officers

Ernest Schwartz has been elected to serve his sixth consecutive term as president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association. Other officers are: Albert E. Ptak, vice-president; M. B. Horwitz, treasurer; G. W. Erdman, secretary. The new board of directors consists of Henry Greenberger, P. E. Essick, L. D. Baldwin, Frank Gross, Morris Berkowitz, John D. Kalafat, Meyer Kaplan and Frank Porozinski.

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia at its mid-winter convention at Richmond reelected William F. Crockett as president; Ben Pitts, vice-president; Harold Wood, secretary, and Sam Bendheim, junior treasurer. Julian Brylawski of Washington was elected to the board of directors.

E. E. Webber, Jr., has succeeded Ed. Rolsky as president of the Independent Theatre Owners' Association of Kansas City. Mr. Webber's father is first vice-president; Mrs. Rosa Baier, second vice-president; Mrs. George A. Maloney, treasurer, and John Wolfberg, son of H. P. Wolfberg, secretary. The ITO of Kansas City has revised its by-laws so that the organization can transact business with a minimum of 10 persons in attendance.

Independent Exhibitors, Inc., New England affiliate of Allied States Association, is planning an important meeting on March 1st, in Boston. Wilbur Peterson and Sam Resnick are new members of the executive committee.

6 CHARTER MEMBERS ATTEND CONVENTION

Six charter members of Allied Theatre Owners of the Northwest were among those who this week attended the silver jubilee meeting in Minneapolis.

The six, believed to be the only surviving charter members of the group that founded the organization in September 1912, are W. A. (Al) Steffes, president; Dan Chamberlin, Henry Sherman, Otto Raths and C.E. Van Duzee.

PRESS SUPPORTS WARNER'S CHARGE MARCH OF TIME REEL IS PRO-NAZI

German Newspaperman, Newly Arrived in U. S., Says Film Is "Flaming Pro-Nazi"; Producer Challenges Critics

Controversy continued this week over the political-propaganda status of March of Time's Issue No. 6, Volume IV, purporting to show and accordingly titled, "Inside Nazi Germany—1938." Entering the argument, too, was the position of America's screens in the matter of entertainment versus political controversial subjects.

Strong support was given in the news press to Harry M. Warner's open statement that the picture really is pro-Nazi propaganda, and, as such, does not show the "real inside" of Adolph Hitler's Germany, and that, furthermore, because of its controversial nature it has no place on the screens of Warner theatres.

German Protests Film

A more vociferous criticism of the subject for its reputed propaganda than Mr. Warner's accusation that it was "thinly veiled," was made by a German newspaperman, in this country only three months from Berlin.

"It is a flaming pro-Nazi story," charges the writer, Martin Proctor, a lifelong resident of Germany.

Not only does the March of Time do its "modest bit" for Nazism, he added, "but this time they have fooled the public," and "abused the wide interest of the democratic people of America in behalf of this badly composed and dishonest news (film) strip."

March of Time in a statement to the press answering the criticisms termed "preposterous" the charge that the sequences were cut from official German newsreels. The editors said "Proctor" was not the Post critic's real name and that Ernest L. Meyer in whose column the criticism appeared had refused to reveal the correspondent's name.

One of the anti-climactic excitements developing out of the release of the reel by RKO for March of Time was Warner Brothers' refusal to show the picture in any of their 460 theatres. This occurred after German ambassadorial, consular and "Bund" officials in America vehemently condemned the picture, and after short-lived Chicago police-censor banning, all on the grounds that the picture was offensive to German Nazis.

Press Release Challenged

The general expectation before the scenes were circulated was that, in view of their purported "real inside" nature, they would be offensive to Der Fuehrer and his cohorts. This impression gained with the German officials' protestations in this country and with the March of Time's "build-up" in behalf of the picture, including the producer's assertion that the film not only shows "real inside" conditions, but was obtained "after escaping Nazi censorship," through the inferred adroitness of their cameraman, Julian Bryan, in "stealing" the pictures out of Germany via Latvia.

For and in behalf of March of Time, the press department of its distributor, RKO, described the contents of the reel, in a statement released to newspapers, as follows, in part:

"March of Time cameramen survey the scenes unknown to tourists. Both private and public manifestations of the new Nazi philosophy are revealed. . . . The propaganda machine is shown functioning. . . . The sequestration of the Jews, banned by state edict from professions and business is pictorially revealed, as is Hitler's attempt to break down Catholic and Protestant resistance. . . ."

And when March of Time officials in New York said that the German officials here were "in a rage" over the subject, it was generally concluded that the subject was "terribly anti-Nazi." There now seems to be some doubt over that since German newsman Proctor has attacked the March of Time with the charge that the pictures were really cut from official German newsreels.

Also, Mr. Warner a week ago interpreted the film as being "pro-Nazi propaganda," in a public statement which explained that his information indicated that "it was made in the form of silent motion pictures with consent and necessarily with the approval of Doctor Goebbels' Hitler ministry of propaganda."

"We do not, therefore, intend to make our screens a medium for the dissemination of propaganda for Germany no matter how thinly veiled that purpose may be," Mr. Warner asserted, adding that the screens of his company's theatres "are reserved for entertainment."

While no one of March of Time has said, so far as is known, that the subject is definitely "anti-Nazi propaganda," Henry R. Luce, president of Time, Inc., the parent of March of Time, criticized Mr. Warner's charges of "pro-Nazism" as "ridiculous."

"To get a real German's reaction to the film," the New York Post, taking cognizance of the controversy over the picture's political-propaganda status, commissioned Mr. Proctor to write a review of the March of Time pictures and report otherwise on the political or other significances.

Mr. Proctor had been a newspaperman in Germany until his departure three months ago for New York, and also had been associated with the scenario department of UFA-Film, largest of the German producing companies, it was pointed out.

"After reading the 'blurbs' on the film," he said, "there was no other impression possible for the average reader than to imagine that this newsreel was an unbiased piece of pictorial inside information made recently with great cunning and personal risks.

"Now I have seen the film, and I can only say that most of the footage is cut from official German newsreels. To show such a film in the United States, nobody would have to risk his life in Germany. The mere writing of a letter to the Ufa-Film, Doenhoffsplatz, Berlin, inclosing the necessary dollars for the negatives, would bring the whole 'inside information' by the next boat from Hamburg.

"Or, most probably, the Ufa-Films, Inc., 279 (presumably 729) Seventh Avenue, New York City, will have most of this stuff at cut-rate prices because parts of the newsreel (of March of Time) were made from negatives of Reichsparteitag festivals and other official gatherings in Germany."

Comment in "Life"

Only a few days before Mr. Proctor's accusations were published in the New York Post, Life magazine, pictorial publication twin of March of Time, of the same Time, Inc., parent, said: "Much of the film was shot during a period of three months and taken out of the country (Germany) while Propaganda Minister Goebbels was presumably too busy with Mussolini's visit to Berlin to notice what was getting by his censors."

And, evidently inconsistent with the March of Time's assertions that here was the "real inside" of Nazism, or Nazi Germany, the same issue of Life explained that the March of Time was "conscious that no camera can portray all the darker aspects of Nazism," and so "has evened the score with a vigorously pro-democratic commentary."

The extent of the "darker aspects of Nazism" which Life does show from the March of Time subject is a lone "anti-Jewish" sign nailed to a telegraph pole.

Of this, Mr. Proctor said: "The only scenes probably made in Germany for the especial purposes of this film were the scenes showing the street signs, 'No Jews admitted here,' etc. I know that generally the photographing of these signs was forbidden. But because the signs are not constantly guarded they can be snapped quite easily with a hand camera during a safe hour."

The other "darker aspects of Nazism" which Life shows from the March of Time include a picture of Herr Hitler, surrounded by his retinue, a picture of Dr. Goebbels standing at a speaker's platform, over the caption, "The March of Time believes its film is the first to escape his scissors"; a

"HOW SHALL THEATRE'S SCREEN BE USED?"

"We hold that the motion picture theatre is and should remain devoted to the mission of providing entertainment. . .

"The exhibitors of the country ought to tell 'The March of Time' that it is welcomed when it behaves itself but only then. They should tell it that they want the subject in all of the pleasing virility and graphicness which has so often characterized it. They should tell it, however, that they expect it to be mindful of the proprieties of theatrical presentation—that they do not want controversial political material which is calculated to destroy the theatre as the public's escape from the bitter realities, the anguishes and the turmoil of life."

CRITICISM CALLED 'PREPOSTEROUS'

Storm Trooper collecting a "compulsory (food) contribution for poor relief," from a hausfrau, and a picture of an old couple sitting before a radio listening to propaganda aimed to keep them contented by telling them how much better off they are than the people of other nations. ("Sixty-five thousand persons starving and freezing in Cleveland," is described as "a translation of an anti-American news item as it reaches the German fireside.")

"The best movie of the week is no Hollywood feature, but Vol. IV, No. 6 of the March of Time," says Life.

"How can the March of Time offer this newsreel as 'inside information'?" asks German newswriter Proctor. "Can anyone visiting Germany on a short trip see less than the parading as shown in this strip?" he queries. "Can anyone see from this film how Germany's anti-Hitler citizens are suffering?

"The whole is a flaming pro-Nazi story, if there ever was one. What do you really see? Youth marching, singing and working. Iron factories and other plants going full blast. Babies cared for, people fed, soldiers and brown-shirts well clad and well fed, marching happily. And dictators orating and people cheering.

"Where is the real 'inside story'?" repeats Mr. Proctor. "Where is the picture showing how many million marks were stolen from the workers' unions, and how the unions themselves were ruthlessly penalized and abolished?

"Where is the 'inside story' of how strikers have been beaten cruelly, jailed and shot, because they dared ask for better wages? Where do I see the courageous pastors and priests chased from the pulpits and thrown into jail?

And the Feuhrers

"Where is the story of how the Fuehrers themselves are living, spending money without any serious control, and the story of how they and their underlings are keeping large 'personal staffs,' which are really harems of male or female favorites, according to individual taste?

"Where is the story of the S. S. leader, one of the biggest sadists who ever lived, and the story of his villa, heavily guarded by marksmen of his black-shirted staff? And what about Hitler's Praetorians, the few men officially almost unknown, but whose deeds are grapevined in terrified whispers throughout the country?

"Where is the picture of the numerous young, clean girls forced to join the B. D. M., a young girls' group, and often seduced in the camps by the young Bund leaders?

"What about the simple workmen who were so foolishly brave as to refuse membership in the 'Labor Front' and who are now rotting in a concentration camp and are sure never to find work again?

"And what about the unfortunate Socialist and Communist members of the former Parliament, kept behind barbed wire in mud and mire for five years and without hope of pardon?

"I must stop this list of questions," concluded Mr. Proctor, "because the March of Time people, least of all, can answer them.

"This time they have fooled the public. The March of Time editor has done his bit for Nazi Germany. And by order of Herr Goebbels himself, I herewith bestow upon the editor the 'Clubfoot Medal,' made of hollow tin, to be worn with a swastika on a ribbon festooned with a blurb."

Criticism Answered

In a statement released Wednesday night The March of Time said:

"The current March of Time release 'Inside Nazi Germany—1938' has been attacked as being pro-Nazi propaganda.

"The latest and most pointed of these attacks is that signed by a Mr. Martin Proctor in Ernest L. Meyer's column, 'As the Crow Flies,' in the New York Post. The real name of the author, who has recently arrived in New York from Germany, is not 'Proctor.' Mr. Meyer says that he cannot divulge the author's true name.

"The author of this column feels that, because 'Inside Nazi Germany—1938' does not show Germans 'beaten, jailed and shot,' and 'rotting in concentration camps,' it is not a true picture of Germany today. In fact, he believes 'Nazi Germany—1938' to be 'pro-Nazi propaganda.'

"From the fact that the author's name must be kept secret, the March of Time can only deduce that he may have suffered recently from these Nazi horrors and that such memories overshadow everything else in his recollection of Germany.

"We can understand and sympathize with such a viewpoint, under such circumstances.

"However, while a part of the film depicts the fate of the minorities who have suffered violence under Hitler's rule, The March of Time's greater purpose has been to show the ominous effect of Hitler's regimentation, militarization and war propaganda on the 65,000,000 who make up the German nation.

"The comments of men like Senator Key Pittman, Ex-Ambassador to Germany William Dodd, Rabbi Wise, David Selznick, and of hundreds of others in spoken statement and in the press, lead us to believe that we have succeeded in our purpose.

"The unnamed author of Mr. Meyer's column, in his plea for a more sensational treatment of the subject, states that 'most of the footage is cut from official German newsreels.'

"The March of Time denies this preposterous statement. It is unfortunate that the attitude of this unnamed columnist seems to be that any picture not violently and sensationally anti-Nazi must therefore be pro-Nazi."

Another Viewpoint

Expressive of another view point on the March of Time Nazi-film matter is that appearing in the New York Tribune syndicated column of Dorothy Thompson, who criticizes the American screen for "sticking to 'entertainment' and for avoiding anything "controversial or political."

The March of Time was further chided both by the press, and, by theatre owners for its apparent enthusiasm in accentuating the "real inside."

Archer Winsten, in the New York Post, protested "against this sort of publicity build-up that often reduces intelligent people to the point of believing little they read."

Under a caption: "Anti-Nazi—Or Nazi," the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York, in their weekly bulletin, charged that "Inside Nazi Germany" does not show the "inside" at all, "and any advertising that implies it does tends to minimize, in the eyes of those who see the picture, the actual activities of Hitler's repulsive regime."

Civil Service Award To March of Time

March of Time announced on Wednesday the receipt of a designation on the "Honor Roll of 1937" by the Civil Service Assembly of the United States and Canada for its popular portrayal of the evils of the spoils system through a moving picture release."

"The Spoils System" was in March of Time's No. 13, Volume III, produced in August, 1937, with the aid of the National Civil Service Reform League. The subject called attention to the current campaign going on to introduce civil service reform and to eliminate the reputed waste of $1,000,000,000 of taxpayers' money, which the league charges takes place every year under the "spoils" system, according to March of Time.

"This is the fourth honor which March of Time has received in less than 12 months," it was said by the producer, citing the "special award" of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the "Grand Shorts Award" of the Jay Emanuel regional publications of Philadelphia and Washington and the Clement Cleveland Award for "Conquering Cancer."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Nine Films Start

No great change was effected in the aspect of picture production as January closed. Nine films were started; six were finished.

Paramount started two. Although the locales are half the world apart, both are musicals. In "Tropic Holiday," Dorothy Lamour and Ray Milland again are teamed in leading roles, with Bob Burns, Martha Raye and Binnie Barnes featured. "Cocoanut Grove," background production genesis of which is the Los Angeles Ambassador hotel's famous night spot, often seen in pictures, will present Fred MacMurray and Harriet Hilliard with the Yacht Club Boys and Ben Blue.

"Moto" Series Continues

Two pictures also were started at 20th Century-Fox. "Mr. Moto's Gamble," which temporarily at least, and possibly may permanently, replaces the Warner Oland "Charlie Chans," will present Peter Lorre, Lynn Bari, Keye Luke and many of the personalities who have been fixtures in the "Chan" productions. The second activity, "Island In the Sky," is a topical embellishment of the scientists' adventures atop Mount Kiva in the Grand Canyon, which occupied much space in the newspapers last summer. It will feature Gloria Stuart and Michael Whelan.

Victor Moore Heads Cast

The principal players in RKO-Radio's "It Couldn't Happen Again" are Victor Moore, Vicki Lester and Allan Lane.

The cast of "Prison Nurse," Republic, is headed by Henry Wilcoxon and Marian Marsh.

MGM started "Wooden Wedding," in which will be seen Robert Montgomery, Virginia Bruce, Warren William and Binnie Barnes.

"Dead End" Boys in "Crime School"

Warners started "Little Lady Luck," with Frank McHugh, Ann Sheridan and John Litel. The studio's second starting venture, "Crime School," will team Humphrey Bogart with Gale Page, a newcomer from the radio field, and will present the "Dead End" boys.

Warners completed two pictures. Bette Davis, George Brent, Henry Fonda and Fay Bainter head the cast of "Jezebel." In "Men Are Such Fools," Wayne Morris, Humphrey Bogart, Priscilla Lane and Hugh Herbert are the most familiarly known players.

RKO-Radio's "Certified" will feature Joan Fontaine, Allan Lane, Vicki Lester and Billy Gilbert.

Most melodramatic of the completed pictures is "The Crime of Doctor Hallett," Universal. The leading personalities are Ralph Bellamy, Josephine Hutchinson and William Gargan.

In "Desert Trail Riders," Republic, the Three Mesquiteers, Bob Livingson, Ray Corrigan and Max Terhune, will be seen with Lynn Roberts.

The complete cast for "Josette," a 20th Century-Fox feature, lists Simone Simon, Don Ameche, Robert Young, Bert Lahr, Joan Davis, Willie Collier, Sr., Paul Hurst, Jayne Regan, Lillian Porter, Ray Turner, Armand Kaliz, Maurice Cass, Zeffie Tilbury, Harry Holman, George Reed and Bill Baxter.

DOG GONE! HERBERT WAGS A CASTING TALE

The street in front of Warner's casting office looked as though all the dogs in the world were having a convention in there. The reason—director Ray Enright was looking for a dog to talk in "Golddiggers of Paris."

Inside, Enright, who doesn't expect that he will find a dog that can actually talk and plans to have a ventriloquist take care of that matter, was inspecting the canine array. He was looking for a dog that looks bored and sleepy and yet one has about him an air of intelligence that would make it seem that he could talk if he wanted to. Great Danes and St. Bernards, mongrels, big dog and little ones, dogs of all colors and shapes were paraded down the line and all were rejected but a Great Dane.

After one more critical look, Enright said, "No, take him away. Sorry, old fellow, you're not the type."

"It's a lie," said the dog.

It was Hugh Herbert, from a hiding place. Herbert was a ventriloquist in his vaudeville days.

The Youngsters

When the discerning crowd out here looked over the HERALD's 1935 exhibitor poll of box office popularity and saw Shirley Temple leading all, it rubbed its eyes. When it considered the 1937 tabulations and saw Shirley still in the van and Jane Withers in sixth position, it rubbed them again.

About the time that the screen took sound unto itself, the bright minds in Hollywood began to think up a new interpretation of the adage, "Children should be seen and not heard." Jackie Coogan was growing up and the glamour that surrounded him and his influence in bringing millions of persons into picture theatres was forgotten. Coogan became obscure, as did Baby Peggy, Mitzi Green, Wesley Barry, Junior Durkin, Mickey McGuire, Mickey Daniels and Mary Kornman, the first "Our Gang" stars, Jackie Searl and hosts of others. Baby LeRoy flashed briefly and Jackie Cooper was discovered in "The Champ," but screen youngsters practically disappeared.

Not until Shirley Temple came along did anybody again pay much attention to kids. A super-Jackie Coogan, she made Hollywood "kid conscious," and juveniles have become more and more important.

Rooney, Bartholomew New Top

Mickey Rooney increased in stature and screen popularity. Freddie Bartholomew came along in "David Copperfield." Although currently working in "Kidnapped" for Twentieth Century-Fox, Bartholomew, with Rooney, is a fixture on the MGM contract list, which also includes Ronald Sinclair, Judy Garland, Virginia Weidler, Suzanne Larsen, a dancer, Elena Quirici, and Robert Spindola, the piper in "The Firefly."

Besides the Misses Temple and Withers, other children on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot who still have to attend the primary or elementary school classes are the juveniles in the "Jones Family," George Ernest, Billy Mahan, June Carlson and Marvin Stephens.

Universal has its Deanna Durbin and Sammy McKim. Beside Billy and Bobby Mauch and the membership of the "Penrod" gang, Warner Brothers hold contracts for the services of Bonita Granville and Marcia Mae Jones, who will be remembered expecially for their work in "These Three." Columbia has Edith Fellows.

Others On Player Rolls

Paramount's "Valiant is the Word for Carrie" thrust Jackie Moran and Charlene Wyatt into the spotlight. The studio still has little Billie Lee under contract, and Harry Sherman is making good use of Billy King in the "Hopalong Cassidy" series.

Bobby Breen is Sol Lesser's pride and joy. Spanky MacFarland and Darla Hood, and others, carry Hal Roach back to the days when Robert McGowan was so successful in handling Mickey Daniels, Mary Kornman, Joe Cobb and Farina. One might go on and on, picking out child players like Cora Sue Collins, Scotty Beckett, Juanita Quigley, Sybil Jason and Dickie Moore, until he comes down to the present moment when he finds Tommy Kelley, never before in films, and Ann Gillis heading the cast of David O. Selznick's "Adventures of Tom Sawyer."

The children's day appears to be at hand.

KLECKNER ASKS U.S. FOR CREDIT FOR 'LITTLE MAN'

Motiograph Head Presents Plan At Roosevelt's Conference at Capital for "Small Business"

Plans for establishment of governmental credit for America's "little business man," including the small exhibitor and theatre and other equipment manufacturers, and the details for working the machinery of such an agency, were presented this week to the conference of "small business" called at Washington by the President to hear suggestions from that field for alleviating the socalled "recession" and solving other economic problems of the country. The author of the proposal is Joseph B. Kleckner, president of Motiograph, Inc., Chicago, manufacturer of projectors for motion picture theatres and now one of the two licensees, with International Projector, to manufacture Western Electric sound reproducers.

Mr. Kleckner, who was the only one known to have been invited by the President from the field of motion pictures and its allied industries, told the conference, "The fundamental problem before all business, big and little, is the permanent employment of between 5,000,000 and 10,000,000 people who are now without jobs. The 612 corporations that control 53 per cent of the country's $280,000,000,000 of assets cannot be depended on entirely to take up this unemployment slack."

"Given proper credit facilities, the 322,000 small business firms in the country could put 75 per cent of the unemployed back to work.

"The small business man does not have access to a well-organized marketplace where he can readily obtain funds to meet his financial requirements for modernization, new equipment, adequate working capital, and normal expansion. If any of the 612 corporations need new money for whatever purpose, they find the investment bankers competing to underwrite their securities. They can raise money through stock and bond issues and in other ways that are closed to the small business man."

Finds Borrowing Hampered

"The small business man usually cannot make a loan at any price," Mr. Kleckner continued.

"As a result, a healthy and normal growth of his business is hampered. This in turn prevents him from employing all of the people whom he could profitably employ and denies to other business the stimulus that would come from his increased activity."

Mr. Kleckner proposed that a governmental agency be set up to extend credit to small business as an institution through the nation's existing banking facilities.

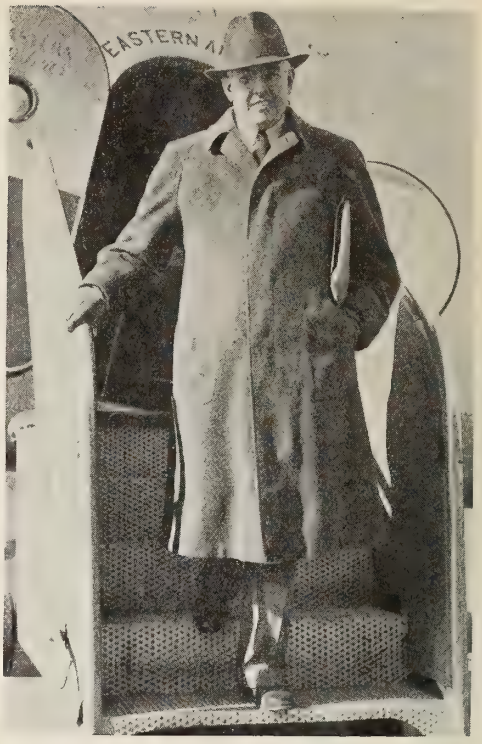
"Banks needing new capital cannot do this at present," he explained. "Big business can float bond issues which the banks buy up. If small business were to issue bonds, banks would not purchase them because they would not be easily liquidated.

"My plan would permit the small business man to go to his local bank and make a capital loan for plant expansion, new equipment or rehabilitation at 5 per cent interest. He would be required to make a cash down payment of 10 per cent at the time he makes the loan, and give a first mortgage on the property. The credit investigation would be made by the local bank. The bank would set aside a fund amounting to 10 per cent of the total amount of credit it wished to extend.

U. S. to Advance 80 Per Cent

"The government would advance 80 per cent of the face amount of the loan to the local bank at an interest rate of 2 per cent. The government would previously have determined the total amount of credit it would make available to the bank for such loans. Thus the bank would earn 3 per cent on the total amount of the loan. By having the bank instead of the government determine whether the prospective borrower is a good credit risk, you would eliminate political fixing and the cost of getting a lawyer with an 'in' at Washington.

Sees Unemployed Benefitting



"Thousands of small business firms need new capital for rehabilitation, modernization, new machinery, new equipment, additional plant facilities, and added working capital. Given the opportunity to borrow money, under the same conditions as the big business man, the little business man, including exhibitors, would effectively wipe out unemployment because by employing but a few men each, the nation's 351,000 small businesses could employ a major fraction of our present total available working class. This combined employment, in addition to stimulating general business activity, would provide a new money market for the nation's banks, enabling them to employ their funds more safely and profitably. The government, too, will benefit by receiving 2 per cent on the money it loans plus the fact that for every man that goes back to work the government will save $700 annually that is now expended on relief.

Surplus Tax Exemption

"After paying his normal corporate tax, the small business man should be exempted from paying a surplus tax on the amount he pays back annually in liquidation of his debt. This exemption should apply to whatever amount he pays back on his debt, even though he should pay back the whole debt in one year. Loans obtained to replenish working capital should be exempted until a ratio of 2½ to 1 is reached between current assets and current liabilities. Thereafter, we think existing tax on undistributed profits should apply because stockholders are entitled to get something from their investment in the business.

"By making additional capital available to small business men, more dividends would probably be paid out," continued Mr. Kleckner.

"Repayment of these capital loans to be made on a monthly basis with a maturity not to exceed 50 per cent of the normal and useful life of the assets to be acquired. For example, loans for buildings would be paid off in 15 to 20 years, heavy machinery and equipment in five years," he continued.

HOLLYWOOD LOSING OUT AS CHIEF SOURCE OF NATION'S "HIT" TUNES

Composers' Society Finds Studios Responsible for 29 Per Cent of Popular Music, Against 52 Per Cent in 1936

Hollywood and motion pictures have lost out as the principal source of popular American music, contributing only 29 per cent last year, as compared with 52 per cent the year before. The basic reason is a drop in the production of motion picture musicals, with greater activity of songwriters in the independent songwriting market.

Analyzing the report of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers of music, highlights of which appeared in Motion Picture Herald last week, it is found that Hollywood motion pictures were responsible for but 38 of the "hit" tunes of last year, that the stage contributed only 10 of the same, whereas independently marketed "hits" totaled 84 for the year. These conclusions are drawn by ASCAP from its survey of programs broadcast for America's radios on the assumption that radio plays everything and anything that comes along, and that the basis of popular demand eventually is expressed in the number of times orchestras are influenced to render the numbers, or singers moved to sing them.

America's popular "hit" tunes, then, had the following sources:

Source of Music	(1937) No. of Hits and Percentage	(1936) No. of Hits and Percentage
Motion Pictures	38= 29%	58= 52%
Stage	10= 08%	16= 14%
Independently Composed	84= 63%	38= 34%
Totals	132=100%	112=100%

ASCAP's interest in examining some 64,694 radio programs during the year to determine the source of the music was, of course, not altruistic, the Society using a vast staff for such checking in order to substantiate its old oft-repeated charge that "radio murders music."

Based on ASCAP Lists

The 132 songs described as "hits" of the year are all in the repertoire of ASCAP and its members. Whether any "hits" were written by non-ASCAP members was not established.

The 132 "hits" were performed 2,237,929 times during the year over the principal networks alone. This contrasts with the performance record for the previous year, when 85 songs were performed for a total of 1,255,269 times. A"hit" is designated arbitrarily by the fact that the song has had 10,000 or more radio performances over the year. Sheet music sales, phonograph recordings and other commercial indices of the monetary values or life of the number are not considered by ASCAP in the radio program analysis.

The leading song of the year was "Did I

Most "Hit" Tunes Are Independently Sold, Study Shows

Remember," by Walter Donaldson and Harold Adamson, published by Leo Feist, Inc., from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's motion picture "Suzy," which was performed some 30,442 times.

The second "hit" tune was "Melody from the Sky," by Sidney D. Mitchell and Louis Alter, published by Famous Music, Inc., from the Paramount film, "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," and which rolled up 29,425 performance credits.

The leading song as written for independent marketing, having no motion picture or stage connection, was "Is It True What They Say About Dixie," by Gerald Marks, Irving Caesar and Sammy Lerner, published by Irving Caesar, Inc., which was performed 29,346 times.

Sponsors' "Popular" Songs

ASCAP charges that "popular music, the backbone of broadcasting, has been left to languish for economic support." ASCAP apparently overlooks the support given to "popular" music by Hollywood, with its sponsorship of 96 of the socalled 244 "hit" tunes of the past two years.

Using a copyrighted statement by Granville Lewis, the latest issue of ASCAP's "Journal," published for ASCAP members and for the music-films fields, charges, "By the very nature of radio, primarily a musical instrument, there are not enough new tunes available for the hosts of orchestras waiting their turn at the microphone shrine of St. Vitus. The hundred-odd song writers who turn out the nation's hits cannot produce, even working at top speed, sufficient material to fill the demand of the 600-odd radio stations and their popular music schedules."

Again taking up its charge that "radio murders music," ASCAP, in the Journal, continuing to quote Mr. Lewis, asserts, "The microphone pounces upon a new tune, welcomes it so eagerly, so repetitiously, that the popularity of the melody is exhausted in six weeks—and the condition has been true since the advent of broadcasting. It will continue to be true until and unless the radio men evolve a plan to correct it. . . .

Experimentation Urged

ASCAP's basic complaint is that radio's "murdering of music" by repetitious performances lessens the life of the number, and thereby lessens the commercial sale of sheet music and records from which members receive royalties.

Anyway, ASCAP contends that "the solution lies in experimentation—experimentation backed by good cold cash. The radio rulers are ever ready with their money in advancing their standards of classical music. Their unsponsored symphony concerts set them back a pretty penny. At times, in the past, they have devoted such tidy sums as $10,000 for American composers to shoot at, with the stipulation, of course, that the product submitted express culture with a capital K.

Bills Affecting Films Advanced In Several States

A variety of bills and petitions dealing with the tightening of laws on discrimination against colored persons in theatres and other places of amusement, the licensing of candy vending machines in theatres, the enforcement of building laws and the admission of children to theatres, were pending this week before state and municipal legislative bodies throughout the country.

In Swarthmore, Pa., a move to amend zoning restrictions to permit construction of a theatre in the college town was defeated when the residents voted 563 to 37 against the plan, while in Akron, Ohio, theatremen petitioned the city council for cooperation in preventing construction of any additional theatres. The exhibitors contend the city is over-seated already.

The legalizing of candy vending machines in theatres was approved by the upper branch of the Virginia legislature, and theatre operators believe the lower branch, the House of Delegates, also will approve the measure, which calls for a $5 tax on each machine.

In Montgomery, Ala., Albert A. Carmichael, attorney general, ruled that a motion picture company operating two houses must obtain a license for each theatre, and in Superior, Wis., the city attorney was instructed to review the ordinance asking a yearly license fee of $50 in an attempt to obtain additional funds for the city.

New York State had three bills affecting theatres pending in the legislature and two other measures are expected to be introduced soon.

Robert W. Justice, negro assemblyman from Harlem, introduced a bill to change the civil rights statute to provide prosecution by the state attorney general in actions instituted because of discrimination against colored persons.

John J. Howard, senator from Brooklyn, proposed a bill which would give the industrial commission power to enforce building laws with the help of the state police where there is no board or officer charged with the duty. The bill is aimed at theatres and other places of assembly and would apply in northern towns and villages.

The third pending bill is one proposed by Harold B. Ehrlich, assemblyman, and is intended to legitimatize a measure passed in 1937 allowing children over eight and under 16 to enter theatres without parents or guardians. Although the 1937 bill became law, a contradictory statute made it illegal for children under 16 to enter theatres without their parents, guardian or an authorized person.

The two measures which are expected to be introduced would restrict the sales of tickets when theatres are filled to seating capacity, and would force theatres to provide a matron for each 35 children at a performance.

Martin L. Davey, governor of Ohio, has signed a bill which diverts the admissions tax, to the financing of relief.

Hoblitzelle on Fair Commission

Karl Hoblitzelle, head of Interstate Theatres, Inc., has been appointed acting vice-chairman of the Texas World's Fair Commission.

G. W. Jones has started construction of a new theatre on the site of the Rex Theatre, Sheridan, Ark., which was destroyed recently by fire.

RKO Posts to Be Filled Soon, Says Leo Spitz

Leo Spitz, president of RKO Radio, on his arrival in New York last Friday from the Coast, said that RKO theatre and studio management appointments are expected to be decided during conferences in New York within a week or two. Mr. Spitz spent two months on the coast supervising production and conferring with financial associates of the company.

Mr. Spitz indicated that Pandro S. Berman, who is in charge of the studio in Mr. Spitz's absence, is favored for production head of the company, and that "someone from within RKO theatre ranks" is preferred for the post of operating head of the circuit. He said, however, that no decision on appointments to either post has been made yet and that the designations are subject to the results of the conferences which have been transferred from the coast to New York.

Mr. Spitz said that the reorganization of RKO appeared at this time as though it would be "a long drawn out affair," declining to predict a date for its completion. He said that reports that J. R. McDonough would assume a studio post were news to him. Mr. McDonough has also denied the report which placed him as head of RKO production on the Coast.

Lou Lusty has signed a contract as a producer for the company. He was formerly assistant to Samuel J. Briskin prior to Mr. Briskin's resignation from the company. Mr. Lusty will act as associate to Lee Marcus on certain pictures and will have full producing authority on others.

The company has signed new contracts with Cliff Reid, producer; Ben Holmes, director, and Bradley Page and Whitney Bourne, players. Mr. Reid recently completed the Howard Hawks picture, "Bringing Up Baby," co-starring Katharine Hepburn and Cary Grant. Mr. Holmes has just completed directing "Certified." Miss Bourne last appeared in the feminine lead of "Double Danger," and Page's last picture was "Night Spot."

Federal Judge William Bondy has ordered that the claim of Trenton Advertising Company against RKO be expunged. The order approved a report of Special Master Richard B. Scandrett, Jr., who held the hearings. The claim was based upon an alleged contract for billboard advertising.

Shine Changes Capital

Shine Chain Theatres, Inc., Syracuse, N. Y., has filed with the Secretary of State of New York a change of capital from 210,000 shares, no par value, to 210,000 shares, divided into 100,000 shares of no par preferred and 110,000 shares of $1 par common.

Kivlan Named Wilding Manager

Frank J. Kivlan, former New York newspaper and advertising man, has been named manager of the recently established New York offices of Wilding Picture Productions, Inc. Norman E. Wilding is president.

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Rummaging around the old Sierra Mountain gold-camp locale of the Poker Flat, Whiskey Slide and Hangtown sectors, for atmosphere for Jeanette MacDonald's "Girl of the Golden West," scouts sent out by Director Robert Leonard came across an armful of weather-beaten, crudely lettered signs from the old sawdust-on-the-floor saloons of the 1850's. They had been reposing in dark, spider-threaded attics, and their surfaces were dusty aplenty, but one can still read, as they will appear in the film: "This saloon is Law Abiding. Fightin Discouraged. If Shootin is Done Please Respect the Art Work." And by way of being helpful to those less gifted than the bartender, there is the sign: "Letters wrote Here, Cirrect and Legible. Condolences, $1. Busness, $5. Pussinal and Love, $10 and up."

They're reporting a novel method of voting the best Italian film of the year at the Italian movie theatre on Broadway and 53rd Street, New York. A card may be purchased by patrons for a nickel and on it appears a map of Italy and America. Stretching from these two shores is a tiny strip of silver. The idea is for the Italian moviegoer to cast his vote and mail the card to Comtessa Edda Ciano, Mussolini's daughter, in Rome. The Comtessa is supposed to pitch all these slivers of silver into a melting cauldron and some day the molten metal will be moulded into a cup which will be awarded to the producers in Italy making the picture which received the most votes.

Buttons were the price of admission to a school children's matinee at the Yale theatre, in Okmulgee, Oklahoma. Each child had to provide one dozen buttons. The local WPA sewing rooms had sent out an S.O.S. for them —underwear buttons were said to be especially desirable.

ADVERTISING BANNED ON ITALIAN SCREENS

Announcement that commercial advertising on screens in Italian motion picture houses during intermissions in the future must meet the approval of the Ministry of Popular Culture has been greeted with enthusiasm by Italian film audiences who see in the decree the prospect of a great reduction in the amount of such advertising to which they long have objected.

The "intermission entertainment" consists of badly presented advertisements for meats, sausages, stockings, suits, furniture, cosmetics and other products most of which is loudly hissed and jeered by the audiences. It is not restricted to neighborhood houses for even Rome's three of four leading theatres use the medium.

J. M. Connor, secretary-treasurer of Standard Theatres, Oklahoma City, who went there recently from the New York office of Warner Brothers, and Mrs. Connor were sitting in their suite at the Biltmore hotel when the telephone rang. Mrs. Connor answered.

A young man's voice explained that he had missed a bus on which his wife and children had left town and he was stranded without any money. The owner of the voice hoped that a Warner Brothers man would help him get to Hollywood.

Mrs. Connor told him to come up to their room, and then turned to her husband, "You know," she said, "that's funny, I saw the same gag worked on a Warner Brothers executive in the New York City office when I was working there as a secretary."

A young, neat appearing man of 23, finally entered the room and presented a social security card showing that he was employed by Warner Brothers in Hollywood and other purported credentials. After listening to his story for a few minutes Mr. Connor dismissed him with "You'd do me a favor if you would show me a Warner man I can borrow five dollars from." With that the young man hurried away.

Seems that the "2" was just the right size and shape needed for an advertising layout, and a staff artist, in a hurry to get to a Bingo game, appropriated the figure.

A Kansan comments that the new one-mill Kansas sales tax token with a hole in it is the first thing the legislative tax-layers have done that he could see through.

The proximity of David Oliver Selznick's releasing of "Tom Sawyer" prompted the Museum of Modern Art, in New York, to borrow the original manuscript by Mark Twain from Georgetown University, Washington, and put it on public exhibition, in New York, as part of the Museum's exhibition on "The Making of a Contemporary Film," which is based on the Selznick "Tom Sawyer," also on the early American traveling stock versions, Paramount's "Tom Sawyer" of 1930, with Jackie Cooper, and a Russian "Tom Sawyer," made last year, at Kiev.

Nicholas F. Brady gave the Mark Twain original to Georgetown in April, 1934. Mr. Brady at one time had lived across the street from Mark Twain's New York home at Ninth Street and Fifth Avenue. He used to glance across the street and see the author, whom he knew slightly, propped up in bed writing while he smoked a long cigar. He wrote in long-hand, on note tablet, at the rate of 50 pages a day.

A few years after the book was published, many small traveling stock companies and "shoestring" stage producers were making their own dramatizations without bothering to get permission from or even informing Mark Twain, let alone pay him any royalties.

Later, however, Mark Twain agreed to let Paul Kester dramatize "Tom Sawyer," and wrote permission to Mr. Kester under date of March 24, 1900. Mark Twain was feeling pretty sour over the abortive results at the hands of the "shoestringers," and told Mr. Kester that he could do anything he cared to in his dramatization, "turn the book upside down and inside out if you want to, add people, incidents, morals or immorals with a free hand." He said his "literary vanities are dead and nothing that I have written is sacred to me."

Anyway, Kester finished dramatizing the play and sent the manuscript to Mark Twain for advice. He got it, in a postscript to a letter, which said: "There are three instances of spitting in the script. They mar it."

Radio City Revels

(RKO-Radio)

Musical Comedy

There's a lot of entertainment for almost any kind of audience in "Radio City Revels." Also there is a lot of exploitation material in cast names, story idea, production quality and the music and dancing which showmen should find easily adaptable.

Intelligently produced by Edward Kaufman and directed with a showmanship flair by Ben Stoloff, the film gives to Bob Burns, Jack Oakie, Kenny Baker, Ann Miller, Victor Moore, Milton Berle and Helen Broderick, the most active principals, and the specialty performers, Jane Froman and Buster West, ample opportunity to demonstrate their talents. Treated mainly for comedy values, the picture inserts its music—instrumental, vocal and choral—and dancing in well chosen spots.

In the story, "Harry," a song writer (played by Oakie), whose muse has deserted him, and his pal "Teddy" (Berle) are reduced to the point where they give song writing lessons by mail. Their only pupil is hillbilly "Lester" (Bob Burns). Meanwhile, because he loves her, "Harry" is earnestly trying to promote the career of dancing "Billie" (Ann Miller). It is evident when she meets "Kenny" (Baker) that "Harry" will run second in the romantic derby. However, romance becomes a secondary value for a while, as "Lester" arrives in New York, and the ensuing comedy action rotates about him, "Harry" and "Teddy," with the others flickering in and out regularly. "Harry" discovers that while "Lester" is awake he has no talent, but that while he sleeps he can compose wonderful hit tunes. Taking "Lester's" inspirations as his own, "Harry" is again a Tinpan Alley king and so reigns until "Gertie" (Miss Broderick) discovers the true state of affairs. By this time, however, "Billie" has been firmly established, everybody has plenty of money and the show plunges into its spectacular production episodes which feature "Jane" (Miss Froman) singing, "Billie" dancing and the whole company winding up the amusement potpourri against picturesque backgrounds.

Inasmuch as producer Kaufman and director Stoloff contrived to have something doing all the time, there is abundant action and movement, and thereby "Radio City Revels" should prove attractive entertainment for general audiences.

Previewed at RKO Hillstreet theatre, Hollywood, when the title and cast credits were flashed upon the screen, the audience applauded and then settled back to enjoy the fun. Miss Miller, Miss Frohman and Kenny Baker won applause for their contributions, but the audience gave its heartiest approval to the fun making indulged in by Oakie, Burns and Berle. The situation which stirred up the most laughter is the one in which Oakie and Berle try to put Burns to sleep. Their dialogue and antics literally brought down the house.—GUS MCCARTHY.

The Rangers Roundup

(Spectrum)

Adventure and Music

As is his custom, Jed Buell, producer of "The Rangers Roundup," chose to preview it to a Saturday afternoon audience in which youngsters, naturally, predominated. Inasmuch as the film is pointed principally to entertain juveniles, the procedure seems wise, for the reaction received indicated that the film should prove popular with youngsters everywhere. While concentrating on entertaining the kids, however, Mr. Buell, director Sam Newfield, and Stan Laurel, whose production "The Rangers Roundup" is, did not ignore adult contingents entirely. Although many adults still thrill to the heroics and melodramas of outdoor action pictures, as the increasing number of such films indicates, the main appeal that the film holds to grownup contingents is its musical content. Presenting the hero, Fred Scott, in solos and in duets with the heroine, Christine McIntyre, the musical numbers composed by Lew Porter are not only high class but are worked in in such manner that they bear a direct relationship to the theme and its action.

Featuring plenty of riding, shooting and fighting, all contrasted by romance, comedy and music, the story concerns a singing cowboy who gets a job with a travelling medicine show which, unknown to its owner, is harboring a gang of outlaws. The outcome of a holdup convinces Scott as to the identity of the bandits. Thereupon, with romance entering as he meets Christine McIntyre, the hero bends his efforts to rescuing her weakling brother from the clutches of the gang, locating its master mind and his hideout. Making good use of suspense and thrill action, Scott succeeds in both objectives aided by Miss McIntyre and Syd Chatton in rounding up Karl Hackett, whom he turns over to the officers after identifying himself as an undercover Texas Ranger.

The action moves speedily and its entertainment and commercial value is increased by Scott's singing and the comedy content which features Al St. John. A dialogue is held to the lowest point possible. The movement on the screen carries and interprets the story idea. Sometimes there seems to be a bit too much action, but when it is recalled that the picture was produced with a particular eye to juvenile consumption, this quality has not been overstressed. Rather it makes possible exploitation promises that should excite the interest of juveniles.

Previewed January 29th at a matinee in the Meralta Theatre, Culver City. The kids in attendance, who have seen two or three similar previous experiments, consequently knew what to expect. They indulged in plenty of whooping and hollering and at the same time did not seem in the least bored when the musical numbers were brought onto the screen. The manner in which they recorded their approval of the picture seems indicative of what to expect when "The Rangers Roundup" is available for general presentation.—G. M.

College Comedy

In those spots where Jimmy Durante has satisfied the population in his previous picture appearances, the exploitation of this lively campus comedy is hardly a problem, as he is its outstanding personality. In places where his not always fortunate castings have left the payees less than bowled over it may be a bit of a trick to convince the customers that in this he really gets going and takes the assignment in stride, yet that is what they are going to find out, to their immense amusement, when they see the picture. Furthermore, and on another tack, it is not necessary to announce it as a campus comedy, if that sort of thing has begun to pall, because it may be billed quite as properly as a comedy of motion picture life and activity. In simple, it's the story of a screen star who goes to college, over the objections of employer, agent and public, with highly diverting results.

Although Mr. Durante is, as stated, the outstanding personality, his is by no means the only advertiseable name in the cast. Walter Connolly is a close second in the comedy division. Charles Starrett is admirable as the cinema hero ahungering for education. Joan Perry and Gertrude Niesen represent the fair sex favorably. Professor Quiz appears briefly but adequately so far as billing requirements are concerned. Hal LeRoy kicks in with a hot stepping stanza and the Three Stooges do their usual stuff unusually well, while Johnny Green's orchestra and Louis Prima's band attend to the musical chores compellingly.

It would be possible, of course, to corral that much highly exploitable talent and still not have a picture. But this is not one of those cases. The picture derives from a story by Corey Ford, whose distinctively humorous pen has been all too sparingly employed for screen purposes in the past, and the playwrights, Eugene Solow, Richard E. Wormser and Philip Rapp have kept the flavor of his copy, while Director Albert S. Rogell has kept events moving at top speed from start to finish, with the result that its 75 minutes seem like half as many.

Monastic Life

In the face of attacks against monastic life in certain sections of advanced European culture, this simple and sincere picturization of the daily ways of activity in the monastery voices a silent but strong plea of defense for the practice of such a mode of religious existence. Designed to illustrate the contrasting plans of consecrating the monk's days to the realization of the spiritual ideal, and dramatically comparing this modus vivendi with modern man's mania for speed and greed, the film portrays with eloquent effect the active and contemplative sides of a vowed plan of monastery life. The result of this unusual and illuminating revelation is a work of strange and mystical beauty.

The production has been invested with a tender and reverent style of study. The work, as directed by the skilled talent of Robert Alexandre, has been edited with scholarly thoroughness by the Rev. Michael J. Ahern, S. J., who also, during the unfolding of the film, speaks intelligently concise and lucid lines of commentation. Dedication of the feature is made to his Eminence, William Cardinal O'Connell, Archbishop of Boston and dean of the American hierarchy. A thematic poem, "The Monks," by Emil Verhaeren, has been translated by the Rev. Thomas B. Feeney, S. J., into sentimental if not highly poetic English. Camera work of a superlative light and shadow technique and an appropriately moving musical background of sacred song supply enhancing aid in making the production well rounded and complete.

The screening of this religious drama of monks following their triumvirate rule of poverty, chastity and obedience will necessarily draw comparisons with another and preceding pictorial study of Catholic community living, "Cloistered." Equally touching without being at times as quietly humorous or softly appealing, the exposition of the masculine monastic life is more forceful and vivid in its presentation of the unique spiritual zeal of the true religious vocation. Considering the difficult material that had to be handled and the trying circumstances under which the picture was made, especially in the second section detailing the activities of a Trappist house during the filming of which sequences no retakes were permitted, the entire production is a well finished piece of cinema craftsmanship.

To exemplify the Catholic Church adage, "laborare est orare" or "to work is to pray," the material is divided into two parts. The first portion describes the world famed philanthropic work of the Augustinian monks of the Great and Little St. Bernard Monasteries in Switzerland, who have devoted their lives to the rescue and the care of snow-trapped travelers in the dangerous, mountainous regions. The second section is extremely effective in contrast and subtly illustrates the universal work of the church. From the frigid and barren mountainsides of the Alps, the camera moves down to the fruitful, pleasantly sunned lands of a Trappist monastery in France, the exact location of which cannot be divulged because of the monks' deep distaste for publicity. In natural and unarranged settings, the arduous existence of this religious congregation, one of the strictest orders in the Catholic Church, is presented in austere yet glowingly alive revelations. The monks are pictured at their prayers, recreation and work in the kitchen, shop and farm. One decidedly different sequence describes in stark strokes of authentic realism, that may be too realistic for many a naturalistic and sophisticated eye, the burial of one of the community members.

Naturally, the work carries chief call for Catholic consumption. Additionally, the production has been raised to such a high level of distinctive entertainment and educational worth that persons of other or no religious belief at all may well be interested in seeing the film, if for no other reason than to satisfy curiosity as to just what happens within the mysterious walls of a monastery.

Penitentiary

(Columbia)

Melodrama

A prison picture, "Penitentiary" is grim realistic exposition of the socalled honor theory of convicts that the law of the criminal code must be obeyed no matter what the cost. To convicts that code means that no one must snitch, no matter what he sacrifices or how much he suffers.

In the hands of Walter Connolly, John Howard, Robert Barrat, Marc Lawrence, Arthur Hohl, Paul Fix and Jean Parker, "Penitentiary" becomes a convincing human document entitled to a place in the adult patron's entertainment list. Making but few concessions to sentiment, devoid of comedy, containing only the lightest thread of love interest, "Penitentiary" nevertheless is endowed with a quality of human interest which can be depended upon to make a deep impression upon grown up, thinking audiences.

Howard, prosecuted by Connolly on a manslaughter charge, is sentenced to the prison over which Connolly becomes warden. Through fighting against it, Howard falls into the rut of convict psychology, but takes a new lease on life when he is befriended by Connolly, who believes in humane treatment, and when he becomes interested in the warden's daughter, Parker. Cellmate Hohl is killed in an attempted break, due to squealing by the "fix." Trustee Howard is in the room when convict Lawrence kills the "fix." Refusing to give information, Howard is thrown into a dungeon to become a jailbird hero. Lawrence, who has a score to settle with guard Barrat, contrives to be thrown into the hellhole where, after killing Barrat and before dying, he confesses murdering the "fix," establishing the innocence of Howard, who is granted parole.

Though none of the players ranks high in draw-star lists, all contribute performances that would be a credit to the screen's proudest names. Exclusively an adult attraction, the subject matter and method of treatment being over the heads of juveniles, "Penitentiary" is not the kind of picture that stirs audiences to rousing applause, but on the other hand holds interest from opening to closing sequence.

Italian Comedy

Full enjoyment of this Continental comedy of manners is considerably minimized for those untutored in the Italian tongue by the omission of superimposed English titles, though the story's synopsis is supplied in a theatre program. The playing of the entire cast, as studied in what amounted to pantomime, is expressive of polished miming. The beauteous Elsa Merlini, in the principal part, shows herself an accomplished performer. Antonio Gandusio, Renato Cialente and Drio Paolo offer the star exuberant Latin support. The editing was such as to produce a muddled impression.

The plot is chiefly concerned with a mistaken identity theme and the ensuing embarrassment, mostly comical in nature.

Wife of General Ling

(GB)

Melodrama

The material assembled here contains sufficient of the elements necessary for exciting melodrama, but because of a dearth of action sequences and over-emphasis of unimportant phases of the story the picture emerges unexciting. The story itself is an interesting concoction of sinister elements represented by its locale, China, and by the characters, a Chinese war lord, his occidental wife and a British secret service agent, and a theme pitting British intrigue against Chinese wiliness.

British intrigue triumphs. The manner in which it is accomplished is in the best British tradition, unspectacular but thorough. It is deliberate and lacks spontaneity, which is even true of its comedy sequences, a combination alien to the American tradition.

"John Fenton" (Griffith Jones), a British agent, is sent to China to discover how British armaments are being smuggled to "General Ling" (Inkijinoff), a Chinese war lord. Suspicious of "Mr. Wong," a rich merchant of Hong Kong, the British agent tries several methods of trapping the merchant, but the wily Chinese turns the tables each time.

"Wong" poisons an associate of the agent and plants the body in the agent's quarters. The agent is arrested, but he gets the British Governor to vouch for him in time to keep an appointment with "Wong's" wife (Adrianne Renn). While rummaging about "Wong's" warehouse the agent is surprised by the merchant, who appears in uniform as "General Ling." The general shoots the agent after the agent has doublecrossed him by notifying the British garrison. The agent, however, fortified by a bullet-proof vest, only plays dead. When the British soldiers arrive, preceded by a tank, "Ling's" soldiers drop their arms. The general is killed when he attempts to overpower the British singlehandedly, and the agent and Miss Renn bid farewell to China.

Walking Down Broadway

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy Melodrama

The type of exploitation used in behalf of "Stage Door" is made to order for this, a similar type of picture. Names available for use in connection with the earlier production were somewhat more significant, from the cinema shopper's point of view, but this one offers a dozen so-known "stars of tomorrow," perhaps making up in numbers what is lacking in glory. Among these that of Claire Trevor, being mentioned just now in the public prints as a likely candidate for Academy honors because of distinguished work as a supporting player, stands out.

The story of "Walking Down Broadway" is by Mark Hellinger, a gentleman proficient and profuse in the fabrication of lively fiction, and the screen play by Robert Chapin and Karen De Wolf is adequate to the purpose. Not to undertake a detailed unwinding of its tangled skein, it's about six chorus girls who pledge themselves on a certain New Year's Eve to meet again twelve months later and see how nearly each has come to realizing her ambition. A great deal happens during the year, two meeting violent death, one going to prison, another fleeing the country with an absconder, and the remaining two getting their men.

It is, by common knowledge, no simple matter to weave six boy-meets-girl stories into one without getting the threads tangled. Producer Sol M. Wurtzel and director Norman Foster have gone about the task intelligently and the result is thoroughly screenworthy.

The Purple Vigilantes

(Republic)

Mesquiteers vs. Mobsters

In this latest variation of the adventures of the Three Mesquiteers over hill and plain, the adventuresome trio forsake such minor business as corralling petty horse thieves for the more important sociological problem of combatting a mob of lawless hooded hoodlums, who may be diagnosed by the more civic conscious spectator in the audience as an embryonic "fascistic" gang masquerading behind their flowing robes and secret rituals to threaten the sleepy peacefulness of a western, democratic community. It may be recalled that the daily press throughout the land at one time gave much front page space to reporting the underhanded activity of such an organization and it was from such serious material that Warner Brothers drew up the indictment in their "Black Legion."

Despite the addition of social import to their latest work of horse and gun play, the Mesquiteer lads remain faithful to the many times tried and sometimes found successful formula for hatching the Western saga. The items of entertainment number the required amount of fast action, skillful riding groups over expansive and rugged locales, some skilled sharp shooting, a couple of rough and tumble bouts, a spot of humor, and a diminution of the "good girl" angle. The Three Mesquiteers, in case there is any confusion in literary circles, are not to be identified with Dumas' novelized French brethren, but reading from left to right are known by their following as the Messrs. Bob Livingston, Ray Corrigan and Max Terhune. Joan Barclay has the thankless task of presenting the almost non-existent romantic tone to the feature. Earl Dwire, Earle Hodgins, Francis Sayles, George Chesebro, Robert Fiske and Jack Perrin are listed in the support. George Sherman's fast paced direction equals the action lined original screen script of Betty Burbridge and Oliver Drake. Ernest Miller's camera has caught some clear and impressive western landscape.

The good folk of Trail's End are plagued with a horde of gamblers, "fancy" women and generally unwholesome characters, and form a vigilante group. The committee for law and order are so energetic that they prove a boomerang. Some of the members adapt the vigilante technique to their racketeering purposes. Under the cloaked anonymity of hoods, secret allegiances and esoteric fraternal business, the organization terrorizes the residents. When one of the most important figures in town affairs is innocently implicated in a trumped up charge of murder, the Mesquiteers who come onto the scene reveal the identity of the real murderer and unmask the mobsters.

Gueule D'Amour

(A.C.E.)

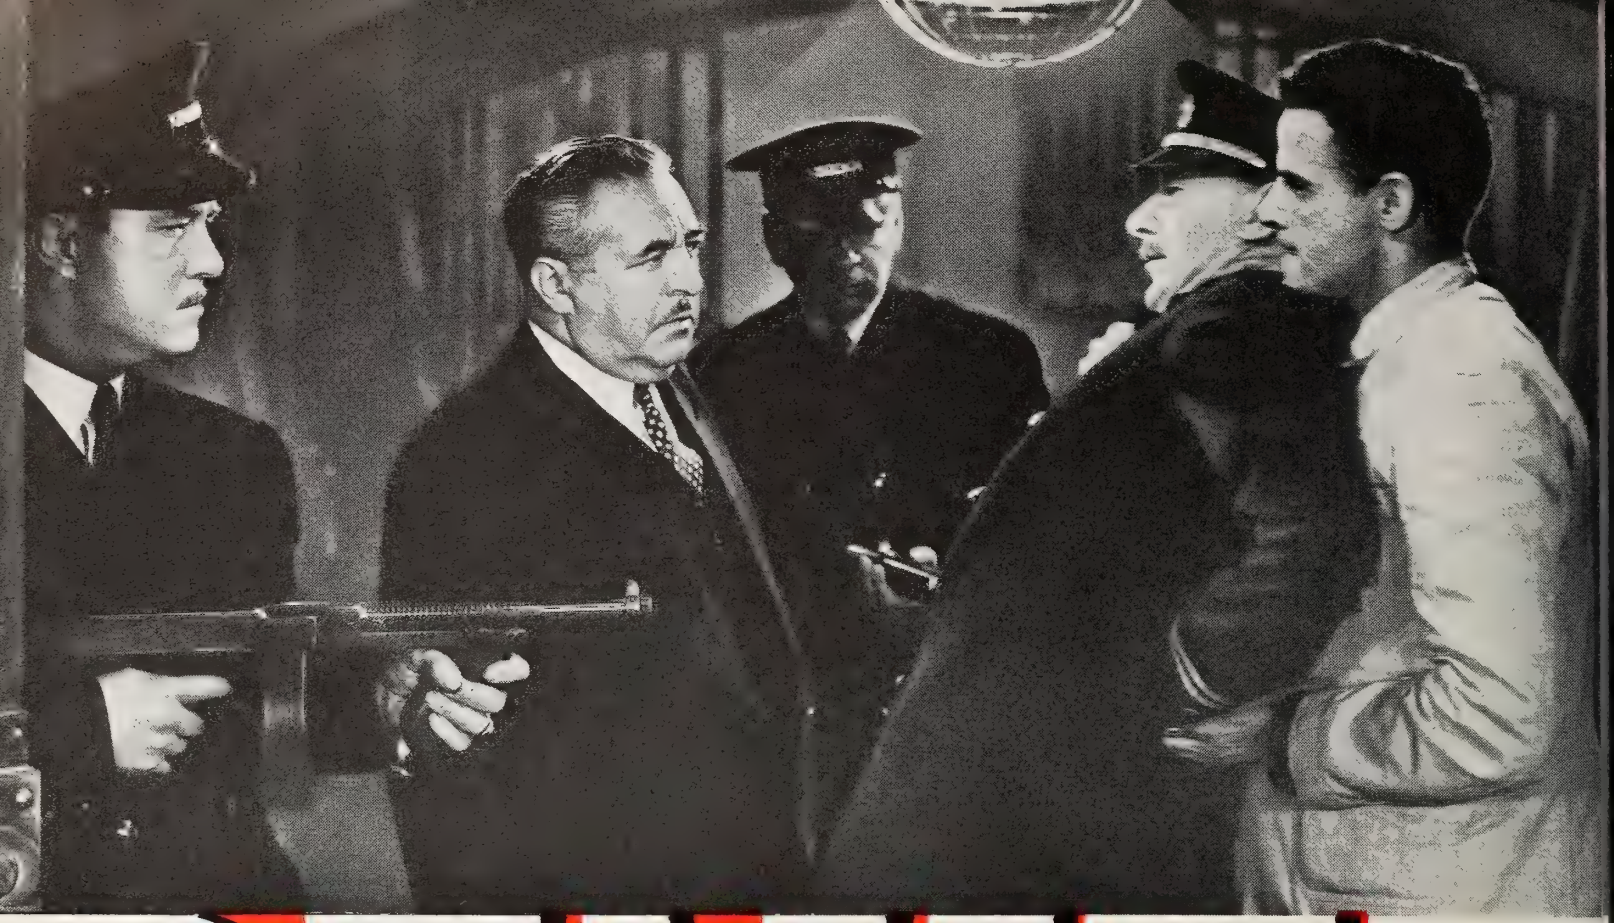
Melodrama

This French production, made by Alliance Cinématographique Européenne, the French subsidiary of the German UFA, is without doubt one of the 10 best French films of 1937, for its excellent direction and acting. It is decidedly not for juveniles, however.

The subject is what one calls in French "very realistic." It depicts the love story of an ex non-commissioned officer and a very wealthy kept woman who plays with the hearts of men.

"Lucien Bourrache" is one of the smartest non-commissioned officers of the regiment of the Spahis, at Orange in the South of France. Because of the attraction he has for all women he has been nicknamed "Gueule d'Amour" (not literally translatable, but "lady killer" comes closest). At Cannes he meets "Madeleine," falls in love with her, and gives her his inherited 10,000 francs to gamble at the baccarat table. The girl loses the money. He returns to Paris later. "Madeleine" is being kept by a very wealthy man. "Lucien" finds her. When he refuses the money she becomes his mistress. They are surprised together by the man who keeps her and she does not hesitate to give up "Lucien" for the man with the money. "Lucien" returns to Orange, where he opens a small café. His best friend, "René," tells him that he has met a marvellous woman whom he is going to marry. "Lucien" learns that she is the same "Madeleine," warns "René" in vain. "Lucien," maddened by her heartlessness and taunts, strangles her. "René" helps him escape to Algeria, where he will join the Foreign Legion.

While there is nothing purposely immoral in the film, it is obvious that such a subject is not in accordance with the American Production Code.



The direction by Jean Cremillon is powerful. The atmosphere of life in a small town in the South of France and life in Paris is excellently produced.

The screen play is up to the quality of the direction and the technical work includes some of the finest camera shots seen this year in a French film. But it is above all in the cast, led by Jean Gabin, that the main quality is to be found. Gabin made his name in "Pepe le Moko" and "La Grande Illusion." Mireille Balin costarred with Gabin in "Pepe le Moko."

Viewed at the Paris Gaumont Palace at a regular evening show. Patrons who packed the 4,800 seat theatre followed the story with great interest, and left the theatre silently, rather depressed by the tragic conclusion.—PIERRE AUTRE.

Produced and distributed by A.C.E. (Alliance Cinématographique Européenne), the French branch of the German UFA. Producer, Raoul Ploquin. Directed by Jean Grémillon. Screen play by Charles Spaak. From a novel by André Beucler. Cameraman, Rittau. Music by L. Bruhne. Produced at the UFA Neubabelsberg Studios (Berlin), and on location in Orange.

The Lone Ranger
(Republic)
Serial

If the grade of entertainment presented in the first installment of this 15 episode chapter play is indicative, the exhibitor may expect a large and faithful following for "The Lone Ranger." From the radio serial of the same name, the screen transcription brings out more vividly and concretely the thrilling adventures of the leading and mysterious actor.

The narrative also has a semblance of historical meaning. Timed to the period of the Civil War and located in the early days of the state of Texas, the plot concerns the dictatorial activity of an unscrupulous individual, "Jeffries," who with his armed confederates has blanketed his terroristic rule of the natives by assuming false governmental support. When "Jeffries" attacks a group of Texas rangers, the sole survivor of the band dons a masked identity and vows vengeance.

Against outdoor scenes splendidly photographed by William Nobles, the combined directorship of William Witney and John English has managed to keep the story moving rapidly and interestingly. The leading player is unidentified in the cast credits. His four associates are played by Hal Taliaferro, Herman Brix, Lee Powell, and Lane Chandler. Lynn Roberts is the girl. Stanley Andrews is the unscrupulous "Jeffries." A trusty Indian friend is enacted by a lithe redskin named Chief Thunder-cloud. Silver, a beautiful specimen of Arabian horse flesh, plays quite well himself.

The first chapter has a running time of 26 minutes. The subsequent 14 installments run for 18 minutes each. Release date, February 12, 1938.

The Canary Comes Across
(MGM)
Prisoner's Song

Jail birds chirp some tuneful choral tunes to make this subject passably melodious and at the same time entertaining. Erik Rhodes, as the character of the title's feathery designation, assumes a double role of convict and operatic singer. When Canary, the prison's prize tenor, flies the coop, the penitentiary's glee club see their high hopes of winning first place in the radio song contest for penal institutions take to wing, too. The real singer is mistaken for the escaped convict and is shanghaied into the jail to use his good voice to gain top spot in the song fest. With the capture of the Canary, the singer sees his way clear to marry the warden's sympathetic daughter, as played by the very lovely Virginia Grey. Running time, 21 minutes.

Enric Madriguera and Orchestra
Melody Master

The rhythmic Latin American music played by Enric Madriguera and his orchestra is entertaining and tuneful. There is, however, too little of music and too much of an inconsequential plot that adds nothing to enjoyment of the subject. The story concerns the love of Patricia Gilmore for Madriguera, a romance that is frowned upon by her parents. Later at the night club where Madriguera plays, the girl's father appears escorting a young woman. The mother arrives at this point to confront him. He sidesteps the situation by becoming friendly with Madriguera, who thinks of an alibi. Miss Gilmore also sings and Shayne and Armstrong do a specialty dance. Running time, 10 minutes.

The Bolted Door
(Vitaphone)
True Adventure

Another exciting story of "Your True Adventures," with Floyd Gibbons staging it, describes the manner in which a baby girl was locked in a bathroom while her mother was bathing her. The mother had stepped into the adjoining bedroom for a moment when a breeze caught the door and shut it while a swinging brush suspended from the door caused it to be bolted from the inside. While the water in the tub rose the panic-stricken mother vainly strove to open the door. When all other resources had failed a fireman climbed into the bathroom through a window. In the cast are Diana Datlowe, Barbara Robbins, Lucille Sears and Byron Russell. Running time, 13 minutes.

Natural Wonders of the West
(MGM)
FitzPatrick Travelogue

Another of the splendidly photographed and colored travel subjects from the FitzPatrick group is this excursion into the Far West. Material of the prospectus comprises views of Bryce Canyon, a colorful sequence devoted to Indian dancing, and a closeup of the gigantic project of sculpturing the Mount Rushmore memorial monument. The collection of the various items is manipulted with results that are bound to be pleasing to the average audience.—Running time, nine minutes.

Jungle Jitters
(Vitaphone)
Excellent

A cleverly designed and executed cartoon that is also excellent entertainment, this subject invades the radio field, more particularly the Al Pearce program, for voices. Located in the African jungle the story concerns the adventure of a salesman set upon by natives who start to prepare him for dinner. The cannibals' queen decides to spare the salesman and take him for a husband. The salesman decides he would rather be cooked for the cannibals' dinner. "Jungle Jitters" sets a fast pace in action and comedy and keeps it up throughout. Running time, 7 minutes.

Jungle Juveniles, No. 2
(MGM)
Cute Miniature Tarzan

The chubby and cute blonde youngster, whom the audience may remember as a miniature Tarzan on the run from home as outlined in the first number of this series, is still on the road of high adventure and hilarious fun. Accompanied by his trusty pals, two amazingly clever and humorous chimpanzees, the kid acts his natural and appealing self while his simian companions disport themselves in a set of amusing horse play antics. The sequence wherein the anthropoids become intoxicated on hair tonic calls for uncontrollable glee. Pete Smith lends the subject his usual tone of impish talk for narration purposes. Running time, nine minutes.

Pictorial Revue No. 6
(Vitaphone)
Of Interest

This issue of the Revue series presents three interesting subjects. The first sequence shows scenes of the Kellogg ranch in the west where the finest breed of Arabian horses are raised. Besides an exhibition by several of the highly trained horses, some visitors from Hollywood are seen, including Dick Foran, Marie Wilson, Ronald Reagan, Kenny Baker and Lana Turner. The second sequence, narrated by Clem McCarthy, is of an ice hockey game at Madison Square Garden in New York. The final sequences shows in color the manufacture of ladies' shoes, from the designing stage to the completed product. The first and third items are narrated by Alan Kent. Running time, 10 minutes.

Malayan Jungles
(Vitaphone)
Travelogue

E. M. Newman has made this a most interesting presentation of the highlights of Malaya. Photographed in color, the subject shows the natives making malacca canes, playing a native game resembling badminton but involving the use of the feet instead of the hands, and the pygmies using their blowguns to hunt in the jungle. The camera also films the gardens at Penang, and other landmarks. Running time, 10 minutes.

New Audioscopiks
(MGM)
Novelty

If audiences enjoyed the first number of this novelty group, the second issue of the Audioscopiks should give equal enjoyment and surprise. Perhaps, the novelty will not be as intense but the material has been perfected in workmanship and effective demonstrations of the unique stunts are utilized. Having an assorted collection of objects hurled straight into its collective countenance will have the audience squirming.—Running time, eight minutes.

Motion Picture Associates Install New Officers

Harold Rodner of Warner Brothers discussed charitable work Tuesday at a meeting of the Motion Picture Associates in the Hotel Astor, New York City. The new officers for 1938 were installed at the session. They are Jack Ellis, RKO, president; Jerry Wilson, Monogram, first vice-president; Matthew Cahan, second vice-president; Charles Panser, Monogram, financial secretary; Moe Fraum, Columbia, recording secretary, and Louis Kutinsky, RKO, sergeant-at-arms.

Mr. Wilson is chairman of the board and he named as members Joe Lee, Twentieth Century-Fox, retiring president; Sidney Picker, Republic; Jack Haddem, Interboro Circuit; Seymour Schussell and Sol Trauner, Columbia, Mr. Kutinksy and Mr. Panser.

"Goldwyn Follies" Premiere at Miami

Miami witnessed its second premiere within a week last Friday night when Samuel Goldwyn's "The Goldwyn Follies" opened at the State Theatre, a unit of the Wometco circuit. Earlier in the week "Everybody Sing," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, was premiered at the Sheridan Theatre.

The opening of the "Follies" was held at the State, a subsequent run house, because of the insistence of United Artists on a two-a-day reserved seat engagement at a large house, the Wometco circuit announced.

Among those present at the premiere were Nicholas M. Schenck, Jack Cohn, N. L. Nathanson, William Pine, Arthur Unger, George J. Schaefer, Mitchel Wolfson, Vernon Duke, Georgie Price, N. B. Shanberg, James A. Farley and Beth Leary.

DALLAS CASE TO U.S. SUPREME COURT; BAR GROUP WOULD SERVE AS ARBITER

Highest Tribunal Consents to Hear Distributors' Appeal on Rights to Set Prices Under Copyright Laws

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

The rights of distributors of copyrighted films to dictate the admission prices and practices to be adopted by exhibitors, under the copyright laws, will be interpreted by the United States Supreme Court, which this week consented to hear the appeal of distributors and two Texas circuits from the anti-trust decision of the Federal District Court at Dallas.

An order holding that the Supreme Court had probable jurisdiction in the case was handed down and the suit placed on the calendar for argument, probably late in March or early in April.

Meanwhile, the uncertainty of the industry's position in any anti-trust investigations contemplated by the administration continued. After repeated denials that the industry would be subjected to an investigation, adoption of some form of federal regulation of all interstate corporations, rather than the strengthening of existing anti-trust laws, was seen in Washington as the probable approach of the Administration to the problem of monopoly control.

Enforceability Shown

Success of the government in obtaining a favorable verdict in its "trust-busting" oil case at Madison, Wis., last month, demonstrating the enforceability of the present statutes, was said to have served to abate the demand of Administration officials for more rigorous laws.

Assistant Attorney General Robert H. Jackson, in charge of the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice, nominated by President Roosevelt on January 27th as Solicitor General of the United States to succeed Stanley Reed, now Supreme Court Justice, has been one of the most vigorous agitators for legislation to "put teeth" into the anti-trust laws. His successor, not yet named, may be of more temperate mind, it was suggested, paving the way for a change of policy with respect to harassment of corporations.

It also was conceded that uncertainty regarding President Roosevelt's anti-monopoly program has kept business uneasy and has contributed to his failure to secure the cooperation which he has sought from industry. The President, it was said, has not yet decided when he will send to Congress his measure asking new monopoly legislation, but is studying the matter. Last week he conferred with Senators Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Dem., Wyo.) and William E. Borah (Rep., Idaho), co-authors of a bill requiring all corporations doing interstate business to obtain federal licenses.

Would Apply to Distributors

Under this bill, which would apply to all film distributing companies, the Federal Trades Commission, which would issue licenses to corporations, would stipulate how these companies could do business. Such stipulations would include prohibitions against monopoly, and the commission could refuse or revoke licenses where the conditions it laid down were found to have been violated.

Doubts regarding the constitutionality of the plan were said to have been satisfactorily settled by Administration leaders, and it was indicated that legislation along that line might be asked, eliminating the embarrassment which would result from a demand for a measure specifically outlawing practices which industries were asked by the government to adopt under the NRA.

The appeal in the Dallas case was filed in the Supreme Court by Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, Vitagraph, RKO, Columbia, United Artists, Universal, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Twentieth Century-Fox, MGM of Texas, Twentieth Century-Fox of Texas, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Texas Consolidated Theatres, Karl Hoblitzelle and S. J. O'Donnell.

They were held by the Dallas court to have conspired to restrain trade in motion pictures. The court ruled that the contracts between the distributors and the circuits were in violation of the law. The contracts specified that subsequent-run houses exhibiting features which had been shown first-run by the two circuits at an admission price of 40 cents or more were to be required to charge an admission of not less than 25 cents for night performances and were prohibited from using such features as part of a double feature bill.

ITO Criticizes Allied

Among other developments in trade practice fields was criticism of Allied States Association by New York's Independent Theatre Owners' Association for having turned down an invitation to attend a trade practice conference.

Under the heading "Sorrow, Not Anger," the ITOA's organ, The Independent, expressed the organization's viewpoint.

In Tampa, Fla., a one year postponement of trial of an anti-trust suit brought by the Rivoli theatre, against United Artists and other distributors, was granted by the federal court. The theatre charged it had been forced to close in 1931 because of inability to obtain product. The defendants contended the house was insolvent.

Leon Yankwich, Federal Judge in Los Angeles, this week dismissed without prejudice the action of 20 exhibitors seeking a total of $210,000 over failure of Paramount to deliver ten pictures listed on the 1936-37 schedule. In dismissing the action the court sustained a demurrer filed by the company. The judge also voiced an opinion which declared unconstitutional the Cartwright Act, California's anti-trust law.

PIZOR PROTESTS BENEFIT SHOW

A protest against Eddie Cantor's scheduled appearance at a benefit show in Philadelphia on March 16th, was forwarded to the actor this week by Lewen Pizor, president of the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, and Delaware.

The show, to be given by a fraternal organization, the Artisans, is one of nine for which admission is sold in coupon book form, with the admission for each performance amounting to 28 cents, according to Mr. Pizor.

Association Would Handle Problems of Intra-Industry Factions and Be Go-Between of Business and Government

An offer to serve as arbitrator between "warring factions" in the motion picture industry and between the industry and the government in connection with threats of enlarged anti-monopoly legislation, was contained in a statement issued this week by Bernard A. Grossman, chairman of the committee on theatrical law of the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

Mr. Grossman's statement amplified his remarks made in connection with the announcement that his committee will undertake a study of anti-trust laws and the need of additional legislation.

The committee, Mr. Grossman said this week, "from its neutral position, would be willing to serve as a medium of peaceful arbitration between the present warring factions in the industry; and, if possible, between the industry as a whole and the government, in the present tense uncertainties attending the threats of enlarged anti-monopoly legislation and governmental regulation."

"Missionary Ecstacy"

Previously, Mr. Grossman had said: "As chairman of the committee, I have no preconceived attitudes. There is considerable demand for anti-monopoly laws of serious extent. There is considerable concern that those advocating these economic and public policies are suffering from a missionary ecstacy; that the road is neither new nor progressive, and that the mirage of salvation at the end is a distant and receding goal. In the end your committee may perhaps find that here, as so often, the war is chiefly one of words and that a rapprochement between the factions is simpler than we think."

Mr. Grossman was recently reappointed chairman of the committee for 1938 and those who will serve with him are: A. William Deller, of New York; Lester T. Hubbard, Albany; Guy A. Tobler, New Jersey; Senator George F. Thompson, New York; and Milton C. Weisman, New York.

Mr. Deller is author of "Walker, on Patents" and is a lecturer on the subject at Columbia University. Mr. Hubbard, a vice-president of the association, is a United States commissioner for the Northern District of New York, a lecturer on federal criminal law and procedure, and former assistant editor of the Miscellaneous Reports of the New York supreme court. Mr. Thompson, a former New York State senator, led an investigation of public utilities with charges of monopoly and oppression against them while in the senate, and during the existence of the NRA he was a member of the grievance board under the Motion Picture Code. Mr. Weisman is receiver of the Fox Theatres Corporation and a law partner of Emanuel Celler, a member of Congress.

The Showman's Club of Philadelphia held a housewarming in its new quarters in the Saint James Hotel last weekend. The reception was attended by more than 300 members and their friends.

INSIDE NAZI GERMANY-1938

Single Subject of the MARCH OF TIME (ISSUE 6—VOL. 4) Now Booking in 8200 U. S. Theatres

What is said about it:

●DOROTHY THOMPSON:

"The tempest raging around the March of Time's film 'Inside Nazi Germany—1938' raises not only the question of screen censorship, but also whether a motion picture can or should deal with an important controversial subject. It is a highly exciting picture, a realistic portrayal of Germany today, and a magnificent piece of journalism. Who on earth can doubt the right or the reason for presenting such a motion picture document?"—Says Columnist Dorothy Thompson, New York Herald Tribune Syndicate.

●WINCHELL'S RADIO:

"The new March of Time film dealing with Nazi Germany is packing the Embassy Newsreel Theatre on Broadway. Your reporter attended several times. Handclapping and some booing, but when the patriots of Connecticut are seen and heard outlawing Nazi camps, the audience responds, surprisingly enough, with 100% applause." WALTER WINCHELL, Sunday (Jan. 23) on his coast-to-coast broadcast.

●FILM DAILY:

" 'Inside Nazi Germany' brings home the full truth for perhaps the first time."

●BOXOFFICE:

" . . . It is a fact that 'Inside Nazi Germany—1938' is a provocative and an arresting commentary on a brand of international terrorism which should have, and is deserving of, the strong light of day poured into it by every widespread method of communication."—Red Kann.

●BACKFIRED:

"If March of Time was designed as propaganda for Germany, then the joke must be on Herr Hitler and Herr Goebbels . . . the film backfired—at least before a capacity audience here. The Palace audience nearly tore down the rafters with applause when the good Americans protested against Nazi invasion."—Columnist Everett M. Boyd in the CINCINNATI INQUIRER.

●NEW YORKER:

"The maddening release is cool in tone. It is detached . . . No detail of this sketch is melodramatic; in it there are no scenes of atrocity, violence, outrage. . . . The sum total, I should say, of such reporting is sensational. The film is polite and reasonable, and no alarmist document could have its strength."—John Mosher.

●RABBI STEPHEN WISE:

"A truthful portraiture of the march of time in Nazi Germany. As an American, I congratulate 'Time' for defending the Democratic Ideal—by telling the truth about Regimentation in Nazi Germany."

What's said:

●EX-AMBASSADOR DODD:

●CRITIC:

"'Inside Nazi Germany,' quite apart from its attack on a political system, is a great picture. It will probably rank as one of the greatest non-fictional films of 1938, if not all time. It is well integrated, graphic and paced to a thundering beat. It smashes home its story with punches thrown from every angle."—PROVIDENCE JOURNAL Columnist Robert L. Wheeler.

●HOLLYWOOD ANTI-NAZI LEAGUE:

"To anybody not completely deaf, the reel will fortify all his biases in favor of democracy. What the pictures show as taken in Germany are, of course, what the Hitler regime wanted shown, but what was shot outside Nazi Germany is enough to have the reel either banned in Germany or cut to ribbons when shown, and in either case, none of the dialogue will ever be heard there. It should be seen by everybody with a suspicion of what Fascism means."
—FRANK SCULLY speaking for the Hollywood Anti-Nazi League.

●THE CHURCHMAN:

"'Inside Nazi Germany—1938' ought to have a profound effect on American thought. Its very restraint in dealing with a situation so completely lacking in restraint, adds notably to the strength of the presentation."— Says Editor GUY EMERY SHIPLER.

THE MARCH OF TIME

PRODUCED BY THE EDITORS OF LIFE AND TIME

HOLLYWOOD IS STRONGER ABROAD DESPITE ATTEMPTS TO WEAKEN IT

Six Million More Feet of Film Shipped to Foreign Countries Than in 1936; Motion Picture Equipment Sales Also Gain

Unshaken by efforts of foreign countries to supplant American motion pictures with those of native production or from other nations, American distributors last year shipped abroad 6,000,000 feet more of film than they did in 1936, according to figures compiled by Nathan D. Golden, chief of the motion picture division of the Department of Commerce, Washington.

Total shipments during the year of negatives and positives, both sound and silent, reached 215,721,956 linear feet with a declared nominal value of $4,797,641, compared with 209,651,404 feet valued at $4,531,639 in 1936, Mr. Golden reported.

To permit the better exhibition of American pictures, foreign countries purchased American sound equipment, recording and producing, valued at $2,280,961, compared with $2,105,288 the preceding year, in addition to 1,625 standard gauge 35 mm. projectors valued at $449,142 against 1,454 valued at $383,078; 21,327 16 mm. projectors valued at $662,750 against 7,383 valued at $304,378, and cameras and other equipment.

While exports of sound positives increased over 1936 (sound negatives showed a decline), silent films, both positive and negative, showed a greater percentage rise, the figures disclosed.

Exports of sound positives totaled 200,245,663 feet valued at $4,242,012 against 195,907,374 feet valued at $4,025,767, an increase of less than three per cent, but shipments of silent positives were 2,851,039 feet valued at $87,362 against 1,695,980 feet valued at $51,670, an increase of over 70 per cent.

Shipments of Negatives Drop

In negatives, shipments of sound film dropped from 9,904,111 feet valued at $362,035 in 1936 to 9,586,631 feet valued at $354,578 last year, while silents increased from 2,143,939 feet valued at $92,167 to 3,038,623 feet valued at $113,689.

Central Casting Reports On Status of Extra Players

Progress of the extra player in Hollywood in 1937 was reported this week by the Central Casting Bureau, cooperative placement agency, in which all large studios participate. Extras in the coast studios earned $2,986,372 in 1937. This is an increase of $565,919 over 1936. Total placements showed an increase of 294,307 extras obtaining employment in 1937 as compared to 268,436 in 1936.

In the January-June pre-Screen Actors Guild period, there were 128,101 placements at a cost to the studios of $1,173,038.94. In the last six months under the Guild contract, there were 166,206 placements, with total payroll of $1,813,333.95.

The extras received an average daily wage of $10.03, increase of $1 over the preceding year. Figured on a seven-month basis beginning with June 1, 1937, when the contract with the Screen Actors Guild was signed, the average daily wage of the extra has been $10.91.

The average daily placement in 1937 was 944, a gain of 86 jobs per day. The total average daily placement showed that 637 men, 567 women and 48 children found daily employment as extras. In the 12 months 198,922 men extras were paid $1,773,675. In the same period 87,741 women extras were paid $792,900. Some 4,354 boys were employed and were paid $331,664. The number of girls who worked as extras was 3,290, and they received $24,311.

The gain in the year was made on the part of adult extras, both men and women, showing a substantial increase in the number of placements. In the boy and girl class the number of jobs fell off.

Plan Bellevue House

A 1,000-seat theatre will be built in Bellevue, Ohio, by the Shine circuit in association with local interests. The building will cost $75,000, with an additional $25,000 to be spent on equipment. Completion is scheduled for early summer.

COMPANIES ALREADY TALKING ABOUT PRODUCT AND SALES FOR NEXT YEAR

Selling Season Advanced Full Month, with Commitments Taken for Purchases of 1938-1939 Films by Circuits

The very first stirrings over the nature and quantity of product for next season were noticeable this week, even before the conclusion of the mid-seasonal sales drives now being conducted by several of the large companies to clear up final business for this season and hurry along playdates on 1937-38 pictures contracted for but still unplayed.

Not only are some of the companies talking about the construction of next season's programs, but actual commitments already are being taken for their purchase by circuits, signaling an earlier start by one month on the actual selling season.

Universal, RKO, Twentieth Century-Fox, Monogram and Warner Brothers this week made their first announcements concerning the formulation of 1938-39 schedules. Some indicated specific product decisions, others pertained to conferences with that in view.

Meanwhile, progress in mid-seasonal sales drives were reported by Warner Brothers, Columbia, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount and Radio Pictures.

Convention Set Month Earlier

An indication of the trend toward early selling of next season's product was given in the fact that Twentieth Century-Fox set its national sales convention for around April 1st, more than a month early for the company. The meeting will be in Kansas City.

Selling is always underway, there is no set season for it, John D. Clark, vice-president in charge of distribution for Twentieth Century-Fox, said. Early selling has been a practice of the company for five years, he added.

"There is no particular reason," he continued, "except our reputation with exhibitors on the basis of their experience with us in prior years."

While the company is expected to schedule the same number of features next season as in the current season, 57, the program will be enlarged to include a series of one-reel short subjects. The company will not renew its releasing contract with Educational pictures when it expires in August.

Early Selling Trend

RKO has not launched selling for next season, Ned E. Depinet, president, said. He added that he did not believe the companies selling early would have a great advantage over the others.

"The trend in recent years has been to sell early," Mr. Depinet continued. "And why not? If an exhibitor is satisfied with a company's product performance, why should he not make early commitments for the next year?"

Comparatively few exhibitors transfer their playing time to companies other than those with which they have dealt in previous seasons, Mr. Depinet said. The exhibitors who do change, he continued, do so because of some dissatisfaction with their deals or because they are disgruntled with other conditions.

Universal will make four serials for the 1938-39 season, two of them based on newspaper adventure cartoons, one on Boy Scout activities and one a western. A 12-episode chapter play will be filmed from the "Buck Rogers" newspaper cartoon and the Boy Scout adventure serial will also be in 12 episodes. The company will have the active cooperation of the national Boy Scouts organization.

Second of the newspaper cartoons to be serialized by Universal will be "Red Barry," based on the King Features Syndicate strip. Larry (Buster) Crabbe will play the title role in the film, which will be in 13 episodes. The Western serial will be "The Flaming Frontiers," in 15 episodes, with Johnny Mack Brown in the leading role.

Sport Reels from Pathe News

Pathe News will produce a series of nine sport reels for release through RKO during the 1938-39 season. "White Magic" will be the first of the group, which will be known as "Sportscopes." Others in the series will be "In the Swim," "Hoof Beats," "Windward Way," "Golden Gloves," and "Speeding Spokes."

Monogram will extend its program from 42 to 48 features for next season, W. Ray Johnston, president, announced upon his arrival in Hollywood from New York. Monogram, he said, will increase its 1938-39 budget 25 per cent over the $2,300,000 set aside for this year's schedule.

Warner Brothers' short subject program for the approaching season will be mapped at studio conferences about March 1st when Norman Moray, head of Vitaphone sales, will visit Hollywood. A substantial increase in the number of patriotic subject shorts was anticipated.

GN Resuming Production

At the home office of Grand National it was announced this week that the company will resume production in Hollywood within a few days, with two Tex Ritter westerns to start immediately. Ed Finney, advertising and publicity director, who also produces the westerns, will remain on the coast permanently.

Columbia Pictures will hold the first of its mid-winter divisional meetings, in connection with the company's "Montague Good-Will Campaign," in Cleveland about the middle of this month. A. Montague, general sales manager, will preside. Among the home office executives who will attend are Rube Jackter, Lou Weinberg, Max Weisfeldt and Louis Astor.

Mr. Astor, circuit sales supervisor, is now on a two weeks' tour of key cities in connection with the sales drive. The campaign opened January 15th and will continue until May 15th.

Sears Drive Advanced

The Warner Brothers "Sears Drive" is 25 per cent ahead of last year's drive in the collections and billing division, Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager, said. The drive has been underway six weeks and has ten more weeks to run.

Paramount's new sales contest, "Paramount on Parade," which will begin February 27th and run 13 weeks, was discussed in Kansas City this week when 30 branch managers, salesmen, and booking and ad sales managers from Kansas City, Des Moines, St. Louis and Omaha met at the Hotel Muehlebach.

European and British sales conventions in Paris and London are planned by Twentieth Century-Fox for late in April or early in May. Sidney R. Kent, president, is expected to attend. While in London Mr. Kent will confer with Robert T. Kane, head of New World Productions, on the British pictures to be released through Twentieth Century-Fox.

Fire Loss $4,447 In Twelve Years

The loss from fire in major company film exchanges during the past 12 years amounted to only $1 in each $48,000 of print value handled by the exchanges in that length of time, it was shown in a report released this week by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

In the 12-year period a total of only 11 fires occurred in the more than 250 exchanges covered by the report. The aggregate fire loss was only $4,447, whereas the print value of the films handled by the exchanges is conservatively estimated at $218,000,000. The exchanges estimate that they receive, store or ship 27,000 miles of film daily.

Estimates of the fire losses in exchanges are based on records which show that the major company exchanges handled an average of 400 features annually for the past 12 years and that an average of 200 prints of each feature were in use or a total of 80,000 prints annually. At an average print cost of $175, the total print value averaged $14,000,000 per year, or $168,000,000 for the period covered by the report. In the same period, the print value of shorts, newsreels and all other productions handled by the major exchanges is estimated at $50,000,000. Thus, of the $218,000,000 aggregate value of the prints handled, there was a loss of only $4,447 attributable to film exchange fires.

The fire loss record for the 12-year period is as follows—1926, one fire, $3,000 loss; 1927, none; 1928, one fire, $25 loss; 1929, one fire, $1,200 loss; 1930, one fire, $15 loss; 1931, none; 1932, three fires, $41 loss; 1933, none; 1934, one fire, $148 loss; 1935, two fires, $8.00 loss; 1936, none; 1937, one fire, $10 loss.

The unusual record of the exchanges is credited to the conservation activities of the MPPDA and constant precaution taken in individual exchanges. Monthly fire inspections and periodic fire drills for employes are held, and supervisors of exchange operations of member companies designate a branch manager in each distributing center to direct enforcement of conservation measures for a six-month period, with a new director being designated at the end of that time.

John, James and Horace Richards of New Orleans have been granted a charter for Theatre Service Corporation, to operate theatres, supply, book and buy.

Universal this week signed Glenda Farrell to a two-pictures-a-year contract. Miss Farrell recently left Warner Brothers.

B. C. Johnson has named Bill Stoel as manager of his new theatre, Maryville, Wash.

SPLIT IN ACTOR'S GROUP WIDENS AFTER SCREEN GUILD MAKES PEACE

Rupture Healed Last Week, Breaks Out Anew As Federation of Actors Threatens to Support Jurisdiction Claims

Internal strife in the ranks of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America which was smoothed over last week after violent disagreement between Kenneth Thomson for the Screen Actors' Guild and leaders of Actors' Equity was again far from settlement this week with a new rupture evident over the claim of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees to jurisdiction over all entertainment workers. A petition embodying the IATSE claim is before the executive board of the American Federation of Labor meeting in Miami.

The Screen Actors' Guild, on the point of settling its differences with the parent organization, revived last fall in an attempt to coordinate the talent guilds of stage, screen and radio, found them renewed and intensified after an eight hour meeting of the Four A's executive board last Friday. At the meeting jurisdictional problems of the American Federation of Actors were brought to a head and leaders of that group announced they were prepared to withdraw from the Four A's and seek affiliation with the IATSE.

The actors' federation claims jurisdiction over night club entertainers who have been under the wing of Chorus Equity Association and the threat of withdrawal was made conditional on disposal of the claim by the Four A's board.

The Screen Actors' Guild is seeking changes in the bylaws of the central organization which it believes will insure harmony in place of the internal bickering which has marked the negotiations for a strong constitution.

Friction in the Four A's, especially marked since the elevation of Frank Gillmore from the presidency of Equity to leadership of the central body and the subsequent appointment of Burgess Meredith as acting head of Equity, was brought into the open last week following the dispute over the chorus jurisdiction when Mr. Thomson attacked the new Equity administration for obstructing organization efforts in the various member groups. The brunt of Mr. Thomson's and the guild's attack was directed against Philip Loeb and George Heller, Equity council members and leading figures in the old insurgent faction in that group.

Mr. Thomson, supported by Florence Marston, eastern representative for the guild, resented the reiterated charge that the guild sought to dominate the Four A's and threatened withdrawal from the parent group and abrogation of the guild's contract with Equity.

Later these differences were smoothed over and a joint statement issued by Mr. Thomson and Mr. Meredith ascribed the fight to "rumor and misinformation" and added the expectation that "the two organizations can continue to work together on the same friendly basis as in the past."

When the Four A's board reconvened last Friday Ralph Whitehead, actors' federation head, intimated that unless the chorus jurisdiction problem was settled to his satisfaction his organization would support the IATSE claim. Mr. Whitehead is reputed to be one of the most influential of the Four A officials in the Federation of Labor councils.

No decision on the matter was reached at the eight hour session and the situation remained in doubt this week with a vote to be taken at another meeting this Friday. The position of the Screen Actors' Guild which has the controlling vote in the Four A's was regarded as the most important factor in determining the outcome of the dispute.

Extra Ranks Cut to 9,000

Mr. Thomson this week announced that talent ranks in Hollywood have been reduced from the 23,000 who worked through Central Casting Bureau during the 12 months preceding the signing of the Screen Actors' Guild contract, to 9,000. The guild secretary estimated that reduction of the players' ranks had resulted in an increase in earnings of about 25 per cent a year for guild members. He pointed out that approximately $2,250,000 was paid in salaries to the 23,000 who worked through the bureau formerly, that the guild contract resulted in a 10 per cent wage increase, and that all of the present salary expenditures now goes to the 9,000 guild members exclusively.

The guild's present membership includes 2,000 senior members and approximately 7,000 juniors. There are about 350 members in the New York area.

Managers' Union Negotiates

Demands for recognition and a basic agreement have been submitted to theatres in the New York area and to the Loew and RKO circuits for all their theatres by the Theatrical Managers, Agents and Treasurers Union which last week settled a dispute with legitimate theatres in New York. A deadline for the demands has been set for February 15th and theatres refusing to accept by that time will face a walkout, it was said by Gustave A. Gerber, attorney for the union.

The union is a national group under the American Federation of Labor. It has no locals but maintains territorial branches and field organizations.

Theme Songs Planned

Special theme songs will be written and published in conjunction with the one-reel James FitzPatrick Travel Talk short subjects, which are released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The first song will be "Copenhagen Love Song," which was written by Jack Shilkret and Sam Ward for the film "Copenhagen."

Colombia Taxes Income on Films

Official notification has been filed by the Colombian Government with the American Commercial Attache in Bogota that an income tax on earnings derived from marketing of films by foreign entities of individuals not domiciled in Colombia will be imposed.

The decree states that the taxable income of natural or juridical foreign persons without domicile or legal representation in the country who derive revenue from such films will be determined by deducting 50 per cent as expenses and other legal deductions, from the gross sums of quantities credited or paid to them for any purpose whatsoever by contracting parties engaged in such merchandising pursuit.

The amount of taxes which must be withheld by natural or juridical persons of Colombia will be that which corresponds to the total of such gross sums paid to foreign entities. Deductions will be allowed by the Chief of National Income and Taxes only against receipt of declarations of natural or juridical foreigners as prescribed by law.

Hotel Produces Films

The Waldorf-Astoria Hotel has produced three short subjects to be used in the training of its staffs. Writing, directing and acting were all handled by the hotel staff with Harry R. Martin, superintendent of mechanical operations, in charge. The films are titled: "Restaurant Service in the Waldorf-Astoria," "Uniformed Service in the Waldorf-Astoria" and "Housekeeping in the Waldorf-Astoria." Other hotels are using the films and the uniform subject recently was loaned to Eastern Air Lines.

Souland Forms Company

J. M. Souland has formed Cosmograph Pictures Corporation, Hollywood, and will produce six features. The first will be "The Singing Warrior," written by George Rosener, with the screenplay by Charles P. Higgins and Zelma Carroll. Harry Revier will direct. Other titles include "Daughter of India" and "Maids of the South Seas."

Indo-China Business Off

Although there was some improvement in the economic situation in French Indo-China during 1937, film companies report no increase in their receipts, and business throughout the colony's theatres is poor, according to a report of the U. S. Department of Commerce from American Consul Quincy F. Roberts at Saigon.

Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises Corporation has changed its name to Fox Wisconsin Theatres, Inc., and Fox Wisconsin Agency Corporation has been renamed Fox Wisconsin Amusement Company, both of Milwaukee.

FOURTH QUARTER PROFITS REPORTED BY WARNERS, PARAMOUNT, LOEW'S

Loew's Records $2,917,409 Net for 12 Weeks; Warners $1,685,599; Paramount Sees Profit of $6,030,000 for Year

Profits for the late 1937 quarters were reported this week by four companies, Warner Brothers, Loew's, Inc., Paramount and Columbia Broadcasting.

At the same time Warners announced that its directors have authorized the officers of the corporation to formulate a plan for offering new debentures in exchange for existing debentures and for offering common stock in exchange for part of the preferred stock.

With the Paramount statement for the quarter ended January 1st, 1938, was an announcement giving the estimated consolidated earnings for the year 1937. Highlights of the two Paramount reports were included in an article in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week. The story listed the year's estimated earnings at $6,030,000 and the quarter's earnings at $754,300.

Loew's and subsidiaries reported, for twelve weeks ended Nov. 25, 1937, a net profit of $2,917,409 after depreciation, federal income taxes, and subsidiary preferred dividends, but before surtax on undistributed profits, equal after dividend requirements on $6.50 preferred stock of Loew's, Inc., to $1.69 a share on 1,599,053 no-par common shares.

This compares with $3,457,973 or $2.14 a share on 1,500,000 common shares for the 12 weeks ended November 19, 1936.

Paramount's earnings for the 13 weeks ended January 1st were estimated at $754,000 after all charges, including provision for estimated undistributed profits taxes for the year. This compares with an estimated net profit of $3,700,000 for the corresponding quarter of the previous year. The estimate for the '36 quarter included a special $200,000 credit taken from an inventory set up one year earlier.

In commenting upon the statements of the two companies, Paramount and Loew's, the Wall Street Journal said: "In both cases lower box office receipts were partly responsible, but special influences were also at work." The newspaper also pointed out that the earnings comparison of the two Paramount quarters was distorted in part by the special $200,000 credit and by "Paramount's method of writing off films very rapidly after their completion (about 80 per cent of the cost is charged against earnings in the first three months of the life of each production) took unusually heavy toll in the period covered."

$1,685,599 Net Profit

The Warner statement showed net profit of $1,685,599 after depreciation, amortization of film cost, interest, federal income taxes and minority interest, but before surtax on undistributed profits. The net profit, for 13 weeks ended November 27th, was equivalent, after allowing for dividend requirements on the $3.85 preferred stock (on which unpaid dividends to and including Dec. 1, 1937, amounted to $22.13 a share), to 42 cents a share on 3,701,090 shares of common stock, excluding 100,254 shares held by the company. This compares with $2,047,936 or 52 cents a share on common for the 13 weeks ended November 28, 1936.

WARNERS PLAN NEW DEBENTURES

Paramount's estimated consolidated earnings of $6,030,000 did not include approximately $620,000 representing the company's direct and indirect net interest as a stockholder in the combined undistributed earnings for the year of partially-owned non-consolidated subsidiaries, it was announced. The company estimated combined consolidated earnings and share of undistributed earnings of partially-owned subsidiaries for the year at $6,650,000. These earnings, it was announced, do not include proceeds from settlement of litigation instituted during the period of reorganization, amounting to approximately $1,650,000 which, together with a profit of $150,000 realized upon sale of a parcel of real estate, has been credited to the general reserve account established Jan. 1, 1935. The combined results from operations of $6,650,000 and the non-recurring income of $1,800,000 credited to general reserve aggregated $8,450,000.

$1.96 a Share on Common

On Jan. 1, 1938, there were outstanding 142,172 shares of cumulative convertible $100 par value six per cent first preferred stock, and 555,101 shares of cumulative convertible $10 par value six per cent second preferred stock. After deducting $1,186,092 of dividends accrued for the year on these preferred shares, the remaining $4,843,908 of consolidated earnings for the year represented $1.96 per share on the 2,465,900 of common stock outstanding on January 1st. Computed on the aggregate $6,650,000 of estimated consolidated earnings and share of undistributed earnings of partially-owned subsidiaries, the earnings per common share for the year, calculated on the same basis, would be $2.22.

In each case, the company announced, the earnings per share calculation excludes the non-recurring income of $1,800,000.

The consolidated earnings for the year ended Jan. 2, 1937, amounted to $6,012,000, which included credit of $2,000,000 for application of inventory reserve provided as of Dec. 28, 1935, and Paramount's net interest as a stockholder in the combined undistributed earnings of partially-owned subsidiaries for the year totaled $331,000, a combined total of $6,343,000.

Warners New Plan

Warner Brothers' plan to offer new debentures in exchange for existing debentures and to offer common stock in exchange for part of the preferred stock is not expected to be acted upon before the summer. At that time the company plans to make application to the Securities and Exchange Commission for approval of a refinancing program which will include the outstanding $30,700,000 of optional six per cent convertible debentures and a substantial part of the preferred stock.

The debentures, according to the plan, will be replaced by an issue of new debentures and the holders of the preferred stock will be offered common stock in return for the redemption value of their holdings, plus the accumulated dividend.

Details of the plan will not be made known until shortly before the application is submitted to the SEC, the company said. The debentures were issued in denominations of $500 and $1,000 in 1929 and will mature Sept. 1, 1939. Exchange of the common stock for the preferred will be to meet arrears in dividends on the preferred which totaled $22.13¼ per share on Dec. 1, 1937. There were 103,107 shares of preferred outstanding on Nov. 27, last. On this basis the accumulated preferred dividends amounted to about $2,300,000. The preferred stock has no par value, but a liquidating value of $55 a share and is entitled to cumulative dividends at the rate of $3.85 a share. That portion of the common offered and not taken by the preferred stockholders will be underwritten for a public issue by Hayden Stone & Company.

Loew's Boston Theatres Company reported net income for the year ended August 31st last of $319,267, equal to $2.06 each on 155,249 capital shares, which compares with $176,004, equal to $1.13 per share, in the preceding year.

Columbia Broadcasting Company this week estimated its net earnings for 1937 at approximately $4,297,600, an increase of more than half a million dollars over the previous year's business, which was $3,755,500.

The $4,297,600 figure is equivalent to $2.52 per share of CBS stock. The previous year's earnings were equivalent to $2.20 per share. Per share earnings for both years are calculated upon the 1,707,950 shares of $2.50 par value stock presently outstanding upon the completion of exchange of the old $5 par value stock.

Local Newsreel Plan Passes Test

The local newsreel plan of the Herman A. DeVry Company has now passed the experimental tests, according to Mr. DeVry.

Several test runs have been tried in Illinois cities, the latest of which was at the Morris theatre in Morris, Illinois, with business reported considerably better than average. In the Tivoli theatre in Danville, the Alhambra theatre in Decatur and the Rialto theatre in Champaign, local newsreels make their debut this week, Mr. DeVry said.

Added to the staff of the newsreel division, which is under the supervision of Hugh Elasser, are C. Lupurti, formerly a cameraman with the old Essanay studios; R. E. Christianson, at one time a producer of short subjects; C. B. Blackwell, former industrial film producer, and Charles Filkins, for 16 years with Pathe. These are in charge of production and distribution of the newsreel.

The first 16mm. newsreel made here was for the Stadium theatre in Evanston. The newsreel has since been dropped, according to manager Leo Solomon.

Salesmen's Club Elects Officers

Thomas Duane, of Paramount, was elected president of the Boston Motion Picture Salesmen's Club, succeeding Herman Konnis, of Universal. Thomas Donaldson was chosen vice-president; Henry Rosenblatt, treasurer; Samuel Seletsky, secretary, and Nathan Ross, sergeant-at-arms. Named to the executive board were Mr. Konnis, John Gubbins, Henry Goldman, John Davis, Henry Worden and Maynard Sickles.

Thomas A. Kilfoil has joined Caravel Distributing Corporation, New York, as booking director of its sponsored shorts. Caravel's first 1938 release will be an animated cartoon in color. Mr. Kilfoil was with Paramount in New York for 15 years as head of its service department. Later he was controller of National Screen Service, and more recently was with Pathe Film Corporation.

KORDA PLANS $9,000,000 PROGRAM FOR PRODUCTION AT DENHAM STUDIO

London Films Head Announces 15 Features for Year 1938; Exhibitors Face Serious Problem in Theatre Overbuilding

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

A renaissance of production at Denham Studios was promised by Alexander Korda, chief of London Film Productions, on his return to this country from the United States. According to the London Film chief, 15 productions will be made at an approximate cost of £120,000 ($600,000) each, at Denham during the year ending December, 1938. Some of these, but not all, it is understood, will be made for United Artists' release. It is known that Mr. Korda is negotiating distribution deals with other organizations, but pending final agreements no definite statement has been forthcoming.

Financial backing, Mr. Korda said, has been secured sufficiently to enable the programme in prospect to be launched; further finance, it is understood, will be negotiated to enable it to be completed. The origin of this finance has not yet been divulged.

First on the floor, according to the announcements, will be A. E. W. Mason's "Four Feathers." That will be followed by a film dealing with the Russian Ballet, to be shot in Technicolor. An original story by R. C. Sherriff entitled "The King's Messenger," and dealing with the Flying Service between Southhampton and Hong Kong, is also to be included in the program. The "Lawrence of Arabia" story, the lead for which has not yet been decided, will also be made. An original musical, written by Robert Sherwood, is to take the floor at Denham during 1938 and it is Korda's hope that Irving Berlin will be able to contribute the musical score for this.

Three out of four of these pictures will be made in color.

Redundancy Grave Problem

British exhibitors faced with uncertainty in the production field and from legislative quarters have now another problem to solve in the unrestrained building rush which has marked 1937 and which is still in full swing. Wrapt up as it is, with the whole question of film supply and rental bargaining power, it is likely to prove one of 1938's most complex riddles.

The Government's unwillingness to make any move which would play into the hands of redundancy conscious exhibitors, reflected in their recent refusal to amend the Cinematograph Act, on which all cinema licensing hinges, is likely to aggravate the situation.

Figures now available reveal that during 1937 some 229 new picture houses were built and opened in the British Isles, with another 60 odd reconditioned and rebuilt, achieving a grand total of approximately 290 new houses. About 380,000 seats have been added to the country's total. The Midlands alone, nerve center of Great Britain's heavy industries, added some 65,430 seats to an already overloaded area. Nottingham alone, for instance, a town with a maximum population of 300,000, has now no fewer than 60 picture theatres.

During 1937 exhibitor action in the matter has centered mainly on organizing local opposition to building ventures, whether by circuits, independent or outside interests; and a Redundancy Committee of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, has organized district battles. Local opposition has been consolidated and organized, and objection lodged with local licensing authorities when a provisional license to build has been considered, after the lodging of architect's plans. In many cases this has been successful and thanks to pugnacious exhibitor opposition and skilled legal representation numerous licenses have been refused and turned down.

Late last year a bombshell was thrown into the exhibitor camp by a High Court decision, following a Barnstaple licensing hearing, when a King's Bench judge decided that a licensing body had no powers to grant a license for a cinema until that cinema has been built. Ipso facto it had no right to refuse a license.

Opposition Disarmed

The immediate and judicial effect of this was naturally to tie the hands of both licensees and objectors, meaning as it did, that no opposition could be heard or considered until the cinema was actually a fait accompli. Exhibitor opposition in fact was disarmed.

Subsequent action by the Middlesex Council who had been faced with licensing problems at Harlesden and elsewhere, evoked from the Home Office, Government department responsible for the Cinematograph Act—as apart from the Cinematograph Films Act—the opinion that there was no constitutional objection to a licensing body granting a provisional license, and approving building plans, but that this did not debar them from refusing a license when the cinema was actually built.

As it rests then the situation, an anomalous one, is that the opposition can still be heard when a provisional license is considered but since the hearing has no status in law, it is worthless save as a barometer of local feeling.

Backed by exhibitors whose most powerful weapon has been constitutionally removed from their armoury, the Middlesex County Council is to press for powers to grant or refuse a license on the presentation of plans. Other licensing bodies all over the country will, if they want to or can be persuaded to do so, follow suit, since the Government has told the CEA that it does not intend to amend the 1909 Act on which all cinema licensing is based. Exhibitor contention is logically that the matter, a national one, should be settled by a nationally applicable Government Bill. They are likely to be disappointed.

For the 6,600 odd cinemas which form the British film market, there were some 792 features available in 1937. (The figure is a fluid one of course, since there were not so many picture houses in January and probably no less films). What will be the position during 1938, with a fractional number of British films and fewer from the United States, is the question exhibitors are asking one another. The circuits which have been responsible for the greater part of the overbuilding are consequently taking to themselves greater bargaining power, but even they are obviously going to be faced with problems of supply. A case is on the record of York, where the town's total was originally one large independent house and three owned by circuits. Recently that figure has been swelled by two more circuit theatres, and the independent, in order to maintain his booking ability, has been forced to build another cinema. Exhibitors allege that the renters play on this situation by pitting circuits against independents to put up rentals, which at present stand on an average between 35 and 40 per cent.

Oscar Deutsch, chief of the fast expanding Odeon chain, and one of the industry's most lavish builders claims the right to build in opposition to out of date and old fashioned cinemas, blames the speculative builder for the excesses of the situation and asks renters to withhold product from speculators.

To this independents reply that though at the outset overbuilding was greatly due to local enterprises with local finance, the circuits subsequently bought up most of these houses and then launched forth on a building movement of their own. Now over 50 per cent of the British picture houses are circuit owned or controlled.

Receipts Weak

The seasonable improvement in box office takings, which exhibitors are prone to expect as soon as the Christmas holiday season is over, has not yet manifested itself, according to reports from provincial and suburban centres in Great Britain.

Takings in the last few weeks of the year—always low when Christmas looms on the horizon—were smaller in late 1937 than for many years, and have not yet got back to normal. In view of the fact that 1937, up to that period, had not been a bad year for the exhibitor, trade investigators are seeking a cause.

No cumulative statistics exist of the total box office receipts for all the cinemas of this country for any given period of time. Trade authorities state that the falling off has been much less marked in London than in northerly districts. This suggests that the falling off is the result not so much of small bookings of seats costing 2s.6d (60c) or more, as of the less expensive costing between 3d. (6c) and 1s.3d. (18c).

BRITISH EXHIBITORS, RENTERS CONFER

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

The first steps toward a new effort to settle the conflict between distributors and exhibitors were taken this week at a joint meeting of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association and the Kinematograph Renters Society. Despite the superficial cordiality of relations, however, the atmosphere of the meeting was one of detached skepticism.

The problems of grading and of the double featuring of "A" pictures were the main objects of discussion, and a joint subcommittee of five exhibitors and five renters was appointed to study the situation. D. E. Griffiths, KRS president, claimed the grading system was aimed at stopping lengthy programs, and Charles P. Metcalfe, CEA executive, replied that it had not done so and had merely increased rentals. The exhibitors contend that if grading has merits they should have representation on the classification committee.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

"Church" Films

The Gaumont British studios at Shepherds Bush, scene of the making of some of the British industry's most ambitious films, have now become the production center of films which are currently being shown in churches all over the country.

Pictures costing a few thousands each are made here and shown on a church "circuit" already past the 220 mark. Films are made on a fortnight's shooting schedule.

Walter Hudd, who was to have been the screen Lawrence of Arabia, has been playing with 18-year-old Edana Romney in "The Silence," a story covering the war years.

"There is no religion in it," says Donald Carter, director, "but it is moral, and the Religious Films Society, for which Gaumont-British Instructural is making the picture, have accepted it for showing in churches."

The film was finished in a fortnight at a cost of about £3,000 or £4,000.

On another stage Vernon Sewell has finished one more R. F. S. picture, "What Men Live By," an Anglicized version of a Tolstoy story about a cabinet-maker who found a naked man in the wood and took him home. The visitor proves to be an angel.

Sewell had Esmond Knight, Eliot Makeham and Olga Lindo in the cast, and he filmed it in a week, spending one night on location.

Comic Convict

Will Hay, British vaudeville's schoolmaster comedian, radio star, and one of the local film industry's soundest box office bets, will have a role with great comedy possibilities in the new Gainsborough production "Convict 99."

An original comedy yarn has been concocted by four of Britain's more lively screen writers, Cyril Campion, Ralph Smart, Marriott Edgar (author of "Sam and His Moosket," "Albert and the Lion" and "With Her 'ead Tucked Underneath Her Arm") and Val Guest. The studio declares it to be the best script they have yet handled.

Most of the action unrolls in a prison locale and Hay is seen as a schoolmaster who, finding himself kicked out of the classroom, applies for the post of prison tutor. A spell in a cell, his appointment as prison governor and other complications, result in the schoolmaster installing central heating in the punishment cells, providing facilities for stock exchange flutters for the convicts and being ultimately entoiled by a blonde.

Marcel Varnel will direct and Arthur Crabtree will have charge of the cameras. The film is now under way and it will be released in the spring.

"Oh, Mr. Porter," the Will Hay comedy preceding "Convict 99," has proven a box office hit of more than usual magnitude since its release a fortnight back.

"Halifax" Completed

Finishing touches have just been given to "John Halifax, Gentleman," by its producer, George King. Playing lead in the picture is John Warwick, Australian actor who first starred in an Australian opus "Down on the Farm," which, made at a cost of £7,000 ($35,000), netted £68,000 ($340,000), and Nancy Burne.

A feature of this film is that it will present the artistes at ages ranging from 22 to 60 and, according to studio reports, the make-up staff has done well.

Highlights of the film story, which deals with the boy and girlhood romance of Halifax and Ursula, their marriage, and their triumphs and tragedies, include riot scenes in the village of Norton Bury when the villagers and mill-workers, starving and penniless, find the bank closed, and sequences in which the Lord of the Manor's coach and horses dash down the village street and wreck the invalid chair containing John's crippled friend, Phineas, and when Halifax's blind daughter is trampled to death by horses.

All scenes have been produced on a luxurious scale and the village street set, which included the Lord of the Manor's mansion, stables, shops and a forge, completely occupied one of the larger stages at Sound City.

$10,408,590 INVESTED IN NEW COMPANIES

A total of 311 new companies associated with the British film industry was registered in 1937, according to an annual compilation. Of these, nine were public concerns, with aggregate capital of £649,100 (3,245,500 dollars) and 302 private companies, with aggregate capital of £1,432,618 (7,163,090 dollars). The total investment represented was £2,081,718 (10,408,590 dollars).

Laughton Active

Due to start production at the Elstree Studios of Associated British, is "St. Martin's Lane," the second Mayflower Production, joint effort of producer Erich Pommer and actor Charles Laughton.

Laughton has in this the role of a theatre queue entertainer, a peculiarly local phenomenon in the British entertainment world, and the story—an original by Clemence Dane—is set against an authentically London background. Miss Dane has also done the script.

Directing "St. Martin's Lane" will be Tim Whelan, American director, whose British pictures have scored consistent successes here.

Casting is still in progress as we write.

Fox Confident

Fox British Studios believe that "Who Goes Next," a German prison camp story which Maurice Elvey has been producing, will prove their best to date.

Barry K. Barnes and Sophie Stewart, who were teamed in "The Return of the Scarlet Pimpernel," are starred in this production.

David Evans adapted the screen play from the story by James Wedgewood Drawbell and Reginald Simpson, and Laurence Green was responsible for the additional dialogue. It is a prisoner of war story set in England and Germany during 1916.

The producer was Ivor McLaren whilst Ronald Neame and Reginald Beck were cameraman and editor, respectively.

It is now followed by Alex Bryce's "The Last Barricade" which has taken the floor at the Wembley studios.

Itemized

Jack Buchanan, British film idol now playing on Broadway, has three of his own productions on show in Britain at the moment. "Smash & Grab" has created a West End furore at the New Gallery, London; "The Sky's the Limit" is running in Glasgow; "Sweet Devil" is being shown to the trade with marked success. The last of his four self-made pictures, "Break the News," awaits trade showing.

Professor J. S. Huxley, eminent British scientist, is a director of Strand Film Zoological Productions, a private company just registered here with the object of making films at the London Zoological Gardens.

The company has a monopoly of filming at the Zoo and will embark on a series of documentary shorts.

Latest Gaumont British production to go on the floor at Pinewood Studios is "Crackerjacks," the Tom Walls comedy which is being directed by Albert de Courville.

Playing opposite Walls is Lilli Palmer in a story of "Raffles" character.

"Crackerjacks" will be released by General Films Distributors.

Production has commenced at the Pathe Studios at Welwyn on the Norma Lee farce, "Almost a Honeymoon." Edmund Breon is featured.

Norton Plans Six

Captain Richard Norton, former head of the Pinewood Studios, has become associated with the new production company, Pinebrook, Ltd., which is planning to produce six pictures at Pinewood. The films will be budgeted at £20,000 each and will be released through C. M. Woolf's General Film Distributors.

In Italy

The British producing company, Two Cities Films, has started production at Tirrenia, Italy, on the English version of the Italian film, "Tredici Uomani e un Cannon." It is the first of seven features planned for production by the company.

Mario Zampi, Italian who worked in London for several years and who also was employed by Warner Brothers, is directing the picture which is being produced in collaboration with an Italian producer.

POOLS CUT GROSSES

the Automaticket is going nowadays into the weekend football pool, Britain's weekend gamble on which it is estimated some £60,000,000 ($300,000,000) a year is spent by working class and lower middle class families.

Investments in this are low, but its hold is almost universal. Stakes vary between a penny (2c) a time and sixpence (12c), but there are few plebeian families who do not have their weekly gamble.

Exhibitors have frequently voiced the opinion that working class patrons, who have only sixpence or a shilling to spend each week as "pocket money," faced with a choice between an actual cinema show and a potential fortune, often choose the latter.

An unsympathetic view is taken, then, of the formation recently of a football pool organization with offices in Wardour Street, backed by certain film trade personalities, and which, it is considered, is helping to draw money from the box office instead of into it.

The larger circuits, Associated British and Gaumont-British, however, would appear to have little to complain of financially, as the following table of stock and share rises and falls will show.

Sunday Show Move Defeated

A move toward general legislation permitting Sunday motion picture shows, made in the House of Lords on Tuesday by Lord Kilmaine and Lord Strabolgi, was defeated by a vote of 30 to 20. Lord Kilmaine moved the Government should take action to legalize Sunday cinemas throughout the country subject to local approval during the six winter months. He claimed Sunday recreation was needed by the working classes and cited the plight of country folk who had nowhere to go evenings. Lord Strabolgi moved an amendment to extend the plan to the entire year.

Quota Committee Reconvenes

The House of Commons committee conducting hearings on the new Films Act reconvened this week with the hope of concluding its deliberations before the end of February. A decision was expected immediately on the controversial alternative quota plan suggested by Oliver Stanley, president of the Board of Trade. The proposal was believed virtually dead as a result of the coolness of the trade toward it and the strongly voiced opposition from many quarters.

Awaiting approval by the Commons committee were clauses determining the labor costs of films produced, specifying the legal commitments of distributors, defining the terminology of the act, and the like.

It was understood that the Board of Trade expressed a willingness to consider representations made as a result of the present film shortage and the inability of distributors to meet their present quota requirements. It was suggested the difficulty might be met if the quota was reckoned for 12 months instead of six months of the first year of the act as stipulated.

New Exhibitor Group Planned

Hector McCullie, member of the general council of the London Branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, resigned this week and was reported to be planning a new independent exhibitor organization. His resignation followed the annual meeting of the London Branch and the appointment of Arthur Moss, general manager of Associated British Cinemas, as vice-chairman. Mr. McCullie was said to have the support of a group in the association which has expressed discontent with the alleged increase of control of the CEA by circuits.

Music Hall Books 3 Warner Films

The world premieres of three of Warner Brothers productions of 1938—"Jezebel," "The Adventures of Robin Hood" and "Fools for Scandal"—will take place at the Radio City Music Hall, following the completion of negotiations on Tuesday between Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager for Warners, and W. G. Van Schmus, managing director of the Music Hall.

"Jezebel," starring Bette Davis with Henry Fonda, George Brent and Margaret Lindsay, will open at the Music Hall in March. The premiere of "The Adventures of Robin Hood," with Errol Flynn starred, supported by Olivia de Havilland, Ian Hunter, Claude Rains and Basil Rathbone, is scheduled for April. "Fools for Scandal," the Mervyn LeRoy production in which Carole Lombard and Fernand Gravet are costarred, will have its first showing during May.

"This deal was commenced in California as a direct result of Mr. Van Schmus's visit to the studio several weeks ago, and from his looking at the pictures while they were still in the making," said Mr. Sears. "There is an increasing tendency on the part of important exhibitors to buy product on the Coast, at the fountain-head of production."

Will Rogers Week To Start April 29th

The week beginning Friday, April 29th, has been selected by Major L. E. Thompson, chairman, for the annual Will Rogers National Theatre Week. Arrangements are being made for the fund-raising campaign in which all theatres in the country will be asked to participate.

A protest against including $23,379 raised in Oklahoma for the Will Rogers Memorial in grants to the University of Oklahoma and Bacone College at Muskogee, Okla., has been sent to the national commission by the Oklahoma Will Rogers Memorial Commission. Governor E. W. Marland and General Roy Hoffman, chairman of the state commission, sent the protest to Owen D. Young, New York, chairman of the national committee.

Claremore, Okla., business men are contemplating asking Postmaster General James A. Farley to authorize a Will Rogers commemorative postage stamp, to be issued on November 4, 1938, which is the birthday of the famous humorist and the day on which the new memorial to Rogers now being built near Claremore will be dedicated.

To Open Charlotte House

The Visualite theatre, Charlotte, N. C., will be formally opened the week of February 6th by A. B. Craver, owner and manager. The new house will seat 500. It is the city's first suburban motion picture theatre. Mr. Craver has managed theatres in Norfolk, Va., for the last six years.

Record grosses are being established in foreign countries where the Universal picture, "100 Men and a Girl," is being shown, the company announced this week. Among the countries cited by Universal were Japan, France and South America.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AWFUL TRUTH, THE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant —When we get a show like this, it makes us think Columbia is holding back. Why are they so darn stingy with productions like "The Awful Truth?" This is positively the hit picture of them all for a good many months. The laughs came so frequently and lasted so long that a lot of the dialogue was missed. The ending is about the last word in cleverness. Really much better than "Theodora Goes Wild." —L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

AWFUL TRUTH, THE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant —Again another hit from Columbia. It is every bit as good as all their advertising said it was. Business good (who said there was a business recession). Dunne and Grant do a swell job of acting and they have a good supporting cast. Had to fix many seats as folks laughed so much they pushed them loose from the floor. Opposition played "Ali Baba Goes to Town" and we had all the business. Running time, 92 minutes. Played January 16.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN HOLLYWOOD: Richard Dix, Fay Wray—Well, it's just too bad that one of our favorite actors should be cast in a picture like this. My nomination for the poorest of this year to date. Played January 18.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS WITH LOVE: Jean Parker, Douglass Montgomery—At least, this gives us one more glimpse at the talented Jean Parker. She is well liked and deserving of better casting than is afforded by this mild comedy. Played December 21.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

OUTLAWS OF THE PRAIRIE: Charles Starrett—O. K. western with music by the "Sons of the Pioneers." Played January 19.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

THUNDER IN THE CITY: Edward G. Robinson—Very good. On account of a local industrial slump, we did not do normal business. No fault of picture.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TWO GUN LAW: Charles Starrett, Peggy Stratford—Not bad; could be worse. I understand Columbia is giving a better line of later westerns.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WHAT PRICE INNOCENCE?: Willard Mack, Minna Gombell, Jean Parker—We have received many letters about this picture after seeing our previous article in The Herald of our success. We are glad to know that the outcome of our success was brought to Columbia's notice and they have reissued this picture. We want you exhibitors to know that through the helpful suggestion of Mr. Harry Haeneck, who gave us the idea, we were able to do business on a par with "San Francisco," "Maytime" and Shirley Temple. Give it the works; it is a natural.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

First National

BACK IN CIRCULATION: Pat O'Brien, Joan Blondell—Good program picture. Pat O'Brien was miscast in this one. Running time 82 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

EMPTY HOLSTERS: Dick Foran, Patricia Walthall —Warner seems to be pushing Dick right out in front. Pleased all who saw it. The people are looking forward to Dick quite often. This one is his best to date. Will stand alone on any program if you build it up with a good background of good shorts. Running time, 62 minutes. Played January 7-8.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

LOVE IS ON THE AIR: Ronald Reagan, June Travis—This is just another picture. Haven't run any double features yet and far be it for me to advise anyone to start it, but would suggest you find extra reels of shorts to go with this and try to make people think they have gotten their money's worth.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre S. D. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box-office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

PERFECT SPECIMEN, THE: Errol Flynn, Joan Blondell—Just a natural, thoroughly good clean comedy. Was enjoyed by all. Play it anytime. It's really a good picture. Hugh Herbert is plenty funny and so is May Robson. Running time, 97 minutes. Played January 23-24.—Miss Ouida Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

PERFECT SPECIMEN, THE: Errol Flynn, Joan Blondell—This is a great comedy. Everyone enjoyed it and they still talk about it. Wish more had seen it, though. Played December 16-17.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PERFECT SPECIMEN, THE: Errol Flynn, Joan Blondell—Very fine picture that did well at the box office. Joan Blondell's acting was great in this one. Running time, 97 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SH! THE OCTOPUS: Hugh Herbert, Allen Jenkins —A good comedy mystery that pleased and it drew fairly well also. Scared the life out of the kids, but you couldn't pry them out of their seats until the end. Give it to them on a weekend and they'll like it. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 14-15. —A. E. Eliasen Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

THAT CERTAIN WOMAN: Bette Davis, Henry Fonda—Nothing wrong with this. I believe the men enjoyed it more than the women. Adverse criticism in papers and magazines made me a little afraid to book this, but it went over fine and heard no kicks. Running time, 93 minutes. Played January 12-13.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

WEST OF SHANGHAI: Boris Karloff, Beverly Roberts—Highly amusing dialogue makes this interesting. Poor draw. Karloff fine. Played December 14.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BIG CITY: Spencer Tracy, Luise Rainer—One swell picture and the patrons really got a kick out of the old timers fighting the taxi drivers. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 1.—B. A. McConnell Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

BIG CITY: Spencer Tracy, Luise Rainer—Good programer. Not big enough for extended runs, but will please anywhere. Running time, 80 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

BRIDE WORE RED, THE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone, Robert Young—Bad weather held business down on this picture. Joan Crawford is still a great favorite here and this picture didn't hurt her any, as some of the reviewers would have you believe. Really I think she played a great role. Running time, 103 minutes. Played January 16-18.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

BRIDE WORE RED, THE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone—Disappointing gross. Story only fair. Played December 12-13.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1938: Eleanor Powell, Robert Taylor—I regret to advise that this good musical took me nowheres. Up to show-time, I went about with a big smile in anticipation of some good support. However, when the folks were in I found that my closing numbers were not much larger than my opening ones and my smile dwindled, and then dwindled some more. It was with an effort that I bade my few customers "Goodnight."—Nino Sunseri, Naselle Theatre, Naselle, Wash. Backwoods patronage.

DOUBLE WEDDING: William Powell, Myrna Loy —An hilarious comedy that should satisfy. Draw not as good as we'd hoped for. Played December 19-20.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FAMILY AFFAIR, A: Lionel Barrymore, Cecilia Parker—Here is a picture that will satisfy all from 6 to 60. We did very well with it. Running time, 70 minutes.—J. M. Nass, Fort Theatre, Poplar, Mont. Indian and rural patronage.

FIREFLY, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Allan Jones —A glorious production but of the type that means little to our patronage. It should entertain anyone, however, if only you could get 'em in. Played December 26-27.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GOOD EARTH, THE: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—All reports from small exhibitors to the contrary, I am very pleased to state that this picture is a knockout and made the folks lay their money on the line. My little projectors and I certainly groaned while clicking off the miles of film (I operate my own machinery). But who cares so long as every bench is filled (I don't have chairs) and even the reserve apple boxes are brought out in a desperate effort to seat all customers. Everyone obviously enjoyed this grand entertainment. A few more pictures like this and I will advance to commercial exhibitor instead of just playing around with pictures as a hobby outside of my regular work.—Nino Sunseri Naselle Theatre, Naselle, Wash. Backwoods patronage.

LAST GANGSTER, THE: Edward G. Robinson—A superb picture that is wasted on small town audiences. Where MGM gets their allocations on this year's contract is beyond all comprehension. We have had one picture and one only on this season's contract that warranted the allocation, "Navy Blue and Gold." This company's product is too high-brow for our small town and we can see in the future with "Marie Antoinette" coming that the product is all wrong for small town audiences. This is a good picture that again did no business for us. Running time, 90 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

LIVE, LOVE AND LEARN: Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell—Just fair. Story pretty wafery. Nothing special at our box office even with the support of a holiday and a five act vaudeville show. And we even threw in "Beau Hunks," the Laurel-Hardy reissue, for good measure. Incidentally, the latter is still swell fun. Played December 25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MAN OF THE PEOPLE: Joseph Calleia, Florence Rice—Good program picture, many told us that it was a big little picture. We ran it Wednesday and Thursday with a basketball game in opposition and we did our share at the box office. Played January 12. Running time, 81 minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

MY DEAR MISS ALDRICH: Edna May Oliver, Maureen O'Sullivan, Walter Pidgeon—Plenty good for any situation. Well enjoyed by everyone and Maureen O'Sullivan extra good in this. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 13.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

NAVY BLUE AND GOLD: Robert Young, James Stewart, Florence Rice, Tom Brown—I felt just like Tom Brown did. The happiest moment of my life was to look at the crowd I got on this picture. I must say very, very good. Just a natural for anytime. Give it your best playing time. Florence Rice is very lovely to look at and so was James Stewart. Running time, 94 minutes. Played January 20-21.—Miss Ouida Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

ROSALIE: Nelson Eddy, Eleanor Powell, Ray Bolger—Some good numbers and, as a whole, entertaining. Lavishly produced. Powell a swell dancer and Eddy can Sing the best in their class, but the picture might have been better with two other leads. Ray Bolger did not have enough part. Played January 13-14.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SARATOGA: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—A class "A" production in bracket allocation that is also class "A" at the box office. This picture pleased everyone except a very few who were overly sensitive about seeing departed stars as if in life. It is suggested that advertising be handled with dignity and restraint so as to cause offense to no one. P. S. Don't forget to dust off a number of extra seats, since this picture will play to capacity crowds in almost any situation.—Nino Sunseri, Naselle Theatre, Naselle, Wash. Backwoods patronage.

YOU'RE ONLY YOUNG ONCE: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney—A real honest-to-goodness picture that you can be proud to show. Simple everyday story with Mickey Rooney showing himself at his best. Running time, 77 minutes. Played January 7-8.—Peter Panagos, Sipe Theatre, Kokomo Ind. General patronage.

YOU'RE ONLY YOUNG ONCE: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney—Excellent for any spot on earth. Good audience appeal; excellent cast; everyone pleased. Running time, 77 minutes. Played January 17.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

WOMEN MEN MARRY, THE: George Murphy, Josephine Hutchinson—Good programer. Got by nicely and pleased. Running time, 61 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

Paramount

ANGEL: Marlene Dietrich, Herbert Marshall Melvyn Douglas—Nothing much to it, of course, it's not so bad. I never do anything on Dietrich pictures.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

BARRIER, THE: Leo Carrillo, Jean Parker—I made the mistake of using on a Sunday change. Fine picture, better suited to a mid-week or Saturday change. The draw was several notches below average. I do think it would have drawn a big Saturday business.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

BARRIER THE: Leo Carrillo, Jean Parker, James Ellison—Very beautiful scenes, story weak, and no box office names. Poor business. Running time, 93 minutes. Played January 18-19.—Miss Ouida Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND COMES BACK: John Barrymore, Reginald Denny, Louise Campbell—No good for me. Lost money and had many complaints.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND COMES BACK: John Barrymore, Louise Campbell—Only fair. Running time 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

EVERY DAY'S A HOLIDAY: Mae West—About the best West picture to date, and business was above average. Was afraid the radio broadcast would hurt this, but it did not.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

EXCLUSIVE: Fred MacMurray, Frances Farmer, Charlie Ruggles—O. K. newspaper story. Charlie Ruggles furnishes the comedy.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HIGH WIDE AND HANDSOME: Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott—This turned out only to be a good program picture. It was not the type of picture for Irene Dunne.—Running time 94 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM NAVY: Lew Ayres, Mary Carlisle—A good bit of light entertainment. Played December 23-24.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HOPALONG RIDES AGAIN: William Boyd, George Hayes, Lois Wilde—Fine western. My first "Cassidy." Business pretty good considering first. In this they shoot, and what's more, they hit!—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

I MET HIM IN PARIS: Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas, Robert Young—A smart, sophisticated comedy with nary a dull moment. The kind of picture it is a pleasure to show. Clean, wholesome fun for the entire family. Claudette, Melvyn Douglas and Robert Young play their parts to perfection, with Douglas getting the shade the better of it. The winter scenes alone are worth the price of admission, and for those who enjoy winter sports, there is skiing, ice-skating and tobogganing. Thanks, Paramount for an excellent piece of work. Running time, 85 minutes. Played January 22.— J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

SHE ASKED FOR IT: William Gargan—Only fair. Many of Paramount's small pictures are not so good.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

TEXAS TRAIL: William Boyd—These Hopalongs are usually tops, but this one missed fire somehow and does not come up to the high standard set in these series. About the poorest of the entire group.—L. V. Bergold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

TEXAS TRAIL: William Boyd—Good. A little draggy in places. Running time, 57 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

TEXAS TRAIL: William Boyd—Again Boyd scores a hit with his Hopalong Cassidy Series. None better made than this series by Paramount. Photography and sound along with the story makes this an outstanding western. Running time, 65 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

THIS WAY PLEASE: Charles "Buddy" Rogers, Betty Grable, Ned Sparks—Here's a "sleeper" for a small town! Look out for it because with the proper advertising it will do an extraordinarily good business. Just a little better than program grade but the screen and radio stars in it have drawing power. Double-billed with a Western for three days, it is my best grosser for January. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 13-15.—William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

THIS WAY PLEASE: Charles "Buddy" Robers, Betty Grable, Ned Sparks—Better than I thought it was going to be from some of the reports. The musical numbers were far below par, but all in all it was a pretty fair entertainment. The imitator who comes on near the end was worth the price of the ticket.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

THIS WAY PLEASE: Charles "Buddy" Rogers, Betty Grable Ned Sparks—Very good program picture. Radio stars Mary Livingston, McGee and Molly are fine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

THIS WAY PLEASE: Charles "Buddy" Rogers, Betty Grable—A very good musical. This drew better than a good many of those so-called specials. Running time, 73 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

THUNDER TRAIL: Gilbert Roland, Marsha Hunt—Very good Zane Grey western. Running time, 57 minutes.—P. G. Held Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

WELLS FARGO: Joel McCrea, Bob Burns, Frances Dee—Grand box office everywhere, extended runs and pleased all. Running time, 112 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

Republic

AFFAIRS OF CAPPY RICKS, THE: Walter Brennan Mary Brian—This might be all right for a double feature and only advertise the other one, and then not show "Cappy Ricks." The first picture in many days that I have had walkouts on. Running time, 56 minutes. Played January 7.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

GIT ALONG LITTLE DOGIES: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Judith Allen—This was a good entertainment, but really just another western with music. They are hard to classify as good, better, best, but would rank this as "good" and "The Big Show" as "best." Gene Autry seems tops for Western stars here.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

JOIN THE MARINES: Paul Kelly, June Travis, Reginald Denny—Fine little program picture. Played on Bargain Night; business only fair.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MICHAEL O'HALLORAN: Wynne Gibson, Warren Hull—A swell picture, will stand alone for the most critical patrons. Many favorable comments. Running time, 69 minutes. Played January 9-11.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

RED RIVER VALLEY: Gene Autry, Frances Grant—Still consider this one of Autry's best, and the increase in business was very noticeable. This is the second time we have played this one, and if you can get a good print, be sure to pick it up.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNAPOLIS SALUTE: James Ellison, Marsha Hunt—About the best program picture RKO has turned out so far this season. I used as the top half on a double bill and this saved the day as I used a very poor western for the other end.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

BREAKFAST FOR TWO: Barbara Stanwyck, Herbert Marshall—An amusing picture. Only fair draw. Played December 18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DAMSEL IN DISTRESS, A: Fred Astaire, Burns and Allen—Poor Gracie Allen. She must be round shouldered from carrying this load on her shoulders and she did a good job of it, too. This is by far the poorest picture that Astaire has ever made. That Fontaine girl is a washout right and RKO had better shelve her if they expect to produce as good as they have in the past. No draw here. Will not make the guarantee. Running time, 100 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier Ind. Small town patronage.

DAMSEL IN DISTRESS: Fred Astaire, Joan Fontaine—Good program picture but nothing special about it. That little lady, Ginger Rogers, was lacking. Running time, 98 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FIT FOR A KING: Joe E. Brown, Helen Mack, Paul Kelly—Joe Brown is popular with those who like him and equally unpopular with others, so his pictures require extra attention in advertising. Catch his type of patron for the first show and they will build him up. Thus for my week his picture should open on Friday night and the high school crowd eat it up. Gave a free show to the high school seniors on this and they led the laughter.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

FORTY NAUGHTY GIRLS: James Gleason, Zasu

Pitts—A murder mystery back stage during a show. Pleased everyone. Many said that Zasu Pitts stole the show from Gleason. Personally I thought it just another show we have to run. Running time, 63 minutes. Played January 14.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

HIGH FLYERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is about the weakest of their pictures. Only fair at the box office. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HITTING A NEW HIGH: Lily Pons—Only fair. Terrible at the box office. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MAKE A WISH: Bobby Breen, Basil Rathbone—The picture lacks something and has too much of something else. Short on real belly laughs, thrills and story interest, and long on music and kid stuff. Generally speaking, I would say the picture is a little "too sweet." Didn't go over here more than 50 per cent. To me a big disappointment.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

MAKE A WISH: Bobby Breen, Basil Rathbone—Bobby Breen will have trouble making another picture as fine as "Rainbow on the River" but this picture pleased and did good business for me, and I think Bobby is in the money now.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MUSIC FOR MADAME: Nino Martini, Joan Fontaine—This was certainly for no one else. Business wasn't as good as I expected it to be but then I didn't expect it to be. Guess some highbrow pictures are needed to make us appreciate the entertaining one.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

RIDING ON AIR: Joe E. Brown Florence Rice—This was played as a substitute for "Breakfast for Two" and what a happy substitution. The picture went over fine to away above the usual midweek business. Joe E. Brown is certainly "tops" here.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

STAGE DOOR: Katharine Hepburn, Ginger Rogers, Adolphe Menjou—A good picture that was ruined at the box office here by a bad print. Business first night, very good. Very poor business the two following nights. Running time, 90 minutes. Played January 23-25.—William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

STAGE DOOR: Katharine Hepburn, Ginger Rogers, Adolphe Menjou—This was really a big picture. Had cast story, direction and heart interest. Katharine may create a motion picture following if she makes a couple more like this. She fitted into "Little Women" and has been disappointing us all ever since. "Stage Door" best since her first, and public reaction good.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

WISE GIRL: Miriam Hopkins, Ray Milland—Good program picture that drew quite well at the box office. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

ALI BABA GOES TO TOWN: Eddie Cantor, June Lang, Tony Martin—No extra draw, in fact below average at the ticket office. Opinions divided and a few walk-outs. This dream stuff doesn't make the best in the stories. This started out fine and was well received until the dream part got underway. Parts of the picture are great, but there are weaknesses to offset and the worst part of all is the extremely weak ending.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Gloria Stuart, Michael Whalen—Fairly entertaining. Delmar Watson, a juvenile actor, steals the picture. One of those stories that seem tbout to end every minute and with a little padding and a new situation continue to feature length. Will do all right on a double bill. Running time, 66 minutes. Played January 16-18.—William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT MONTE CARLO: Warner Oland, Keye Luke—Not the best "Charlie Chan" and not the poorest. Good entertainment for the followers of this series. Action somewhat slower than usual, but this is compensated for by an abundance of comedy. My patrons thought Harold Huber, as prefect of police at Monte Carlo, especially good. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 16-18.—William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE OLYMPICS: Warner Oland—Played on Giveaway Night and went over fine. Good picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN ON BROADWAY: Warner Oland, Joan Marsh—My first "Chan" in the new theatre and it went over quite well. Do not think this is quite as good as some of the others, but still plenty good. His "screen" son is getting to be more and more of a fun provoker.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

CITY GIRL: Phyllis Brooks, Ricardo Cortez—Good program picture.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

This is my first communication with this department but I hope the information I give will be of some use to exhibitors who follow this column.

We are a small theatre out here on an Indian reservation with 60 per cent Indian patronage and the rest rural and a few local whites.—J. M. NASS, Fort Theatre, Poplar, Mont.

45 FATHERS: Jane Withers—An intriguing title and an entertaining picture. An ideal selection for a holiday crowd of family trade. Business very good. Running time, 71 minutes. Played January 1.—William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

45 FATHERS: Jane Withers—Be sure and book this one; give it extended playing time because it will build itself up. It's a scream.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST (RE-ISSUE): Will Rogers, Anita Louise—Played Christmas Night to the biggest Saturday night since we opened the theatre about four months ago. Not as good as some of the Will Rogers, but still grand entertainment.—L. V. Bergtold. Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

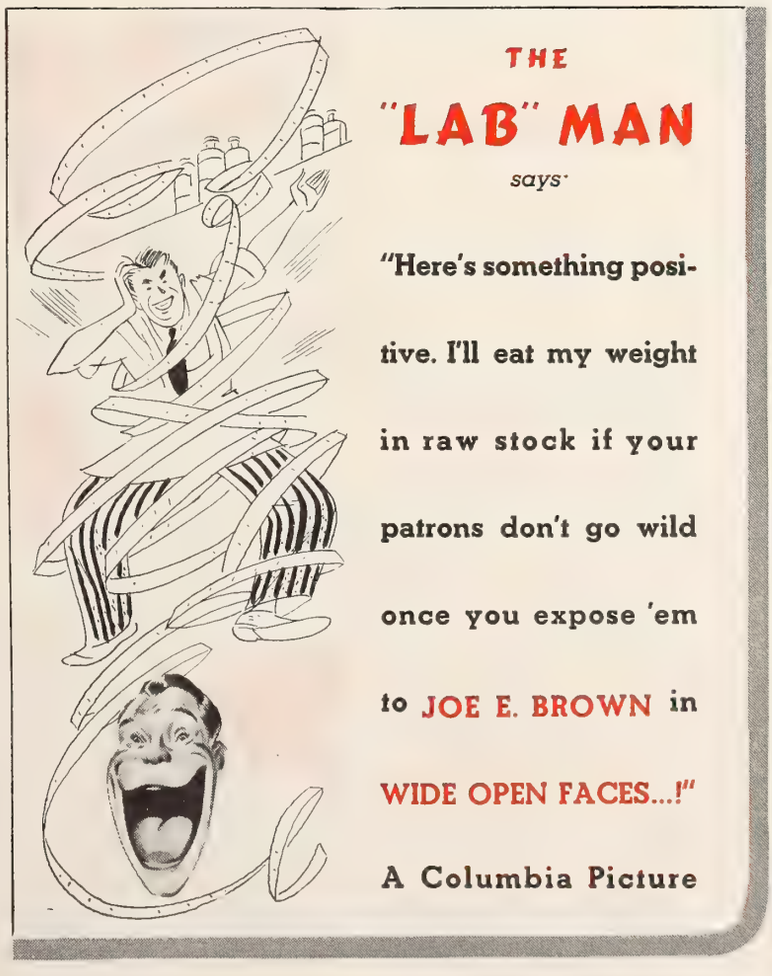
LOVE AND HISSES: Walter Winchell, Ben Bernie, Simone Simon, Joan Davis—Good picture, but nothing to compare with "Wake Up and Live." Our patrons were very much bored with Simone's singing. Personally considered it good, but the customers were loud in their disapproval. Again, the Negro element drew criticism here, and the Peters Sisters specialty could be left out to advantage. Played January 17-18.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE AND HISSES: Walter Winchell, Ben Bernie, Simone Simon, Joan Davis—Below par as far as Fox musicals are concerned and it reflected at the box office. Simone Simon is no Alice Faye and the sooner she gets the type of role she had in "Girls' Dormitory," the better chance she'll have of surviving in Hollywood. Running time 84 minutes. Played January 5-9.—Peter Panagos, Sipe Theatre, Kokomo, Ind. General patronage.

LOVE AND HISSES: Walter Winchell, Ben Bernie, Simone Simon, Joan Davis—Not as good as "Wake Up and Live," but will entertain the customers. I don't like to pan any star, we are all just trying to make a living, but Simone Simon will have to do more than look cute and sing to get by with the boys and gals in these small Missouri towns. Ruth Terry puts over the best song. Played January 20-21.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SECOND HONEYMOON: Loretta Young, Tyrone Power—Very entertaining light comedy. Marjorie Weaver looks promising. Pleased the customers. Played January 16-17.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SECOND HONEYMOON: Loretta Young, Tyrone Power—Just an ordinary story that stepped out of the run-of-mine class of pictures as a result of splendid direction and superb acting. Business better than average. Running time, 79 minutes. Played January 9-11.—William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.



WEE WILLIE WINKIE: Shirley Temple, Victor McLaglen—I used this after "Heidi," but even though I played it on a three day run starting on Sunday, it did only half as much as "Heidi," which I used two nights midweek. The story is not really suited to Miss Temple and personally think it about the least entertaining of anything she has appeared in. At that, it is quite a show as compared to the rank and file of ordinary pictures.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

United Artists

DARK JOURNEY: Conrad Veidt, Vivien Leigh—Rather slow spy story that failed to satisfy many of those present. Naturally, no drawing power as expected. Played December 18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DEAD END: Sylvia Sidney, Joel McCrea—This was a class show, wonderful portrayal of the slum life of New York City and played by an unknown group of boys. It appealed to everyone I could get to come and see it. I would say it was the type of show to work on Parent-Teachers or Women's Clubs or other such tieups, as they will be proud of it after seeing and thus build up goodwill and prestige. The public seems to require cast before they come in sufficient numbers to make a two day picture profitable.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LOVE FROM A STRANGER: Ann Harding, Basil Rathbone—I like Ann Harding and ran this picture against the family advice. Being afraid of it, I screened it before dating it. It was satisfactory and I sold it as a horror picture—don't come alone. In fact advertised "only three unescorted women will be sold admission to this as the management knows you will want someone to see you home safely and we have only two ushers." Novel idea helped create talk and made a nice profit from the picture. Once every six months is often enuf for this type of so-called entertainment.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

NOTHING SACRED: Carole Lombard, Fredric March—Swell picture with the same type of theme that seems to be clicking. "Topper" did it, and now this scores, although they do get realistic in getting a real "sock" in the picture. Running time, 74 minutes. Played January 9-11.—Peter Panagos, Sipe Theatre, Kokomo, Ind. General patronage.

PRISONER OF ZENDA, THE: Ronald Colman, Madeleine Carroll, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—The boys who have lined up with United Artists this season will go places, and "The Prisoner of Zenda" is one of the pictures that reduces the size of the ticket rolls plenty fast. Inasmuch as this class "A" production received excellent support in my situation (the smallest in the state), it is reasonable to suppose that it will do away above average business in any situation. —Nino Sunseri, Naselle Theatre, Naselle, Wash. Backwoods patronage.

PRISONER OF ZENDA, THE: Ronald Colman, Madeleine Carroll, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—This was swell entertainment. I did better than I expected, as I know that the public is against the costume form of entertainment. Think this is caused through the fact that most of our English made pictures to be forced down their throats during the last two years have been more or less costume stuff and thus they fear costume pictures, because they sure dislike the English pictures and mentally associate the two together. "Prisoner" was very entertaining.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SANDERS OF THE RIVER: Paul Robeson, Leslie Banks, Nina Mae McKinney—Traded a new one for this and got the best of the deal, although "Sanders" didn't go over any too well.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

STELLA DALLAS: Barbara Stanwyck, John Boles, Anne Shirley—This was a very fine picture and did a better business than this type of heavy story usually draws. It pleased and seemed very well produced, with credit to the director for presenting the dramatic story so that you really enjoyed it.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre S. D. General patronage.

WALT DISNEY'S ACADEMY AWARD REVUE: Five Award Winners—This was swell entertainment. I had run all of the five cartoons but took this in three times during its run at my theatre. The five best of Walt Disney's fine color Silly Symphony entertainment. I made a liar out of myself by promising them Mickey Mouse. He isn't in them. The five shown are "Flowers and Trees," 1932 winner; "Three Little Pigs"; "Tortoise and the Hare"; "The Country Cousin" and "Three Orphan Kittens."—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

WALTER WANGER'S VOGUES OF 1938: Warner Baxter, Joan Bennett—A beautiful show and the ladies fell for the style show. National Screen trailer on this was good and worth extra money. Believe it would pay anyone to use this trailer even if you don't use them regularly.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

WOMAN CHASES MAN: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—This is about the craziest comedy I have ever seen. Did good business and pleased everyone, which after all is the most important. Running time, 79 minutes. Played January 14.—R. W. Crickmore Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

Universal

LAW FOR TOMBSTONE: Buck Jones, Muriel Evans—One of the best Buck Jones that we have played. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PRESCRIPTION FOR ROMANCE: Wendy Barrie, Kent Taylor, Mischa Auer—A dandy little program picture with a few laughs and fairly interesting story. Ran with the Universal Special on Panay bombing and enjoyed a little above average business. Bombing pictures were very weak and received a great many comments of the same nature from patrons. Running time, 66 minutes.—J. M. Nass, Fort Theatre, Poplar Mont. Indiana and rural patronage.

WEST BOUND LIMITED: Lyle Talbot, Polly Rowles—Fine program picture. Very good for Friday and Saturday. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FOUR CONTRIBUTORS ADD THEIR REPORTS

In the columns of "What the Picture Did for Me" appears this week a number of reports from J. M. Nass, operating the Fort theatre, Poplar, Montana, and playing to a patronage comprised largely of Indians.

Reporting again after long absences are three showmen whose comment on pictures is wellknown to readers of the department both for their intelligent analysis of product in terms of receipts and for their straight-from-the-shoulder style of writing. They are:

J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo.

Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio.

Read the reports of these exhibitors in this week's issue.

WESTLAND CASE, THE: Preston Foster, Carol Hughes—This is a good detective yarn. Played December 22.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook N. H. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

FLY-AWAY BABY: Glenda Farrell, Barton MacLane—This was generally liked. The air scenes are good. Fair at box office, draw not due to feature entirely, however. In fact, several said they would sure have passed it up on its own. Yet after seeing it they were agreed it was okay. Played December 15.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GO GETTER, THE: George Brent, Anita Louise, Charles Winninger—Everyone who saw this raved about it said it should be called the surprise picture of the year. Winninger good for plenty of laughs and Brent and Louise are at their best. Running time, 92 minutes.—J. M. Nass, Fort Theatre, Poplar, Mont. Indiana and rural patronage.

GREEN LIGHT: Errol Flynn, Anita Louise, Margaret Lindsay—We picked this up rather late when liquidating our contract. It's a classic that everyone enjoyed. Play it. It may not sell out, but will make customers.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

LOVE IS ON THE AIR: Ronald Reagan, June Travis—Pretty good program picture. Running time 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SLIM: Pat O'Brien, Henry Fonda—Old picture to exceptionally fine midweek business. I remarked before we opened the ticket office last Wednesday that I felt business would be plenty slim on "Slim." The pay-off showed I made a bad guess, as business was about 40 per cent above normal. Show is also at least 40 per cent above average.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

SLIM: Pat O'Brien, Henry Fonda—The most downright human picture we have run in a long time. It has all round drawing power. Fonda is at his best in this. Running time, 80 minutes.—J. M. Nass, Fort Theatre, Poplar, Mont. Indiana and rural patronage.

TOVARICH: Caludette Colbert, Charles Boyer—Another top that was a flop, here, anyway. We thought we had something here and said so, but no dice. Boyer is a wonderful actor, but darn hard to understand. Colbert gave her usual fine performance. I believe my patrons had to listen so carefully to the fast conversation and try so hard to understand what Boyer was saying that what humor there was failed to thaw them and, in addition to this, they had to look at a print that looked as though it had gone through a sanding machine. There's no doubt that "Tovarich" will go over big in the larger cities, but I'm glad it's over here. Running time, 98 minutes. Played January 16-18.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

VARSITY SHOW: Dick Powell, Fred Waring Rosemary Lane, Priscilla Lane—This is nothing to write home about; you won't need to sneak away when they come out, but this same producer has made much better ones, which causes the public to feel let down on this.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

VARSITY SHOW: Dick Powell, Fred Waring, Rosemary Lane, Priscilla Lane—One of the best musicals of the season. Running time, 121 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

IT MAY HAPPEN TO YOU: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—This is, as usual, good stuff.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

JIMMY FIDLER'S PERSONALITY PARADE: Special—You should play this by all means. It's class and your older patrons will get a great deal of enjoyment seeing the stars of yesteryear. You can't help but shed a tear at the fading as lovable Jean Harlow is told farewell. Running time, 19 minutes.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

NEWS OF THE DAY: The last issue we played we think is deserving of praise in the reviewing of the highlights of the news for 1937.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN GRANDEUR: Fitzpatrick Travel Talks—Breathtaking color scenes that will awe any audience.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Paramount

FOUR SMART DOGS: Grantland Rice Sportlights (New Series)—Pretty good. The four smart dogs were good, but there was not enough action in this single reel to make it go over. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FOUR SMART DOGS: Grantland Rice Sportlights —An excellent subject.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HULA HEAVEN: Headliner—Very good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa.

PICKING PETS: Grantland Rice Sportlights (New Series)—Again Paramount scores with Ted Husing's comments on this fine reel. One of the best we have had the privilege to play. Paramount had better put their short subject producer on the features and perhaps we would have some real product from them this season. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier Ind. Small town patronage.

PICKING PETS: Grantland Rice Sportlights—This is a fine animal short. The pets referred to are not of the generally accepted kind. It will please any audience.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SERVICE WITH A SMILE: Betty Boop Cartoons—Moderately funny cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STAR REPORTER, NO. 2, THE: Headliners—Ted Husing M. C.'s a good selection of acts. A singer with Vincent Lopez' orchestra; the Boswell Sisters; Jack Blair in a tap-dancing routine and Yasha Bunchuk's Cossack Choir. Worth showing. Running time, 11 minutes.—J. A. A. Reynolds Director of Recreation New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

LEON ERROL COMEDIES: These seem to be the tops of the two-reelers for me. People certainly like them and old as well as young get real laughter from his troubles.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

PATHE NEWS: This is like flour or sugar. You must have it for a program. I think Pathe is at the top of the news field. They took a licking on the Panay deal, but the next time they will be on the job. Their shot of Chinese anti-aircraft dropping a Japanese plane made about two months ago was better than anything Paramount or Universal had on the Panay and it came as "run of the mine" stuff.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. ATTIC OF TERROR: Floyd Gibbons' "Your True Adventure"—Here is something different to pep up a comedy program. It's heavy dramatic fare.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BACKYARD BROADCAST, THE: Broadway Brevities—A swell short done by juveniles in a radio station. Some of the finest acts I have ever seen. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE STUTTERING PIG, THE: Looney Tunes—This story is all too scary for the subject of a cartoon which primarily is made for children. One of the poorest. Running time, seven minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

"CHARLIE McCARTHY" REISSUES: These are good. I ran them all and yet I find that those who saw them before laugh the loudest and enjoy them the most 'cause they are sure when to laugh. Anyway, they are an asset to any program.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LIFERS OF THE PARTY, THE: Yacht Club boys—Not up to the usual Yacht Club Boys, but pleased all who saw it. Running time, 21 minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

LITTLEST DIPLOMAT, THE: Jason—This is eye for eye a condensed version of Shirley Temple's recent "Wee Willie Winkie." The plot is practical identical. But withal it's very well done and is fine entertainment.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LYIN' MOUSE, THE: Merrie Melodies—A good color cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MAL HALLETT AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Very good musical with two good voices. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

PORKY CARTOONS: Looney Tunes—These have been built up nicely the last six months and the kiddies are almost as happy when Porky shows up as when Mickey comes on the screen. I would now rate the cartoons I run as first the Mickey Mouse, second Porky, third Silly Symphony and last Betty Boop. Haven't seen a Popeye for months, so don't know how they are standing up.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SWING FOR SALE: Broadway Brevities—A good two-reel musical comedy with a finale which is the equal of anything the big musical features can offer. There are singable songs in the swing fashion and some plain and fancy tap-dancing by Hal LeRoy. Worth a spot on any program. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

UPS AND DOWNS: Hal LeRoy—No good. Won't or didn't please here. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

WOODS ARE FULL OF CUCKOOS: Merrie Melodies—Very good. A take-off on quite a few Hollywood stars. About the cleverest cartoon in months. Running time, nine minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

DUFAYCOLOR PREPARING TO ENTER FILM FIELD

Process Used on George VI Coronation; Expanding Still Photography Activities First

Dufaycolor, Inc., will enter the motion picture field with its color process immediately after a contemplated expansion of its still photography activities, Pierpont Morgan Hamilton, president, announced this week. The process is now ready, Mr. Hamilton said. He called "simplicity, speed and convenience its major advantages." It would be one of the few competitors in color to Technicolor.

At present, Mr. Hamilton said, the company is not equipped to make its process available to the industry on a large scale, and for this reason, attention is being centered upon still photography. However, he pointed out, the process already has been used for the production of several films. Most prominent among these, he continued, are the official pictures of the coronation of King George VI.

Recently, the company announced, a private demonstration was held in Hollywood before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the advantages which evoked the greatest interest included:

1. "Faithful color rendition, free from artificiality. Absence of the 'picture postcard' characteristics. Accurate reproduction of even flesh tints and pastels."

2. "No special equipment needed. Any motion picture camera that will take a good black and white picture will take a good Dufaycolor picture. The same laboratory equipment is used and the same projection equipment is used."

3. "Slight change in speed. Both in shooting the picture, with a single strip of negative, and in exhibiting a picture in the theatre, speed of operation is practically the same as in the case of black and white films."

4. "Accuracy of sound reproduction. This result is due to the precision of the white light component of the film base."

5. "Speed and convenience in developing and printing. Because the studio can do its own processing, the director can see the rushes of one day's work on the following morning."

Dufaycolor, Inc., is a subsidiary of Dufay Chromex, Ltd., in London. When the American company starts operations, Mr. Hamilton said, it will be a separate organization.

"The operation and expansion of the American company will fall into two sharply defined periods," Mr. Hamilton said. "We are now in the first period during which we shall continue to import Dufaycolor film. Later, we will erect our own plant in the United States with complete production facilities."

Besides Mr. Hamilton, who was associated with RKO on the coast for two years, the officers of the new company are: Demetre Daponte, vice-president; Alton A. Brody, vice-president and general manager; Leslie R. Naftzger, vice-president, secretary and counsel; and William A. Smith, treasurer. The Board of directors consists of the general officers and William R. Morris, of the theatrical booking agency of the same name.

Dr. T. Thorne Baker is research director and Carl L. Oswald technical consultant. The company identified Mr. Oswald as the co-inventor of sound propection by means of monochromatic light.

St. Louis Owners Fight New Law

The owners of 38 motion picture theatres have filed suit in circuit court in St. Louis to enjoin the enforcement of the ordinance covering the installation and operation of projection booths.

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, in commenting on the suit said that virtually all of the 85 film theatres in St. Louis will have to make extensive and expensive alterations in order to comply with the provisions of the ordinance.

In their petition filed in circuit court theatre owners charge that the city ordinance in question is unconstitutional in that it will deprive them of their property without due process of law.

The ordinance provides that no one shall enter the projection booth of any motion picture theatre without permission from the officers of the Projectionists Union. There is also written into the ordinance the union's requirement for the employment of two operators in every theatre. It also provides that the approaches to the projection rooms shall be by stairs.

Further, that the projection booths shall be at least 12 feet in length and depth and 8½ feet in height. There are also provisions for a separate inspection or rewind room, also for the installation of lavatory facilities for the projectionists to be provided with both hot and cold water. Other provisions provide for fireproof doors, certain sizes of apertures, ventilation, generator or rectifier rooms, etc.

Mr. Wehrenberg said that the injunction suit was determined upon as a friendly proceeding to determine the legality of the ordinance and just what must be done to comply with its provisions. He said that the ordinance had been violated in no greater degree in the 38 theatres named in the suit which have been threatened with closing than in other theatres in the city.

Director of Public Safety George W. Chadsey contends on the other hand that the ordinance can be easily complied with. He said that a committee representing the theatre owners and the operators union had studied the bill before it was submitted to the Board of Aldermen.

Circuit Judge William S. Connor issued an order for the defendants to show cause why the court should not issue a temporary injunction against them. The order was returnable Tuesday but the court with the consent of counsel, continued the hearing until February 28th when the case will be tried on its merits. If they fail to obtain the necessary legal relief in the state courts it is likely that the case will be taken to federal court.

Berlin, connected with Exhibitors Booking Association of Toronto. The house seats 750.

IN COURTS

Stockholder Sues On Loew's Pacts

A stockholders' action to enjoin Loew's, Inc., from ratifying and placing in effect the profit sharing contracts for 11 company executives, which were overwhelmingly approved at the annual meeting of Loew's stockholders last week, was filed in New York supreme court on Monday.

The action was brought by Bernard Epstein, owner of 10 shares of preferred and 13 shares of Loew's common stock. In addition to the injunction, he asks "an accounting for acts of mismanagement, waste and extravagances, resulting in the loss of many millions of dollars to the defendant corporation and its stockholders."

Assurance that the suit will go on trial immediately was given Tuesday when an application for a temporary injunction was withdrawn at a hearing before Peter A. Schmuck, justice, in New York. Joseph M. Proskauer, attorney for Loew's, agreed for the company to an immediate trial of the issues on their merits. Justice Schmuck will set a trial date within the next few days and indications were that the trial will start early in March.

The suit originally was brought in advance of the Loew's stockholders' meeting, but was adjourned by consent of both sides. Named as defendants in the action are Nicholas M. Schenck, David Bernstein, Louis B. Mayer, J. Robert Rubin, Isidore Frey, Leopold Friedman, John R. Hazel, George M. Armsby, William A. Parker, Thomas N. Perkins, William A. Phillips, Charles C. Moskowitz, David Warfield and Loew's, Inc.

"For fourteen years Charles W. Picquet has been president of the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, Inc. These fourteen years of unstinted outpourings of his splendid brain, his generous heart and his sympathetic understanding, have been inextricably moulded with the progress and achievements of the organization.

"If a man be indeed 'a part of all he has seen and met,' it is equally true that an organization into which a man has poured the vital things of his being must therefore be colored and toned by that infusion.

"The Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, Inc., recognize and greatly appreciate Charles W. Picquet's high achievements, his sterling character and the strength and inspiration of his example."

Dysart, chairman of the bondholders' protective committee, purchasers of the bankrupt's assets.

GOVERNMENT CONCLUDES STUDY OF LEGALITY OF CHANCE GAMES

Assistant Solicitor Weighs Evidence After Hearings on Bank Night; Utah Trade Commission Orders Discontinuance

The fate of Bank Nights, reputedly a million dollar industry, this week rested in the hands of the Post Office Department, following extended investigation into the question whether the methods pursued by Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., Denver, Col., copyright owners of the plan, constitute a lottery within the meaning of the prohibitions of the postal laws.

In Utah several theatres were ordered by the Utah Trade Commission to discontinue Bank Night and another giveaway game.

In Minneapolis, W. A. (Al) Steffes took issue with Gradwell L. Sears' criticism of giveaways, and in New York the Independent Theatre Owners Association through its official publication challenged Warner Brothers to support Mr. Sears' criticism by abandoning double featuring in the circuit.

Investigation of Bank Night was undertaken by postal officials last year, the first time they had directed their attention to the owners of the scheme, although the department from time to time had barred the mails to the advertising of exhibitors exploiting their Bank Night operations.

Following the investigation, the department on October 15 issued a citation charging that the company "by means of written and printed matter sent through the mails and by means of agents or distributors procures the contract and agreement of theatre operators in various parts of the United States to conduct a scheme variously described as Bank Night, Money Night, Cash Night, Silver Night, Gold Night and by other titles," in violation of the prohibition against lotteries.

Final Argument Heard

Following the filing of charges, a number of hearings were held on the matter, culminating last week in final argument before Assistant Solicitor Calvin W. Hassell.

Attorneys for the department contended that the methods used in holding Bank Nights, as set forth in the contract which Affiliated Enterprises offered exhibitors, constituted a lottery in that winners were not decided by the skill or ability shown by the contestants but by lot or chance.

Holding that the plan did not constitute a lottery as envisaged in the postal laws, Emmet Thurman, general counsel for the company, argued that it constituted a legitimate advertising medium for theatres.

Issuance of an order by the Post Office Department barring the use of the mails, officials, said, is tantamount to putting a respondent out of business, since such an order prohibits him from either sending or receiving any mail relating in any way whatosever to the scheme or practice which the department has outlawed. Letters deposited for mailing by a respondent against whom an order has been issued are not accepted, and letters addressed to him are diverted and returned to the senders.

Games Barred in Utah

Bank Night and Ten-o-win at 11 Utah theatres have been ordered discontinued with the mailing of cease and desist orders by the Utah Trade Commission. The games, which so far have not been proved to be lotteries in Utah, are said to be contrary to the unfair practices act.

The orders, prepared by Edward F. Richards, attorney for the commission, and signed by Gus P. Blackman, chairman, and J. H. McGibbeny, executive secretary, charged the games were carried on "for the purpose of injuring competition or where the effect thereof may be substantially to lessen competition."

Theatres cited in the complaints are: Tower and Roxy, Salt Lake City; Ogden, Egyptian, Paramount, Lyceum and Colonial, Ogden; Roxy, Grand, Capitol and Lyric of Logan.

Requests for formal hearings have been filed with Mr. McGibbeny by theatre owners affected by the commission's orders.

Steffes Blames Weak Films

Mr. Steffes, Allied leader in the Northwest, replying to the recent criticism of giveaways and prize games by Mr. Sears, general sales manager of Warner Brothers, said in Minneapolis that giveaways, country store, and turkey nights would not be necessary to draw business to theatres if poor pictures were not produced.

"The double feature menace is 10 times as bad as giveaways, and I am certainly recommending at our convention that no theatre in this territory play any Warner pictures on giveaway nights, especially if they have bought them on percentage," he said.

The ITOA of New York, in its house organ, The Independent, commenting on Mr. Sears' criticisms, said: "This is a particularly bright chance for Mr. Sears and Warner Brothers. Let them dispense with all such contraband and really go back to the theatre business."

District Attorney Pledges Ban

District Attorney Robert E. McCreary of Beaver County, Pa., said that he would ban all cash and merchandise giveaways in the county after next Monday. Mr. McCreary said that the ban will include all Bingo games and merchandise promotion contests but that he would permit charity contests without cash awards. He termed promotion schemes "as another gambling situation which is being imposed on the people by outside owners of copyrighted, protected schemes of promotion." He said that Bank Night violates the state gambling laws.

Six of the seven Civic theatres in Denver are using the new game, Race Night, for a trial period of 10 weeks, with a renewal option. Three dime grinds, the Gem, Tivoli and Colorado there have added giveaways for every night in the week except Tuesday.

The Richland county grand jury, Mansfield, Ohio, returning indictments in 19 cases, ignored the charges against Hal D. Shreffler, manager of Schine's Castamba, Shelby, Ohio, and Milton Schosburg, associated with Schine home office at Bellefontaine, Ohio, both charged with promoting a lottery in the operation of Bank Night at the Castamba. Both men pleaded guilty when arraigned and were released on bond after being bound over.

Warner Brothers' Ohio theatre at Mansfield, has inaugurated "Quizz Bee" night each Thursday. Free tickets are awarded persons who submit questions and correct answers, and these, in turn, are submitted to five persons on the stage on the designated night. Three cash prizes are awarded persons answering the greatest number of questions correctly. The name, "Quizz Bee," was selected through a name contest.

Sweepstakes Insurance Barred

Sale of insurance by which theatre patrons may win at Sweepstakes when absent from the theatre at the time of drawings, has been banned in East Liverpool, Ohio, by Mayor Lee Copenhaver, who has instructed police to stop the practice and arrest future participants. It is held to be a violation of the gambling law.

New Haven, Conn., Bank Night attorneys in the Connecticut test case of Ernest Dorau, manager of the Capitol theatre, Middletown, report that the case will not now reach the supreme court of errors on appeal before the March term. The record is being printed in the superior court and will be submitted immediately upon completion, to the higher court.

Following the edict of Prosecutor John J. Breslin of Bergen County, N. J., that theatre games are lotteries, Maurice T. Katz, Lyndhurst theatre manager, was arrested and subsequently released in $500 bail for holding a Bango game.

Representative F. T. Munford has introduced a bill (H. B. 182) in the Kentucky legislature to legalize Bank Nights.

Alfred Hewitt, manager and Richard J. and Reginald Ashmun, owners of the Family theatre, Tawas City, Mich., face examination in justice court on a charge of conducting a lottery by operating Bank Night in their theatre.

MEXICAN IMPORT RATES INCREASED

The increase in import duties on many luxury and socalled non-essential articles now in effect in Mexico will heavily affect film apparatus and raw stock imports into the country. The increase in duties is for the announced purpose of reducing purchases abroad and to strengthen Mexican currency at home and in relation with the American dollar.

The duties are for two periods—one very high until April 30th, the other from May 1st until further notice. The tariffs which particularly affect the motion picture industry are:

All apparatus, each piece of which weighs up to 20 kilograms, former rate, 28 cents the net kilogram; rate up to April 30th, 83 cents the net kilogram, from May 1st, 70 cents.

Blank films: former rate, 14 cents the gross kilogram; up to April 30th, 42 cents, and from May 1st, 21 cents.

Cleveland Office Opened

National Screen Service opened its new Cleveland office building last week with a complete line of prevues and lobby displays to serve the exhibitors in the Cleveland territory. Nat Barach is manager.

Thompson Succeeds Ginsberg

James J. Thompson has succeeded Murrey Ginsberg, resigned, as chief booker for the Springer and Cocalis circuit, New York. Mr. Ginsberg had served with the circuit for three and a half years.

1938 AWARDS

Inquiries have been trickling into this department concerning several points in connection with the system governing the Quigley Awards for 1938.

Foremost among these is the question as to whether or not an entrant should wait until the end of each three-month period to submit his material. As has been mentioned before, the answer is emphatically "No." Shoot your stuff in to us as soon as it is ready. We will take excellent care of it for you and undoubtedly much of your material will find its way into print in our pages, besides being credited to you for Award consideration. No duplicate copies of entries are necessary.

In this week's Round Table section may be found a column devoted to all information pertaining to the new system of Awards. It has been condensed for quick reading and understanding and covers the entire situation.

For your reference, a complete listing of cities with the various classifications under which they fall, has been printed in the issue of January 15th, informing you just exactly with whom you are competing.

THEATRE-MINDED NEWSPAPERMEN

Appalling as it may sound, we have been confronted with many situations in which newspapermen take little or no interest in the activities of the local movie houses. In some cases they even take a decided and stubborn stand against printing theatre news.

We believe this state of affairs can be cleared up by patience and a logical approach to the right persons. Since newspapers comprise one of your largest avenues for the dissemination of publicity, a little pressure, when necessary, should be applied in the proper direction. It can be tactfully brought to light, that you and your theatre can be of aid to your local newspaper in many ways.

It has been proven beyond doubt that news of Hollywood and the movies is eagerly read by the American populace. This is attested to by the fact that the largest newspaper chains in the country are devoting more and more space each year to this fascinating reading matter.

Various pitfalls confront the theatre manager who has to do business with a gentleman of the fourth estate who happens to be a "tough nut to crack." First and foremost, it must be remembered that any newspaperman resents being told "how" to run his newspaper. Most of these gentlemen, however, are open to logical and sensible suggestions that may be of mutual benefit. Also, a word of caution: there is no newspaper "break" big enough for you to "pull a fast one" on; in other words, shoot straight with these newspaper gents from the opening gun.

On the brighter side of the picture is the gratifying report concerning the activities of the veteran newspaper editor Jack Malloy of the Boston Evening American, whose attitude towards theatres and motion pictures is widely known for its broad-mindedness.

Mr. Malloy has tied up practically every theatre in Boston on a tremendous movie contest. He goes further than that: each year he sends his ace newspaperwoman to Hollywood for daily stories resulting from personal contacts. At the end of each interview or story, he invariably credits the theatre which will eventually play that star in the picture he or she is making at the time.

Needless to say, the theatres are all for him. They publicize his paper in their lobbies and sometimes on their screens, so it becomes a give and take proposition for all concerned, with mutual happiness and harmony prevailing.

Malloy recognizes the tremendous interest created by motion picture tie-ups; when the price of his newspaper was recently raised, he chose a day coincident with the "breaking" of a serial story which was tied in along motion picture lines. This has been credited with maintaining the paper's "largest evening circulation in New England."

Jack Malloy is a typical newspaper editor—yet he is distinctly and unequivocally movie-minded.

Worthy of editorial salute is the feat of Eddie Miller and Manny Pearlstein of Warner Bros. in Cleveland. They have won no less than six First or Honorable Mentions in this past year of the Quigley Awards Competitions.

Let's Hear From You.

Manager Clyde Young's campaign on "Vogues of 1938" certainly laid no egg at the Greer, Mangum, Okla. Young managed to sell all grocers idea of stamping eggs as shown below.

Round Table In Pictures

Eye arresting lobby display on "Souls at Sea" was created by Manager L. R. Davis, Berkshire Theatre, Brooklyn. Cutouts of George Raft and Gary Cooper were planted at either side of display, miniature ships and lighthouse added further atmosphere.

And from New Zealand comes still another attractive lobby display conceived by W. M. Maxwell, manager of the Regent Theatre in Masterton for "The Good Earth." Chinese effect was carried out with girl seated in ricksha.

For his "Second Honeymoon" engagement at the Haven Theatre, Olean, N. Y., Ray Fabrenholz broke into local parade with his own treet ad. Couple dressed as Tyrone Power and Loretta Young in full bridal finery toured in car properly bannered. Also attached to machine were old shoes, tin cans, etc., etc.

Shown at left is one of the many hundred billboards used for the world premiere of Paramount's "The Buccaneer" at the Saenger Theatre in New Orleans. Since "The Buccaneer" was produced and directed by Cecil B. DeMille, these billboards served a two-fold purpose: that of advertising the picture, and also as a personal welcome to the famed producer who was part of a large entourage of Hollywood and New York visiting celebrities.

Through "Wells Fargo" tieup arranged by Frank LaFalce, Warners' Theatres, Washington, Gay Cunkleman, modern pony express rider delivered a message from Gov. Merriam of California to Postmaster Farley and Senator McAdoo on the Capitol steps in Washington. Message traveled over original Wells Fargo route and was picked up by Cunkelman at Washington airport and rushed to capitol. Shown left to right in photo are Gay Cunkelman, Postmaster Farley and Senator McAdoo.

Constructed at a reported cost of forty-five cents was Frank Aydelotte's "Wife, Doctor and Nurse" display. Large triangle in center was made of scrap and covered with gold crepe paper. Heads of Baxter, Bruce and Young were mounted on red hearts and cut out. Smaller triangles were placed at each corner with stars' names. Tie-in copy was included stressing part each star played in picture. Centerpiece was planted in front of theatre during run and entire staff wore hospital uniforms.

Unusual was the front of the New York Strand Theatre for Warners' "Hollywood Hotel" run. The centerpiece was composed of a background of gold sequins with a black velvet trim upon which were mounted gold foil letters spelling out the title. The side pieces also had a gold sequin background with blue silk letters superimposed. In the center and in back of the box office was a motor driven mirrored ball reflecting light from two colored spots focussed upon it. Credit is given to B. F. Moore for this excellent flash.

QUICK REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

Bowling Tieup

Through a nation-wide poster and letter campaign for "Set 'Em Up," Columbia is addressing over 80,000 bowling alley proprietors in an effort to reach all tenpin fans to sell their new bowling short. Tieup was also effected with the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company calling for the distribution of 15,000 posters to bowling alleys as advance bally for the subject. In addition the Brunswick people have sent letters urging proprietors to cooperate with the theatres.

Radio

Special screening and broadcast from the lobby over WCAO was held opening night by William Saxton, Loew's Century Theatre, Baltimore, for "Hurricane." Celebrities were interviewed over the air and huge banner hung across main street heralded the picture's openig week ahead. As a goodwill gesture Marama dolls were sent to newspaper critics; contests were planted in papers one addressed to children under 12 asking them to write in telling why they would make good mothers to a Marama doll. 15 dolls were given as prizes. Second was a feather guessing contest and broke three days before and closed opening day. A reported first time was use of full page cut in Sunday paper, special art was also secured on women's page and story.

Contest

Selling "Life Begins in College" with newspaper contest, Joseph Samartano, Loew-Poli Theatre, Meriden, Conn., offered guest tickets to those correctly guessing the amount of plays, touchdowns, etc., in local football games. Contest brought theatre fourteen inch art layout and mention on football page. Huge banner was carried across field during halves of game day ahead of opening.

KEEP SENDING ALONG CAMPAIGN MATERIAL

Many inquiries have reached us as to whether or not to hold entries to be submitted for the Quigley Awards, and send them in at the end of each three months. Keep sending this material in as soon as it is ready, and we will take excellent care of it for you.

This material which finds its way into print in the Round Table pages will be saved by us for Award consideration, so it is not necessary for you to save a duplicate of your campaigns.

Again we urge you to send your stuff in as soon as it is completed. We'll do the rest.

Anniversary

When Dwight Van Meter, Astor Theatre, Reading, Pa., found himself playing "Ali Baba" coincidentally with Eddie Cantor celebrating his 25th anniversary in showbusiness, things started happening. First was the promotion of local baker who donated birthday cake which was shipped to the star in Hollywood air express. Pictures were taken at local airport and again when Cantor received the cake, these together with wire from the star made news break in papers.

Week ahead of opening, giant book was placed at busy street corner with usher requesting folks to sign their names thereby conveying their congratulations to Cantor. While persons signed, usher gave brief sales talk on the picture. Street bally consisted of man with camera trying to take picture of friend in third story window across the street. Much ado was made over position of man in window with shouted instructions drawing crowds, as folks assembled, man in window released rolled window blind lettered with picture copy.

Fight Angles

Labeling his campaign "the battle of the century," Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo for "Nothing Sacred" printed bright yellow paper directional arrows with copy "this way to the big fight" and spotted them about town. Cards simulating ringside fight tickets, Lombard vs. March, were distributed as were bookmarks and heralds all carrying fight copy. On Sundays all stores in business area had door hangers reading "closed, gone to see," etc., etc.

With temperature below freezing point in his city, Wally placed four foot cake of ice in front of theatre with 18 inch Lombard oil painting back to back with picture and playdate copy frozen in center. Through tieup with local Civic Auditorium, at which weekly fights are held, Caldwell staged a bout between an amazon woman and young man in evening attire. Announcer read specially prepared material winding up with punch copy on the picture. One and three sheet posters were planted throughout auditorium at which over 5,000 spectators were present. Various merchants came through with window displays, beauty shop featured a Lombard coiffure and drug stores plugged a Lombard Sundae.

Newspaper Tiein

Held in conjunction with the Cleveland News, Manager Ed Miller and publicity man Manny Pearlstein of Warner's Hippodrome Theatre for "The Awful Truth" planted a contest for which pedigreed pooch was promoted as first prize and awarded to person submitting best 50 word letter on their most embarrassing experience. In connection with the contest, proprietor of the dog shop devoted entire window to display of the coveted pooch with signs relating to the contest and the picture.

Crime Display

Concentrating on the gangster angle, Dominick Lucente, Alhambra Theatre, Philadelphia, for "Trapped by G-Men" promoted special photos, newspaper pictures and Department of Justice "wanted" notices on ex-convicts and public enemies. These were used in a special lobby display built around a blowup of the star, Jack Holt, with a gun in hand. Plugs were arranged for at local ball games, scene mats planted in Italian papers and spot announcements landed on Stations WRAX and WPEN.

Newspaper Contest Plus Merchants Aid Stutenroth

Gene Stutenroth, formerly of the Howard Theatre in the heart of the colored belt in Brooklyn, New York, tied up the largest Negro newspaper publication in New York, along with many merchants, to put over a bang-up stage show which hit a reported high gross for his house. Since reporting his campaign, Gene has moved over to the Sun Theatre in Brooklyn.

Learning of the desire of the Negro newspaper the Amsterdam News, to conduct a contest to find the most popular colored girls in the community, Stutenroth approached the editor and asked what he had planned as a grand finale for his contest; he was told that the girls selected would have their photographs printed in the newspaper.

Holds Stage Revue

It was then that Gene went into action. He suggested that they present the winning girls in person at his theatre, play the occasion up big in the paper and have the various colored organizations get behind the affair. To top it off he added that he would call this stage show the "Amsterdam News Jubilee Revue," which made a big hit with the editor.

Gene also discovered that the editor of the paper was the business manager of an excellent colored orchestra, and using this band as a nucleus for his revue, obtained many other acts from various night clubs.

Smashing campaign was then under way, with the newspaper devoting reams and reams of publicity to this coming event, including big front page breaks. Every colored section of the community was plastered with window cards, special heralds, and extra window streamers and banners were printed by the Amsterdam News. All delivery trucks of the newspaper carried signs and copy on this occasion, in addition to Stutenroth's own ballyhoo truck, which cruised the colored residential section and business areas for three days prior to the playdate.

The colored Junior League and the colored Elks made announcements at every social gathering, and the News, through its connections with certain colored radio programs, arranged for many "spot" announcements.

Tieup with merchants resulted in the promotion of many free gifts and flowers to the girl contest winners.

Special displays were created for the front and inside of the theatre; effective trailers were used in advance and huge panels erected for photos of the winning girls.

Needless to say the show was a tremendous hit, and the receipts soared to a new high, according to Stutenroth.

"March of Time" Broadcast

An excellent publicity break was given the Paramount Theatre in New York on a recent "March of Time" broadcast. The characters on this air show enacted the parts of a young couple, who had built a bonfire in front of the theatre at five o'clock in the morning to keep warm, until the doors opened.

Poor Lighting Is Cause of Needless Theatre Accidents

Following is the first article on "Safety" as reported in a special manual issued by the M. & P. Theatres in New England. As explained editorially last week, one of these articles will appear each week for the next several weeks, each dealing with a different aspect of this important phase of theatre operation. Quoting from this manual:

"To you, the manager, your theatre is like an open book; you know your way around in the dark. You can tell where every seat is, where every stair is, and where every aisle ends. But how about your patrons?

"The average patron knows nothing about the inside of your theatre. When he steps into your house his eyes are unaccustomed to the change of light, and for a few minutes he can see but a few feet in front of him. He depends almost entirely upon the aisle lights. And that's why accidents occur.

"We haven't accurate statistics to confirm our belief, but it is our firm conviction that a major part of the accidents in our theatres are due to poor lighting. We witnessed an accident of this sort in a theatre recently. A patron was making his way down the balcony, and because of the poor light was having a difficult time. Two or three times he stepped down where there wasn't any step, and narrowly missed falling. Finally he came to a particularly dark spot. Hesitantly he stepped down, suddenly slipped, and fell a number of steps to the landing below. Luckily he was unhurt. But an accident of this sort is certainly a bad ad for any theatre.

"Accidents like this are happening every day in poorly lighted houses. There is absolutely no reason for them in theatres. Careful and constant inspection will determine whether or not your lights throw sufficient voltage on the stairways and landings. Your ushers surely know if aisle lights do not reflect on the carpet, and if your wall brackets are insufficiently lighted to reflect on the aisle below.

"Once seated and absorbed in the picture, your patron is oblivious of the lights around him. But certainly he wants to be sure he can get into his seat ond out of it without carrying along a personal flashlight."

VIRGINIA THEATRES OPENING CAMPAIGNS

Special Souvenir Programs, Newspaper Cooperation and Goodwill Promotion Shown

The Neighborhood Theaters, Inc., of Richmond, Virginia, have recently opened several new theatres, including the Pulaski, Bellevue, Halifax, Princess and the Wilson, in the vicinity of Richmond.

Under the general managership of Sam Bendheim, advertising manager Dave Kamsky has been on his toes from early morning till late at night busily engaged in appropriate campaigns for these new houses.

Deserving of high honors are the inaugural souvenir programs that Kamsky has made up for these theatre openings. Without running into much cost, he has achieved excellent results; each program contains commendable institutional material, eye-arresting attractiveness, effective civic spirit, neat program presentation, merits of the auditorium itself, and a word on the newest sound equipment.

Newspapers were used a great deal in each of Dave's campaigns. In many instances he secured front page "breaks," as well as many co-operative ads from merchants in the communities. In some instances he promoted full sections.

In some cases direct mail advertising in the form of a friendly letter to each resident in the community, signed by the manager of the theatre, was used. Also, a questionnaire was enclosed as well as a contest.

This letter was followed up a short time afterward with another, calling attention to the many fine facilities offered at the new theatre.

Builds Good Will

Of significant importance is the method employed by Neighborhood Theatres, Inc., in the opening of theatres in communities where the residents are prejudiced against a theatre in their neighborhood. In these cases some woman's club or other worthwhile organization is contacted to sponsor the opening, and give them anywhere from 10 to 50 per cent of the first day's receipts. This breaks down prejudice or hard feelings and is instrumental in building up good will.

Gala atmosphere is usually provided for each opening night, with lights, etc., and a remote control broadcast from the lobby. The manager has a message for the public, and as many patrons as they can get to the "mike" say a few words, while the announcer, in the intervals, exploits the beauties, conveniences, etc., of the theatre.

Book matches, heralds, special window cards, etc., are also used to the best advantage possible.

In practically every instance the Mayor is invited to make a welcoming address from the stage of the theatre and prominent officials of the vicinity are in attendance.

In next week's Round Table section, third of this series on campaigns for theatre openings will be continued.

"AWARDS STIMULATE BOX OFFICE" SAYS ADDISON

"I shall be delighted to serve as one of your judges for the Quigley Awards for 1938.

"It is my emphatic belief that these Awards have a definite value in stimulating enthusiasm, creating new ideas in advertising and exploitation and serve to sustain wideawake showmanship,—all having a direct bearing upon the box office."—H. M. ADDISON, District Manager, Loew's Northeastern Division Manager, Boston, Mass.

"Mannequin" Date Opened with Contest

In their campaign on "Mannequin" at the Boyd Theatre, Philadelphia, Jules Seltzer for Warners' and Jimmy Ashcraft for MGM planted a contest, conducted by Mrs. Barbara Boyd, president of the WCAU Women's Club of the Air, to determine foremost among Philadelphia's leading professional mannequins. It was made necessary that the girls be nominated by the establishments they represented or that they be duly registered members of Models' Guild.

Judges were fashion editors of five local papers, photographer, artist, sculptor and president of the Air Club, who is a recognized stylist. Thirty entrants and judges were tendered a luncheon, with all attendant publicity. Mannequins appeared before judges twice; once in street attire and once in evening clothes, identified by number only. Winner was presented with handbag sent by Joan Crawford from Hollywood together with note of congratulations and check for $500.

Mention by Mrs. Boyd in her daily afternoon broadcast, as well as a 15-minute interview with the winner by her, brought four radio plugs with picture mention. Event was also covered photographically by the News of the Day. International News Service, A. P., U. P., World Wide Service and the Philadelphia papers. Within 24 hours of the contest all theatres in the city showing News of the Day had a flash of the event in its newsreel and additional clips were made for the Warner Theatres not using this material.

"Alcatraz" Break

With the recent sensational escape of two convicts from Alcatraz, a help to showmen playing that date, the manager of the Penn Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, took a large ad in local paper, superimposing picture and theatre copy on the headline newspaper article dealing with the escape. While in the Easton, Pa., Plain Dealer, the paper included a box at the end of the front page story of the escape mentioning that the feature coincidentally was playing at the Embassy Theatre.

Quigley Awards Information At a Glance

Awards will be made quarterly; that is, your material will be judged on a basis of three-month periods. You "start from scratch" every three months. Quarterly competitions run: WINTER: Jan. 1-March 31; SPRING: April 1-June 30; SUMMER: July 1-Sept. 30; FALL: Oct. 1-Dec. 31.

There are five different classifications under which you are eligible: "A", cities of 250,000 or over; "B", cities of 100,000 to 250,000; "C", cities of 25,000 to 100,000; "D", cities under 25,000; "E", suburban or subsequent runs.

Silver Plaques will be awarded to each entry voted best in the above five classifications. An additional citation will be voted for the best entry selected as best from among these five winners, regardless of classification.

Citation of Merit Sheepskin Certificates will be awarded for the runner-up in each classification. First and Honorable Mention Sheepskins will also be voted entries not awarded plaques of Citations of Merit, but deemed worthy of recognition.

Every contribution from the field to Managers' Round Table that has to do with Advertising, Exploitation or Publicity in the theatre during each three-month period will be considered in determining the Quarterly Awards.

Complete campaigns are not necessary, although they are desirable.

Institutional campaigns such as anniversaries, festivals, new theatre openings, new season drives, kiddies' clubs, civic tie-ups, etc., will also be eligible for recognition.

Selections by the Judging Committee will be based upon an entrant's efforts during the three-month competition and not upon any one single picture campaign, as heretofore.

The Quigley Annual Awards will be continued in 1938, the winners to be chosen from among entrants earning the highest ratings in the year's four quarterly Competitions.

It is important and of vital interest to you that you keep sending material from week to week or such time as you have activities ready, since these Awards are based upon the most consistent efforts of entrants over the entire three-month period. In other words, each man may submit as many campaigns and material of any sort as he cares to during each Quarterly Competition.

WARNERS' PHILADELPHIA ZONE ADS

These newspaper ads are typical of the style employed by the Astor Theatre, York, Pa., in the Warner Philadelphia Zone. They are submitted by Douglas George, publicity head, who operates under the supervision of "Skip" Weshner. Art work is credited to Leo Weisz.

J C JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Those exhibitors who have customers who like football pictures would do well to get "Over the Goal" and show it. Not that it is an exceptional picture at all, but it is a fairly good college football story that is fairly well played.

Whenever we see an upper classman requiring a freshman to wash the windows, scrub the floors and black his shoes, we are inclined to forget ourself and shuck off our coat and say "Come out in the back yard." If we were ever to send another boy to college we'd put him in the hands of a boxing trainer for a year, and after he had been in college for six months if some of the upper classmen didn't go around with beefsteak on their eyes we'd call him back home and set him to plowing for corn.

We'd be like the old farmer we saw in a cartoon once. His boy had just come home from college and was lying on the lounge in a sports suit, with long hair parted in the middle and smoking a cigaret and telling his mother about the wonderful success he had playing fullback on the college team. His father laid his paper down and said: "Well, son, now that you are back, we will have your hair cut and you can put on a pair of overalls and play whoaback with the home team."

The chief ambition of a bulk of students is to win a letter on the football field, or on the track or the basketball court. Many a father has wasted a lot of money on a damphool, and many an athletic instructor should be driving a truck. This doesn't mean that people shouldn't go to college; they should, but after college, then what?

Last night we saw "Damsel in Distress" with Fred Astaire, George Burns and Gracie Allen. It was the third night showing. The first night drew good business, the second night was just so, and the third night there were six paid customers. If they had left Burns and Allen out of the picture there wouldn't have been much to it.

From the remarks we heard from the audience, it's a good think they're going to put Astaire and Ginger Rogers together again. "Carefree" is the title.

Jimmy Fidler says that Lyle Talbot said that a man came down to Hollywood from the Arctic Circle and married a screen actress and froze to death. Well, that isn't so surprising; we'd probably want to freeze to death ourself if we married some of 'em. The Hollywood folks say that it never snows in Hollywood, but we saw two kids making a snow man on their front lawn once. Baron Munchausen must have grown up in Hollywood.

A teacher in a country school out in western Nebraska asked the scholars to name two well known birds. One boy held up his hand and said, "Pheasants and storks."

Twice a day we go out to the mail box on our front porch expecting a barrel of letters from our exhibitor friends. Sometimes that's it; sometimes they're chiefly sales bills or chain store advertisements. Doggone the doggone luck, anyhow.

"They Won't Forget" is a picture that we think should have never been made. It is well played and has a splendid cast, including Claude Rains, Gloria Dickson, Otto Kruger, Edward Norris. The story is of the murder of a girl in a southern college and the arrest and conviction of a teacher from the north. Claude Rains is attorney for the prosecution and Otto Kruger for the defense and both give excellent performances.

We have been in the South and are fairly well acquainted with the Southern people, and it is our belief that there are no better people on earth than those living south of the Mason and Dixon line, so why rake up that old forgotten feud? This country stands today as a united people, one for all and all for one, and we should strive to keep it so.

This criticism will no doubt meet with objections from some people, but it comes from a "Northerner" whose aim is to tell the truth as he sees it regardless of what anyone thinks about it.

Charlie McCarthy sometimes puts more pep in a program that some of the stars, even though he is a dummy. There are a lot of dummies writing for the press and magazines (including ourself) who could benefit from Charlie's logic. Charlie gets a lot of credit, but how about Bergen?

As a rule, Westerns are pretty much the same. The ranchmen and the sheriff get into a gun fight with a bunch of cattle rustlers and the picture usually winds up with the hero marrying the rancher's daughter. But "Border Cafe" is somewhat different. In this one Harry Carey comes back to his former self. Harry is cast as the owner of a large ranch and Senator Whitney's boy becomes his partner. The comedy of the picture comes when the Senator and Harry, after a few rounds of drinks, start telling of the wonderful exploits of their ancestors. Of course, there are the usual love scenes, and all that kind of stuff, but those two old pelicans could make Ananias seem like a Sunday school superintendent. We call it a pretty good western. Play it if you want to, but don't charge us with a darn thing, and for fear you might we are going to stop right here.

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 100

Question No. 100 *was: (A) At what minimum speed should a projector fire shutter rise and fall? (B) What should the size of upper and lower loops be? Shea and H. T. Plum; L. G. Dillon and W. B. Myers; H. M. Jackson and W. V. Henderson; F. D. Scanlon; M. D. McGuire; P. F. Maxwell and S. U. Lamont; R. Davis and F. M. Brown; L. R. Whitmore; K. Erwin.

(A) R. and K. Wells answer thus: "The intense heat of the spot at the projector aperture under present day practice is such as will set fire to film very quickly. The concentration of heat is in some cases sufficient to start a blaze in less than two seconds, were the film stationary for that period of time. It has even been asserted that half that time will do the trick, but that is uncertain, I think. However, the highest authority I know of, your Bluebook of Projection, sets at sixty the minimum projection speed at which the projector automatic fire shutter should rise and fall, and while that locates the film in the light for very much less than one second of time, still it seems a reasonable margin of safety from fire, and fire is not the only consideration. The film is under intense heat only while each frame is over the aperture, but since the parts surrounding the aperture are themselves at temperature that has served to cause warpage of the metal, the film must be passed through very rapidly or buckling may result. Our Bluebook says sixty feet of film per minute is the limit and it is a wise one, too."

(B) J. R. Prater says: "The intermittent sprocket pulls the film down exactly three-fourths of an inch and stops, remaining stationary during the greater part of each cycle. Both upper and lower sprockets run continuously at unvarying speed. This action requires that there be slightly in excess of three-fourths of an inch of slack film in the upper loop when the intermittent is ready to start moving, and an equal amount when the intermittent has ceased moving. This takes care of the continuous and constant movement requirement but there is another element. The framing adjustment takes the amount of its movement from one loop and adds it to the other. It then is evident that each loop must contain as much slack film in addition to the continuous—intermittent requirement as the greatest possible framing adjustment movement can take from it when moved to either end of its travel from its position when the projector is threaded. The possible travel of the framing carriage is approximately one full frame, hence the loops must have enough film to enable that much movement, though ordinarily the framing carriage should be in central position at threading.

"If loops are excessive in size they may make considerable unnecessary noise, besides permitting the film to contact metal. It is well to provide a six hole loop, which should be sufficient to take care of everything without providing any unnecessary slack. The correct length of loop, or amount of slack film, between visual and sound equipments to provide perfect synchronism also is a governing factor in lower loop size.

"To determine the most satisfactory lower loop size, set the framing carriage at center of its travel. Rotate projector flywheel in the direction it normally runs until intermittent sprocket just ceases its movement. With a good, unspliced standard leader, thread a numbered frame into position over the aperture and the corresponding diamond-marked frame exactly in proper position over the sound gate aperture. With the manufacturer's recommended slack film between projector lower sprocket and sound sprocket, the correct length of projector lower loop is automatically determined. With framing carriage central, the upper loop must be given two sprocket holes for framing and two more for safety. Since the intermittent has just ceased moving that will fill every possible requirement. If the framing carriage is moved during the run, the upper loop may attain a maximum of six holes larger than when threaded.

"Of course, projectionists soon become automatically conscious of the exact requirement, but beginners should experiment by turning the flywheel and observing the loop action carefully under all conditions."

(C) S. O. Sears says: "Fire shutter mechanisms vary in their make-up. Each type or 'make' of projector has a differently designed mechanism, but the underlying purpose of each is precisely the same, namely the raising or dropping of a thin, metal shutter when projection speed rises above or drops below a certain approved and predetermined speed, namely sixty feet of film per minute. They all operate by means of a governor type of assembly.

"The whole governor must be kept clean and lubricated at designated points indicated by the manufacturer. Beyond those two things, careful periodic inspection and such repair as may seem necessary is all that is required."

L. H. Kelley provides a lengthy, very excellent discussion of the whole subject, which I may use later in my "Comments" in Better Theatres.

G. E. Doe says: "All automatic fire shutters used on motion picture projectors are designed to perform two duties and two only, but they must be done automatically and perfectly. By varying applications of centrifugal force these mechanisms overcome the gravity and raise a very light, thin shutter of metal against gravity when the projection has reached a speed at which the film under the protecting shutter may safely be exposed to the heat of the concentrated light beam at the projector aperture. This safety limit is set at approximately 60 feet of film per minute. Conversely, if and when projection speed drops below the safety limit as above named, the weight of the shutter blade must overcome the centrifugal force of the governor and automatically drop, cutting off the light from the still moving film.

"Governor mechanisms require little care except (a) proper lubrication, avoiding heavy oil; (b) Careful inspection about every three months to detect possible wear and need for replacement of parts—the wear is but slight, since the force exerted is very small; (c) Must be kept clean, especially from possible gummed oil; (d) Should be checked at least once each week (twice is better) to determine projection speed at which action takes place."

This being a matter of importance no other question will be asked this week.

SELF-PERPETUATION

AN article in Motion Picture Herald of January 29, on the fading significance of the National Board of Review, especially with respect to the status of its seal of approval in regions where it had once been law, has drawn the issuance of a defensive statement from the board running to some thousands of words. It contains conspicuously retaliative implications concerning The Herald:

" . . . the Motion Picture Herald has, of course, the right to print what it considers to be news and to attack what it disapproves of. But the National Board of Review has an equal right to ask of Motion Picture Herald what is behind this particular attack. It is also part of the Board's prerogative to ask the Herald to come out into the open and state plainly its object, and if it is making propaganda, say what that propaganda is for; if it is to do service to the motion picture industry, or if it is primarily to do service to some design of its own. Let the Herald be honest about this, rather than insinuating and specious in its attack on an organization like the National Board, which is a citizen body whose activities ordinarily would not be thought to be the concern of a trade publication carrying advertising, and supposedly giving facts to the industry that supplies the advertising. The National Board believes that in this article of attack the Motion Picture Herald has gone far afield from its province of trade journalism. The Herald opinion of the Board may be one thing or another. This article, however, cannot be said to state an opinion, but only to present a distorted picture such as tends to hold up to misunderstanding and opprobrium the Board and the many prominent people associated in its work. The article is not only unfair, but, as shown above, manifestly untrue. In any event the continued existence of the National Board of Review is not considered dependent upon Motion Picture Herald."

THE Herald feelingly admits possible error in the spelling of the name of a judge, as the Board's formal statement insists. It also regrets that its dating of the change in executive secretaries was not accurate, as indicated by the Board's reply.

The Herald also makes contrite admission that its presentation concerning the status of the National Board of Review needs explanation on the ground that it really should have been published long, long ago.

There has long been a general cognizance of the fact that the line "Passed by the National Board of Review" appearing on the maintitles of the screen has for many, many years meant only that some reviewing committee of volunteers had looked at the picture.

The futility and inutility of the National Board of Review in the service of either the industry of the motion picture or its public has been obvious these many years.

The National Board of Censorship, which was the organization's original name, did, some three decades ago, render a service to both the screen and its public. That utility passed with the period.

It was clear enough a handful of years ago, in the series of developments that led up to the necessity for the establishment of the industry's self-regulative Production Code Administration, that neither the line "passed by the National Board of Review" or the activities of the Board itself were of substantial effect.

Under the line: "Passed by the National Board of Review," the screen rode into difficulties and its largest problems in the realm of public relations. The organized industry met those problems for and by itself.

THE National Board's statement raises the question of the propriety of a discussion of it by Motion Picture Herald as a trade journal. The Board is most peculiarly and especially without authority to define the boundaries of this publication's interest in the motion picture. It is the Herald's privilege and function to deal with any and every aspect of the industry which it serves.

The essential fact remains that the National Board of Review, chiefly supported by a screen tax on reels, paid by the distribution branch of the industry, is without service to the motion picture, and that, further, the presumptions of its line "Passed by the National Board of Review" and its periodic fanning of the embers of censorship discussion are of distinct disservice.

The sole reason for the continued existence of the National Board of Review is the effort of a little bureaucracy at self-perpetuation.

That self-perpetuation impulse is understandable, but it is not to be considered a responsibility of the motion picture industry.

MORE "EXPERTS"

A CHOICE contribution to the catalogue of the pestiferations of the industry is afforded in a dispatch from Chicago announcing that "additional study is being given to the suggestion that duals should be banned by law on the ground they are harmful to children because of their excessive length. Corporation Counsel Barnet Hodes stated that it would take experts on his staff several days to reach a decision on the matter."

After the Chicago experts have decided what to do about that they can proceed to study the menace of the double ice cream cone, the dill pickle and the all-day sucker. That might be disposed of, one may fancy, in a couple of days more, experts being experts.

This industry is going to be fixed up fine when all the experts get through—making it safe for babies, supplying adult education on the screen and carrying the messages of the assorted propagandists. After all those functions are served the subject of entertainment can be considered.

This Week

Federal Art Bureau

Bedecked in flowery terms, Representative William I. Sirovich's plan for the creation of a Federal Department of Science, Art and Literature this week went before the House of Representatives' Patents Committee for hearings. Representatives of the legitimate actors, the writers, the artists and other groups which have resorted to Federal aid were present at the hearings and unwittingly disclosed that the plan is merely a subsidy for the legitimate theatre. With ten subsidized theatres throughout the country, they said, the stage would be revived and could withstand the onslaughts of the films and the radio.

Legislation

Legislative proposals made in the New York legislature as affecting the film business included the re-introduction of several measures which had been defeated in previous years. They included a tax on films, a bill to prevent sale of seats when none are available and which also provides for a matron for each 35 children attending a theatre, and a projectionists' bill. In Ohio, P. J. Wood has been contacting state legislators to maintain the state gross admissions tax at the present three per cent.

A report on New York and other legislative activities will be found on page 38.

RCA Profit

An increase of approximately $2,844,100 over the net profit of 1936 was indicated this week when the Radio Corporation of America released an advance statement estimating its profit for 1937 at $9,000,000. Gross income of RCA, half owner of RKO Radio and owner of the National Broadcasting Company, the RCA photophone sound equipment and the RCA communications, was estimated at $112,650,000, compared to $101,186,300 in 1936. After cost of operations, net income before deductions was estimated to be $15,400,000, as against $11,464,100 in the previous year. Deductions for taxes, interest, depreciation and amortization of patents and goodwill were estimated at $6,400,000.

Panay Films

Censors in Rome are withholding the motion pictures of the sinking and bombing of the United States gunboat, Panay, in the Yangtze River December 12th, press associations reported Wednesday. Although Sandro Sandri, Italian newspaper man, lost his life in the Japanese attack, the film apparently will not be shown for political reasons, film distributors in Rome were quoted as saying.

Villains and Senators

The alleged depicting of three senators as "villains" in a WPA Federal Theatre Project play in New York this week resulted in talk being heard in Washington about a possible Federal investigation. The play, it is charged, presents the three Democratic senators, Charles O. Andrews, of Florida; Millard D. Tydings, of Maryland, and Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, as opposed to a low cost housing bill.

The situation is explained in detail on page 21.

Actors' Peace

Threatening clouds over the coalition of stage, screen and radio actors in the Associated Actors and Artistes of America apparently rolled away this week with the dropping of charges against the Chorus Equity Association, a matter which had threatened to disrupt negotiations for a united front. The charges, which held Chorus Equity had failed to organize its field, were brought by the American Federation of Actors, which threatened, if its claims of jurisdiction were not granted, to throw its support to the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees.

Censorship Actions

The New York Board of Regents at their February meeting in Albany this week was expected to consider appeals on "The Birth of a Baby" and "Remous" both pictures having previously been banned by the state censor. Gordon Knox Bell was elected as the new member of the Regents and Roland B. Woodward was re-appointed to a new full term by the Legislature Wednesday. In Philadelphia, Mrs. Arthur Goldsmith, prominent clubwoman, demanded an investigation of the Pennsylvania Censor Board's activities.

From Japan

In Tokyo the Government was reported considering removal of the ban on foreign film imports, but the plan being studied would include adoption of a quota, similar to that in force in Germany, under which a certain maximum number of imports would be allotted each country. The figure mentioned was 25 for each quarter year, to be split up among all distributors desiring to import pictures. Further, the plan was said to be part of a comprehensive cinema statute, one provision of which, the limitation of play hours, already is in force.

A story by Hiromu Tominaga from Tokyo is on page 55.

Injunction Sought

A second action for a temporary injunction to enjoin North Dakota from enforcing its theatre divorcement law has been filed by Paramount, making Alvin C. Strutz, attorney general, the only defendant. The first action named a number of state officials. Joseph W. Finley, Paramount attorney, said the step was taken to expedite trial of the case, adding that the new complaint does not differ materially from the original. No date has been set for the trial of the main action which challenges the constitutionality of the state's new law.

Ford to Produce

Charles E. Ford, whose resignation as editor of Universal Newsreel becomes effective Saturday, will leave for the coast next week to assume his new post as a producer for Republic Pictures. Mr. Ford's first assignment is expected to be a serial. Since returning from a Florida vacation a week ago, Mr. Ford has been completing production details on two issues of Universal's "Going Places," short subject series. Before leaving the company Saturday he will complete a production outline in connection with sequences for the John Stahl production with Charlie McCarthy.

Cooperative Advertising

Dissatisfied with exhibitors' cooperation, Warner Brothers this week discontinued its cooperative advertising policy to the extent of no longer permitting exhibitors to handle campaigns for which the company shares the expenses. "We feel some exhibitors have imposed upon us," Mort Blumenstock, New York advertising and publicity director for the company, said. The opinion is shared in part by other distributing companies although, in most cases, officials look upon the condition as something to expect, and do not plan to change present policies.

Cooperative advertising is the subject of an article on page 28.

Technicolor Abroad

Proposals have been made to Technicolor to establish plants in Paris, Berlin and Rome and "some considerable distance" has been reached in the negotiations, Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, president, said Wednesday. He also predicted that 1938 will be Technicolor's best year, pointing out that 20 Technicolor features already have been contracted for by various companies. The foreign plants probably will not be built until 1939, he indicated. Mr. Kalmus arrived here with Mrs. Kalmus late last week from an extended stay in Europe. He said he would be in New York for 10 days and then will go to the coast for six weeks. Mrs. Kalmus left for Hollywood Tuesday for "Conferences with Technicolor color control department," of which she is the head. She plans to return to London March 15th to supervise color work on films to be produced by Alexander Korda and Herbert Wilcox.

Divorcement Bill

The Mercantile Affairs Committee of the Massachusetts legislature reserved decision this week on a theatre divorcement bill after a hearing at which Allied declined to support the measure. The organization asked that the bill be held over until the next session of the legislature while Representatives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America asked that it be killed immediately. The bill was filed by Edward Sirois, representative.

Stock Transactions

The latest report of the Securities and Exchange Commission on the transactions of corporation officers and directors reveals that corporation stocks were extensively used as Christmas gifts last year. At the same time the SEC reports that it has received notices of postponement of new financing by Imperial Pictures, International Cinema, Inc., and Cinecolor, Inc.

Bill to Bar Block Booking Reported To U. S. Senate Without Hearings

Abrupt revival of motion picture legislation in Congress was signalized Wednesday when the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, in a surprise move, ordered the Neely anti-block booking bill reported to the Senate.

Action of the committee was taken without the holding of hearings on the measure which was introduced Jan. 6, 1937. It was contended that the question was discussed amply during lengthy hearings at the last Congress.

The bill specifically outlaws block booking and bars blind booking by requiring that a complete and true synopsis of each picture be provided when the film is offered. It is also provided that if a feature as released is substantially different from the synopsis the exhibitor may cancel it without liability for breach of contract and he also may recover all damages suffered because of the difference, or he may retain the lease and recover damages as for a breach of warranty.

In its report the committee referred to the extensive hearings in the last Congress, on the basis of which the bill was favorably reported to the Senate in June last year. In that report it was pointed out that "not only are the practices of compulsory block booking and blind selling injurious to the public in forcing the showing of obscene or vicious pictures and in preventing the showing of many that are desirable, but they unfairly burden and oppress the independent exhibitors.

"Perhaps the most serious objection to these practices lies in the fact that they tend to monopolize the playing time of the screens of the country and thus discourage independent producers from entering the field. If it were not for such practices exhibitors would be free to buy films wherever they could find them, but in existing circumstances exhibitors must have the best pictures of three or more of the major producers, and, since they must take all in order to get any, they usually have little or no playing time left for independent productions."

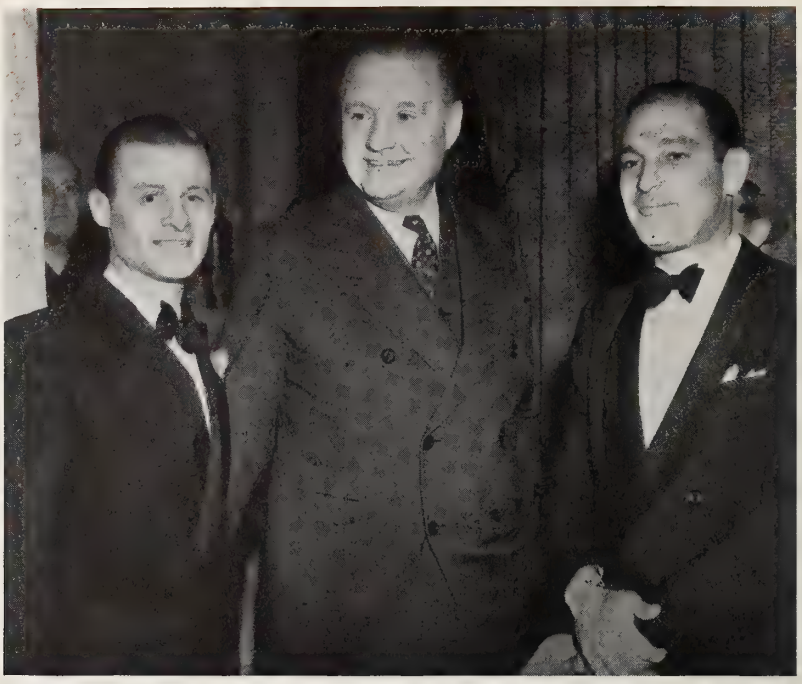
Academy Nominations

Nominations for the annual awards to be made March 3rd by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences were released this week. Ballots for the final voting are to be mailed to 15,000 academy members and persons with "established qualifications in all branches of production," starting next Tuesday.



The nominations in the various fields are listed on page 29.

Commons Reopens

Resuming hearings on the proposed new Films Act and quota law the British House of Commons films committee heard Oliver Stanley, president of the Board of Trade, withdraw his proposal for an alternative quota and accepted a Government proposal for the establishment of machinery under which any film passing the cost test for quota may be rejected on the ground of poor quality. The committee prepared to conclude its hearings this week and send the draft of the bill to the membership of the House.

News from London by mail and cable appears on page 58.

ABOVE and left, in the lobby of the State theatre, Miami, members of a diverse audience of industry figures, in Florida on vacation or business, meet at the premiere of "The Goldwyn Follies." At the left are Sailing Baruch, New York banker, and Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., and above are Charles Ozborn, manager of the theatre; George J. Schaefer, vice president and general manager of United Artists, and Sidney Meyers, head of the Wometco circuit in Florida.

An exhibitors' committee, formed to aid a distributor reach a quota in a sales and play date drive is a development claimed as unique, in the varied records of such campaigns, by RKO-Radio for which company the Baltimore theatre men at left have organized. Headed by I. M. Rappaport, of the Hippodrome theatre, standing at right in the picture, the group represents approximately 65 per cent of the theatres in the territory and includes Leonard Schmuff and Elmer Nolte of the Durkee circuit; Leon Back and Eddie Kemble of the Rome circuit, and Lou Gartner, Max Cluster, Mike Leventhall, Leon Zellers, Julius Goodman and Jerry Cohen.

Leopold Stokowski, betraying none of the camera shyness of his musical contemporaries, arrives in Hollywood to score a Disney short, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

The neon and spot lighted modernistic building above is the Hibiya theatre in Tokyo on the opening day of Universal's "100 Men and a Girl." The marquee design for the occasion was created by K. Matsunami of the publicity department of Takarazuka Gekijo, Ltd., exhibition subsidiary of the Toho producing and distributing interests.

Maurice N. Wolf, left, MGM manager in New England, presents a check for $5,760, the receipts for the opening night of "Monastery" at the Fine Arts theatre, Boston, to the Rev. Michael J. Ahern, S.J., narrator for the film, for the establishment of a fellowship in seismology at Weston College. Standing at the right is George Kraska, manager of the theatre and owner of the American rights to the picture.

David Lewis, MGM manager in Argentina, backed up by Stuart B. Dunlap, South American manager for the company, right, receives an antique chest, containing an inscription on a silver plate, in token of the acclamation of "The Good Earth" as the best production of 1937 in a contest conducted by the radio station, Rivadavia. Presenting the trophy are Roland and Fanny, radio entertainers who conducted the contest for the station, one of the most important in Buenos Aires.

Voice Comes into Its Own In Music of "Snow White"

Animators Given Charts Showing How Accents Fell in Each Frame

By JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

The Voice that retired into the wings, when films became audible, to yield the spotlight to vocal and other exhibitionists, has at last come into its own. And this result has been arrived at, strange to say, not through the medium of human actors on the screen but through that of animated drawings flitting through Shadowland.

To Walt Disney, in his production of "Snow White," goes the honor and glory of revealing the function of screen music in its most exacting and, in many respects, most illuminating form. Mr. Disney has been showing the way, in a jocose and satirical manner, for quite a number of years in the Silly Symphonies and Micky Mouse productions. He now emerges with a major opus that may truly be called a Classic Musical Film Fantasy.

Here is a fusion of action-music-words-sound that stems back to the best traditions of the socalled silent films, while utilizing all the resources of the audible screen in achieving synchrony. This is evidenced in the use of basic musical themes identified with the characters—each an interpretation in melodic form, tone color and rhythm of its visual counterpart.

"SOME DAY MY PRINCE WILL COME"
Sung by Snow White and used in varied forms throughout the picture—vocally and instrumentally—as a Romance Theme for Snow White and the Prince.

For Snow White and the Prince, two songs—a graceful, lilting valse moderator, "Some Day My Prince Will Come," and a tender love ballad, "One Song"—are used in varied forms, vocally and instrumentally. The Magic Mirror scenes are accompanied by a Misterioso of eerie character, which intensifies the weirdness. The envious, wicked Queen is announced by a Sinister Theme, which is amplified and developed, reappearing in many variations of mode and tempo to reinforce the dramatic action. In the plotting and "witch's brew" sequences, the music connotes a grim tonal foreboding. In the flight and chase of the Witch, it develops into a Dramatic Furioso that literally storms up the mountain and hurls the hag over the precipice in an avalanche of tonal fury.

Of the Dwarfs, Dopey, Grumpy and Doc are easily identified in their musical motifs. Dopey's is an eccentric melodic bit, Doc's a staccato phrase descriptive of his stuttering, word-scrambling proclivities, Grumpy's a lugubrioso reflecting his pessimistic "agin everything" complex. Even the Turtle has a special theme, a plodding gravé movement.

JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN, who by now is well known to readers of Motion Picture Herald as the authoritative writer on the inter-relation of screen and music, is in this article on ground of special authority and understanding. Following upon his large experience in the opera and as a musician of attainment, he became, early in the feature picture era, an important contributor to the adjustment between the arts of music and screen narration. He is especially equipped to deal in real understanding with this stranding of the arts into a unified expression.

THE EDITOR

The method adopted by the composers in creating these musical background portraits is typical of the thoroughness of the Disney plan. Much of the music was composed before a line of drawing was done, and charts showing how the musical beats and accents fell in each frame of film were provided the animators in order that they could draw a perfect synchronization to each detail of movement. The forms of the visual characters themselves, however, were decided upon and animators were well underway before the musical character themes were composed. Thus, the musical creator had a mind picture of each character and how that character would appear while in action, to inspire and guide his musical portrait.

How well the composers succeeded in their conception and execution of these character themes is verified by the results, for in the musical scheme of this humoresque fantastique these themes assume the role of colorful tonal clues of identification, as definite in their portrayals as the personalities they interpret.

The songs—and there are at least a dozen—are an integral and motivating factor in this musical film fantasy, which is further evidence that Mr. Disney has achieved something that is still a problem to many musical-film producers who might profit by a close study of the fundamentals of Disney productions. The mood and the character of the melody, the import of the lyrics, are as much a part of the structure, and as essential to the furtherance of the story, as the spoken word and action. When Snow White sings at the Wishing Well and the Well echoes her voice, it is an augury that her wish will be fulfilled. When she sings "With a Smile and a Song," it connotes her hopeful nature. "Some Day My Prince Will Come" keys the romance theme of the story, "when the Prince of my dreams comes to me." In the house of the Dwarfs, when with the aid of the birds and animals she puts the cottage in order and sings "Whistle While You Work," the spirit of the words and the perpetuo moto of the music are in exact accord and tempo with the bustling action.

The Dwarfs have their big musical moments in "Heigh-Ho," "Bluddle Uddle" and "A Silly Song." "Heigh-Ho" introduces the little fellows at work in the diamond mines, singing lustily as they "Dig, dig, dig" in time with the music. When they have reached the refrain, the whistle has blown ending the day's work, and they all march homeward singing the rousing chorus. This catchy marching song might be called the Dwarfs' Theme, as it identifies them as a group and recurs many times throughout the picture, usually at the moments when they are coming to the rescue of Snow White. When Snow White makes the Dwarfs wash their hands before eating, they do so to strains of "Bluddle Uddle," interspersed with much horse-play.

"ONE SONG"

The Prince's love song, introduced when the Prince first sees Snow White, and interwoven with "Some Day My Prince Will Come" in the climax where the Prince discovers Snow White in her glass coffin and awakens her with a kiss.

"WHISTLE WHILE YOU WORK"

A joyous Perpetuo Moto, sung by Snow White while putting the Dwarfs' cottage in order with the aid of the birds and animals of the forest. The rhythm is in exact synchrony with every bit of movement in the busy house-cleaning sequence.

The longest music-song sequence in the production is "The Silly Song," a hilarious housewarming celebration in the Dwarfs' cottage. Here the Disney cohorts turn themselves loose in a typical Disney sequence—a dizzy revelry of elfish pranks, song and dance, music and mirth.

In the underscoring of the dramatic and descriptive music which wings the action and gives significance and color to the situations, scrupulous attention to detail and characterization is in evidence. Even the inarticulate animals are accorded musical speech. Birds converse with Snow White and imitate her vocal roulades when she sings. They hold a conversation with the maiden in the woods and in the Dwarfs' cottage. When they attempt to steal

"SNOW WHITE" GROSSES HALF OF PRODUCTION COST AT MUSIC HALL

Estimated 800,000 Attendance in Five Weeks Gives New Turn to Discussions of Percentages, Double Bills, Clearance

"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," one of the motion picture's greatest box office attractions for adults and children alike, has met with its first objection from political censorship. British children under 16 years of age will not be allowed to see the first full-length animated cartoon, unless accompanied by parents, the censors holding that it was suitable "for adults only."

The action was taken on the ground that some of the haunted-wood fairy-tale scenes would frighten children.

RKO in England has no intention of making any changes in order to obtain the censors' full approval and will open the picture at London's New Gallery on February 24th, where a 20-week run has been guaranteed.

The first chapter of the box-office story of Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," the first experiment with a feature cartoon, will be completed this week, and will disclose shattered records on the books of the Music Hall theatre in Rockefeller Center, where RKO, as distributor, has been conducting a test to determine the color-animation's exhibition capabilities.

Some 800,000 persons, more than the entire population of any one of 15 of the 48 states, will have paid admissions of nearly $600,000, half the cost of producing the picture in the single Music Hall engagement, lasting five weeks.

Longest Music Hall Run

The run is the longest of any at the Radio City theatre, surpassing "Top Hat," "Cavalcade," "Little Women" and "Swing Time." RKO believes it establishes one of the longest "popular priced," continuous-performance runs in all exhibition history. A three-week run was the previous record at this world's largest motion picture theatre.

Only 10 pictures have had three weeks at America's "Number One" motion picture playhouse, none of them grossing $100,000 or more for each week of the three they played, as "Snow White" is doing for all five.

So far as the records show, the business of no other motion picture has continually built over the length of its run, to better previous weeks' receipts, "Snow White" growing from a $108,000 gross in the opening week, to $110,000 for the second, $112,000 for the third, $111,000 for the fourth, and prospects appearing equally bright for the fifth and final seven days. "Snow White's" weekly grosses compare with the $91,000 average weekly gross for the Music Hall over a four-month period preceding the cartoon.

Only four features in all of the five-year history of the Music Hall have grossed more than the weekly receipts of "Snow White," and each of the four had the benefit of extra holiday business, with the accompanying increased holiday prices.

Only one other picture, "Top Hat" (also RKO), exceeded "Snow White" from the standpoint of attendance, the Astaire-Rogers musical enjoying some 185,000 paid admissions, against "Snow White's" average of 175,000 a week over the entire five weeks. But even then, the "Top Hat" attendance was swelled by a three-day Labor Day holiday, the biggest show-days in the year, and by milder weather. "Snow White" had no holidays, holiday prices or advanced admissions, playing throughout the five weeks at the regular Music Hall scale.

Graph on Following Pages

The graph appearing on the following pages illustrates in detail the day-by-day box office performance of "Snow White" at the Music Hall, showing clearly the actual results of the "test" run.

Typical of the performance throughout "Snow White's" run were the receipts on the 16th day, a Friday, when the gross exceeded by more than $5,000 that of the opening day.

The first four days of the third week passed the corresponding period of the second week by better than $5,000.

In the first two days of the third week, the picture took in some $32,000, more than $5,000 and $4,000, respectively, than the first two days of the first and second weeks.

On the first four days of the fourth week, the gross was $64,800, as good as the corresponding days of the first week.

On the 24th day of the run, there were box office queues extending from the main entrance a long block up to Rockefeller's Center's International Building, then northward another block, swinging around and down on 52nd Street, the standees three and four abreast.

$7.70 Asked by Speculator

Itinerant ticket speculators took empty lofts around Rockefeller Center, and were charging as much as $5 each for a $1.65 reserved seat. One report came direct to Motion Picture Herald that $7.70 was asked for a reserved seat over a weekend. Either price is the highest ever paid for a seat to a continuous-performance show.

The Music Hall management made every effort to curb the speculators, having a dozen of them arrested.

Speculators used unique means to get reserved tickets, writing orders on stationery of hotels, using names of doctors and other men in public life. They also sent telegraph boys to the theatre to pick up seats for them.

The Music Hall installed a special telephone system, in addition to the regular board, to handle reservations for the few hundred $1.65 reserved loges available, and took space in New York newspapers to advertise the special new number to be used.

Calls came in at the rate of 150 an hour, according to W. G. Van Schmus, managing director, who engaged special operators to handle the reserved seat business.

Oppose Double Billing

Out of the Music Hall test engagement came certain definite conclusions on the part of RKO and its sales and circuit executives, to aid in determining the selling and exhibition characteristics of this new entertainment form. They served, too, to answer the intra-trade discussion prevailing prior to and since the opening. That discussion and attendant conversations among distribution executives and circuit buyers, competitive and otherwise, has been as widespread as any inspired by any previous picture in the 40-odd year history of the commercial screen.

One of the conclusions drawn by RKO executives—dual-bill minded as the company's circuit is—established in the company's mind that "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," although a pen-and-ink animation, is definitely single-bill material, and RKO's own circuit, changing its prevailing policy for the occasion, will act accordingly when it plays the picture. At the same time the RKO sales department will work to convince other exhibitors.

Special Showings

The question of admission prices for "Snow White" was finally settled by RKO's sales department with a decision to urge exhibitors to establish a uniform price both for adults and children, and not to charge the usual lower rate for children.

Some exhibitors are reported even contemplating increased admissions, RKO reported, and in other exhibitor quarters it was reported possible that special showings would be given for youngsters during morning hours at regular prices.

RKO's distribution executives also say that the Music Hall test gave full opportunity to determine "Snow White's" strength in the face of the elements, citing the city's snow storms, gales, zero-weather, heavy rains, and wide, almost-daily fluctuations in temperatures throughout the first three weeks of the run, none of which appeared to have had any effect on selling to "S.R.O.," as the records show.

One big problem faced by the theatre management was its inability to effect a complete

THEATREMEN DISCUSS "SNOW WHITE" RUN

The record five-weeks run of Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" at the Radio City Music Hall will benefit subsequent-run showings, when the feature length cartoon is given general release, theatre circuit executives believe.

Typical of the executives' reactions were those voiced by Nate J. Blumberg, president of Universal and formerly in charge of theatre operations for RKO Radio, and Leon Netter, assistant to Y. Frank Freeman, who has charge of Paramount theatre operations.

Mr. Blumberg pointed to the fact that the picture attracts persons who ordinarily do not attend motion picture theatres and that in many cases persons are seeing the film more than once.

Mr. Netter said the long run at the Music Hall should be a chief exploitation asset when the film is booked into other theatres. "If anything," Mr. Netter said, "I think the long run at the Music Hall will help the picture in other theatres."

the poisoned apple the old Witch is offering Snow White and drive the hag away, the Sinister Theme identified with the Witch alternates with a Woodland Hurry of the birds flying to Snow White's aid, a striking musical contrast in which the alarmed chirps of the birds are ingeniously worked into the dramatic musical background.

The background music throughout is replete with these tonal contrasts, each descriptive of the action and situation. A nomenclature of their identifying titles from the working cue sheet would run the gamut of emotions and fantastic whimsy, as there are at least a hundred separate numbers—thematic, descriptive dramatic, giocoso, dance and song—in the elaborate and comprehensive musical score.

Of the extended background sequences, that used in the scenes where the Dwarfs returning from work discover their house is ablaze with lights and is evidently occupied (by some monster, they believe) and they approach warily to surprise the intruder, is a notable piece of musical underscoring. A Misterioso Giocoso interprets every movement and emotion of the little men. Sound effects reinforce the music —the creaking of a door, the stumbling of the goofy Dopey, the gusty blasts of Sneezy, the chirps of birds—startling the Dwarfs as they explore the cottage. This long misterioso, ending with wind effects when Sneezy lets loose a tremendous blast, is a classic example of mystery-suspense told in music, sound and action.

The Transfiguration music, descriptive of the metamorphosis of the Queen into the Witch in the "witch's brew" scenes, is another extended musical sequence that sustains and illuminates the sinister context.

The music descriptive of the chase of the Witch—a Dramatic Allegro which develops into a Furioso in the pursuit of the hag up the mountain, is a powerful tonal reinforcement to exciting action. A striking contrast is achieved after the conclusion of this dramatic scene, when Snow White is seen apparently dead, surrounded by the grief-stricken Dwarfs. An organ is heard playing a haunting pathetique, succeeded by a chorale of mixed voices and underlying harp music in the scenes showing the Prince coming upon Snow White's coffin in the woods.

Voices and a full orchestra join in a triumphant crescendo—combining "Some Day My Prince Will Come" and "One Song"—as Snow White and the Prince ride away to "happiness ever after."

The beauty, charm and appeal of "Snow White" is inescapable. It is something more than an adventure. Musically, it is a convincing demonstration of the power to mirror character, to give wings to action, to reinforce and intensify emotion and situation, investing even animated drawings with human attributes in a language that is universal.

It is typical of genius—that "infinite capacity for taking pains"—which characterizes all true creative talent.

The composers credited with the music of "Snow White" are Frank Churchill, Leigh Harline and Paul Smith. The lyrics of the songs are by Larry Morey.

turnover, scores of patrons staying on for a second or third view. On the other hand, it was claimed that "Snow White" brought "repeaters" back to the box office in large numbers.

They found, too, that "Snow White's" greatest business is done during morning and matinee hours, and that it benefits mostly by word-of-mouth advertising, as attested when the Music Hall confined its advertising virtually to its normal expenditure. Besides, there was an almost complete lack of exploitation campaigning directly tying in with the showing. The picture had the benefit, of course, of an unusually enthusiastic news press, and even general news and radio commentators dusted off their choicest superlatives. Many newspaper motion picture critics followed up their original reviews with comment on succeeding days.

Each Day Above Average

The net results, as shown on the graph, were that "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" played to far more paid admissions on every day of its run than the 17,000 general average daily attendance for the theatre.

The Music Hall management said that the attendance was as representative of adult classes as it was of juvenile, although the socalled "Big Apple" and "Shag" dancing "sophisticates" of early high school age were not so taken up at first with the idea of witnessing a "fairy tale." However, they came along later. Public and some private schools permitted students to take off a half-day to see the show.

Actually, three trial-and-test runs are being conducted to gauge "Snow White's" box office possibilities, the most important of which, of course, is the Music Hall. The other two are at the Carthay Circle in Los Angeles and the Sheridan in Miami.

Los Angeles ran up a gross of $104,395 in seven weeks, playing to only two shows daily, averaging about $15,000 weekly, against a general weekly house average of $11,800. The week-by-week grosses have been as follows: First week, $19,300; second week, $20,479; third week, $14,800; fourth week, $13,214; fifth week, $13,000; sixth week, $11,298, and seventh week (ending Monday), $12,304. The Carthay Circle, besides showing to only two performances a day, as compared with the Music Hall's five, seats only 1,500, against the Music Hall's 6,300. The picture will continue at the Carthay.

Income from the Florida test is well over the house record of the theatre, the picture grossing $7,400 for a full week at the Sheridan at Miami Beach, where a four-day run had been the longest. This compares with the $4,700 record to date, made in four days by "Follow the Fleet," last February.

(Additional box office comparisons between "Snow White" and other outstanding performances of both silent and sound, were detailed in Motion Picture Herald on January 29th, on pages 22, 23 and 24, together with additional RKO merchandising plans for the picture, and further explanation of its sales policies, rental and clearance terms, and other factors concerning the commercial progress of the cartoon.)

Limited by Commitments

Because of previous booking commitments, the Music Hall management had to end the run after five weeks. It was compelled so to decide even before the potentialities of a longer performance could be determined. Broadway even now is considering how long an extension beyond the five weeks might have been possible, had the Music Hall had the playing time available. United Artists had pressed the Music Hall for a playdate for its "Adventures of Tom Sawyer," David Selznick's picture. It was United Artists which formerly had releasing rights to Walt Disney's product, and lost them when Mr. Disney preferred the arrangements offered by RKO.

RKO's own circuit, naturally, would rather have had the picture sooner for exhibition in New York at its 49 Metropolitan theatres, which hold the first-run exhibition rights following the pre-release at the Music Hall. Being a debtor to the Rockefellers—who own and operate the Music Hall—to the extent of some $9,000,000 in the present RKO reorganization proceedings, RKO, evidently, could not very well press the Music Hall to release the film after the Music Hall's original two-week booking commitment had expired.

Rentals Largest Ever

It is understood that the rentals accruing to the distributor from the Music Hall showing will be the largest ever obtained from a single "popular-priced" run for a similar five-week period, estimates variously placing RKO's share at from $140,000 to $175,000 for the five weeks, based on a reputed $25,000 per week flat rental and 50 per cent over $90,000 (or $95,000) of the Music Hall's weekly gross. Mr. Disney, of course, is a partner with RKO in the rental income. Mr. Disney's deal with RKO is a straight distribution arrangement, out of which the distributor receives some 30 per cent of the gross and the producer gets the remaining 70 per cent.

Royalties, Too

In addition to income from the film, the Disney organization is receiving a substantial income in royalties on the sale of books, dolls and novelties portraying the characters in the film.

Technicolor will not share in the profits of the production, but stands to benefit considerably from the extra color prints to meet the demand from theatres all over the world.

The reason for the apparent slowness of dating "Snow White" at other theatres is twofold, both having a definite relation to the picture's availability to subsequent-runs.

In the first place, the producer has been experiencing considerable difficulty in moving color prints out of Technicolor's plant in Hollywood. Considerable extra time is required for a color print over black-and-white.

More of a factor, however, is the fact that "Snow White" is being sold by RKO entirely on individual deals, and the consummation of the local pre-release or first-run dating, together with the length of that individual engagement and the extent of the protection purchased by the "pre-release", or first-run, will determine the available date for the local second and subsequent-runs.

Seven-Day Clearance

RKO's own theatres must wait seven days after the last showing at the Music Hall before they may play the picture. The circuit also is prohibited, by the terms of the Music Hall protection, from advertising "Snow White" in any manner as coming to RKO theatres before the expiration of the Music Hall's seven-day clearance.

In the case of the clearance held by RKO, however, the company intends to expedite availability to subsequent-runs by waiving about three days of its own seven-day protection rights, thereby making the picture available to second-runs approximately four days after it finishes on the RKO circuit, instead of the seven to which RKO theatres are entitled.

The RKO circuit first-run in New York will be for a full week, the company extending the split-week policy prevailing at its two-score Metropolitan theatres. The Music Hall's holding of "Snow White" for a fifth week delays the availability to RKO to February 27th, and to March 6th for New York subsequents.

In hand now are a few advance "Snow White" playdates, each of which would serve to indicate to subsequent-runs in the particular territory approximately when the cartoon will be available to them.

Preparing for Other Showings

The picture opens in Indianapolis on February 10th, at the Indiana theatre. In preparing for that showing, the management has been arousing attention through five daily 15-minute broadcasts on the Kroger chain, feature window cards in its 75 local and 112 out-of-town stores, and advertising the Disney feature in 25 delivery trucks and in special ads. Other advance Indianapolis promotions devised by press agent Frank Moneyhun include: Daily mention over WFBM and WIRE; two 60 by 80 "blowups" in Wm. H. Block Company's windows, and 25 special counter displays. This company has invited 1,000 youngsters to dress up as Snow White and the Dwarfs for a song broadcast from the theatre lobby.

In Cincinnati, three first run houses will show "Snow White". It opens for a week at the Albee theatre, starting February 11th, moves over on the 18th for a two-week run at the Capital, and goes to the Grant from March 4th to 10th.

Dinny Dinerman, press agent for the Albee, assisted by Paul Benson, RKO Radio special exploiteer, started the campaign there last Friday by persuading the managing editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer to rip out Sunday's movie-page layout and substitute an eight-color "spread" on "Snow White".

In Baltimore, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" starts an indefinite run at the Hippodrome theatre on February 11th. I. M. Rappaport, manager, said he is preparing for the longest run in the history of the house. Pre-exploitation of "Snow White" started last Christmas in Baltimore with the display figures presented in the windows of Hutzler Brothers Company.

DISNEY SEEKS CUT IN EXPOSURE TIME

An effort is being made to cut exposure time with a new lens design and improved illumination in preparation for Walt Disney's second full-length cartoon, the Italian classic, "Pinnocchio," Carl L. Bausch, director of research and engineering for Bausch & Lomb, announced this week in Hollywood.

Bausch & Lomb lenses were used completely for the filming of Mr. Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Mr. Bausch said, adding that he has been conferring with Mr. Disney's technical staff on the improvement of the multiplane camera by which the illusion of depth was given to the film. The camera photographs the characters, painted on celluloid sheets, in seven planes simultaneously, each plane 13 inches apart.

NEW EQUIPMENT AT LAST BRINGS REAL POOLING OF SOUND PATENTS

System Embracing Both WE and RCA Devices, Also a New Projector, Announced by General Theatres Equipment

by GEORGE SCHUTZ
Editor of Better Theatres

Final reconciliation in the actual machine of many of the industry's bitter sound patent fights has at last been effected. Equipment announced Tuesday by Earl G. Hines, president of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., has been designed with complete access to the devices of both Western Electric and RCA.

And in its manifold gears and gadgets those old issues of men and corporations have been logically resolved.

Further, since this equipment is the product of a projector manufacturer—International Projector Corporation—the announcement contributed substantially to the movement, now definitely underway, to integrate sound and picture in motion picture engineering.

Addressing representatives of the trade press, whom he beguiled at luncheon with pheasant and wild rice at famous old India House on New York's Hanover Square, just around the corner from Wall Street and the Chase National Bank, Mr. Hines said:

"Sound belonged to the projector manufacturer in the first place. Now we are going to have it."

The luncheon provided an official but informal occasion for the announcement of both Simplex sound reproduction equipment and a new Simplex projector, development of which was recently completed by International Projector for immediate production, with distribution to begin soon through the facilities of the National Theatre Supply Company. General Theatres Equipment, Inc., is the holding company controlling each of these firms.

The new projector, which represents redesigning of the Simplex mechanism throughout and introduces many radical departures from previous models of this manufacturer, was demonstrated at the International Projector plant following the luncheon.

All in One System

The sound equipment, Mr. Hines pointed out, brings together for the first time in a single reproducing system made by one manufacturer, devices representing patents of both RCA and Western Electric, whose competition in the early days of sound pictures raised the disturbing issue of "interchangeability," which raged around the denial of the right to reproduce on one of the two systems films that had been recorded by the other.

This issue of interchangeability was, in fact and terms of personality at the time, between John A. Otterson of Erpi, meaning the Telephone Company, and David Sarnoff, of Radio Corporation of America, meaning at the time also 60 per cent General Electric and 40 per cent Westinghouse.

The issue of interchangeability which so tore the industry in the United States was curiously and almost casually solved over tea at the Savoy in London one afternoon when Colvin Brown, then executive vice-president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., told the Marble Arch Pavilion to run, "regardless," a print of the inauguration of Herbert Hoover, as President of the United States, which had been forwarded by Terry Ramsaye from Pathe News. Mr. Brown, with an assurance of the practicality of the situation, guaranteed in behalf of Pathe that film recordings were interchangeable, even in England. It eventuated that they were. Now interchangeability is at last in one machine.

Complete Sound System

The Simplex reproducing apparatus forms a complete sound system, according to Mr. Hines, with the soundhead remaining an attachment to the projector as it has been in the past. Integration of the soundhead with the projector mechanism in such manner that it is essentially a unit of a single, inseparable film-reproducing mechanism may be realized at some distant date, but is not contemplated, it was stated, in any current plans of International Projector.

The new projector, which has been named the Simplex E-7, is to be available for demonstration at all National Theatre Supply Company branches February 21st. In general, the new design is simpler than previous models, including the Super-Simplex, with fewer parts and provisions for easier maintenance.

There are additionally many distinctly new operating features, among them a double shutter arrangement for the purpose of increasing effective illumination of the image. Besides a rear shutter, there also is one in front of the projector lens, as in the days before the rear shutter was developed. These shutters are synchronized in both design and revolutions to cut off the light simultaneously, each masking one-half of the image and reducing the interval of complete screen darkness by one-half, and accordingly doubling the period of full illumination. The effect may be said to be that of a dissolve.

Improved oiling provisions have been made throughout the new mechanism for the purpose of eliminating contact of oil with the film. One of these provisions consists of a lubricant feed device called a "one-shot" oiling system. An oil reservoir is located so as to be readily accessible from the operating side, and this is provided with a lever which releases oil as needed, the tension of the lever indicating whether enough lubricant has been made available. This system provides lubrication for practically all moving parts not running in their own lubricant.

New Fire-Prevention Device

A new fire-prevention device has also been introduced into the design. Should the film stop at the gate, relaxed tension releases a wire loop, which presses against a curved trip, causing a free-falling (ungrooved) shutter to drop. This shutter cannot be raised until the mechanism is stopped and the piled-up film removed.

Among other notable features of the new design are construction of the film gate so as to allow its ready removal as a unit, cone-shaped pad springs to equalize tension at both sides of the film, extended tension shoes and means of adjusting tension (the entire film trap is readily demountable, permitting easy removal of any emulsion that may have been scraped from green film), and special guide plates to prevent lateral film movement.

The interior of the mechanism housing is finished in white to effect a high level of visibility and to make dirt more apparent. The interior can be well illuminated for threading by a reflector lamp at the top, while a special lamp operated by the fire-shutter lift lever is provided to illuminate the aperture while threading, thus facilitating framing.

More Lubrication Provisions

The intermittent movement is readily removable from the operating side. It has also been given new lubrication provisions. An oil hole in the side of the cam provides an oil cushion between the cam and star-wheel, and any excess oil flows out at the driving side where it cannot come in contact with the film.

Both the projector and the sound system were designed under the supervision of Herbert Griffin, vice-president of International Projector, with the sound apparatus developed under immediate direction of George Friedl, formerly of Erpi. In the sound equipment also, Mr. Friedl told the trade press, the design aims at simplification and unit

PROJECTOR COMPANY ENTERS 16-MM. FIELD

Manufacture of 16-mm. unified sound-projection equipment is being included in the expansion program of the International Projector Corporation, it was announced by Earl G. Hines, president, at the luncheon at which he described new sound and projector developments of the company.

Mr. Hines stated that this equipment is not being brought out specifically for use in any theatres to which 16-mm. equipment might be adapted, but added, in response to inquiry, that it would, of course, be available "to anyone who wishes to buy it."

The sound system, including heads, to be used with the 16-mm. equipment will be manufactured by RCA.

theatres in Florida is now showing "Snow White" in all its houses, dating bookings to the end of the winter resort season, on April 1st. After finishing at the Sheridan in Miami Beach, it moved to the Colony, in Miami, for an extended run, Lynch-Paramount then giving the picture preferred weekend dates at the Olympia, Paramount, Flagler, Regent, Rex, Roxy, Tivoli, Community, Hialeah and Coral Gables of this Greater Miami Paramount Enterprises.

"Snow White" opens its Cleveland engagement at Warners' Hippodrome, starting February 12th.

Record RKO Circuit Deal

Actual negotiations were only completed this week Thursday by Ned E. Depinet, vice-president of RKO Radio, and Roy Disney, business manager of the Walt Disney Productions, whereby "Snow White" will play every house of the RKO Theatre Circuit, including its Metropolitan houses in New York, Brooklyn and New Jersey. The deal gives "Snow White" the longest playing time ever given any picture in each RKO situation.

Following the completion of contractual details, Roy Disney left for the studios in California.

"Snow White" will be opened by RKO in Boston and Providence on February 10th; in Cincinnati, Dayton and Washington, D. C., on February 11th. Other RKO dates will follow at Denver, San Francisco, Lowell, Newark, Rochester, Syracuse, Trenton, New Orleans, Chicago, Columbus, Omaha, Sioux City, Cedar Rapids, Davenport, Marshalltown, New Brunswick, Cleveland, Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Des Moines.

50 Per Cent Rental Axis

The determination of RKO-Disney to set a rental of 50 per cent of the box office receipts as the point from which the company will bargain brings the story of the merchandising of the world's first feature cartoon to another turn. While RKO has set the axis of "Snow White" rentals at 50 per cent, the management believes that the capabilities of exhibitors on expectancies go both over and under that figure, that some can afford to pay 60 per cent, while others cannot afford the 50 per cent. (Forty per cent is the usual top industry sales rental.)

The company's home office in New York has said that some 60 per cent deals already have been signed, in the Northwest.

This much is certain, says the management: 50 per cent rentals will prevail for the most part for the top runs, and from there on the rental will depend on the outcome of the usual bargaining between exhibitor-buyer and exchange-seller.

The Independent Theatre Owners Association in New York, the Ohio ITOA and the Philadelphia independent owners are protesting RKO's request for a 50 per cent rental for "Snow White."

At a meeting held last week, the New York ITOA instructed the business manager, John Manheimer, to confer with RKO sales heads regarding a reduction. The organization also opposes the distributors' insistence that the picture be not double-billed.

"For the past few years exhibitors have contended that 40 per cent pictures with a Sunday opening are ruinous. Now comes RKO demanding not only 50 per cent of the gross but a Saturday opening and the elimination of the children's price," said the Ohio ITO this week.

"This picture," they added, "is a novelty and will undoubtedly do business, but we cannot see how any exhibitor can afford to give away 50 per cent of his Saturday and Sunday receipts and, at the same time, incur the resentment of his regular patronage by hiking the price to the children."

First-run engagements of "Snow White" will be covered by a corps of special exploitation men working under S. Barret McCormick, director of advertising and publicity.

Each man will be equipped with special story and pictorial material for newspapers and will assist the theatre managers.

Seven Foreign Versions

Walt Disney is now busy on seven foreign versions of "Snow White" recording the picture in Spanish, French, German, Italian, Norwegian, Swedish and Dutch. Disney is employing professional native vocalists and elocutionists for the music and dialogue.

The company expects a very large foreign business. Demand for the picture already has been coming from Germany and Japan, both of which have not recently been good markets for American pictures.

Walt Disney already is at work on his second feature cartoon, to be based either on "Pinocchio," or Felix Salten's "Bambi," and to be ready in one year.

No other distributor has decided to enter the feature cartoon field, although Fleischer Studios have the matter under consideration, and if this company goes in for cartoon features they will be released through Paramount. Also, Leon Schlesinger, who produces cartoons for Warners, has a plan for a feature-length subject to cost about $700,000. A decision may be made after he returns from his present Mediterranean cruise.

Paramount Plans World Campaign

Exhibitors of Paramount Pictures throughout the world will participate in a "Paramount on Parade Around the World" drive under the terms of a plan announced by the company this week. A series of cash prizes by the company will be awarded to the exhibitors both in the United States and abroad for the most effective advertising and publicity campaigns achieving the best net results during the drive, which will run 13 weeks, starting February 27th and ending May 28th.

The perfect score will be 100 points, of which 50 will be scored on the merits of the campaign and 50 on the net results achieved. In the United States there will be five divisions of competition based on the size of the cities where the theatres are operated. In each division there will be a first prize of $500, second $250, third $150, fourth $100 and four prizes of $50 each, making a total of $1,200.

In the foreign field one first prize of $500 and one second prize of $250 will be awarded. In addition to the cash prizes a plaque will be awarded as a grand international prize to the exhibitor submitting the best campaign in the entire domestic and foreign competition.

The contest will be open only to theatre managers of houses playing Paramount product.

New Equipment Brings Pooling Of Sound Patents

construction. Technical details of this equipment were not released, but Mr. Griffin said that the design of the sound apparatus contemplated one general type of system, with minimum output sufficient for capacities up to 1,000, and more powerful systems provided by the addition of the required units.

Plant Facilities Increased

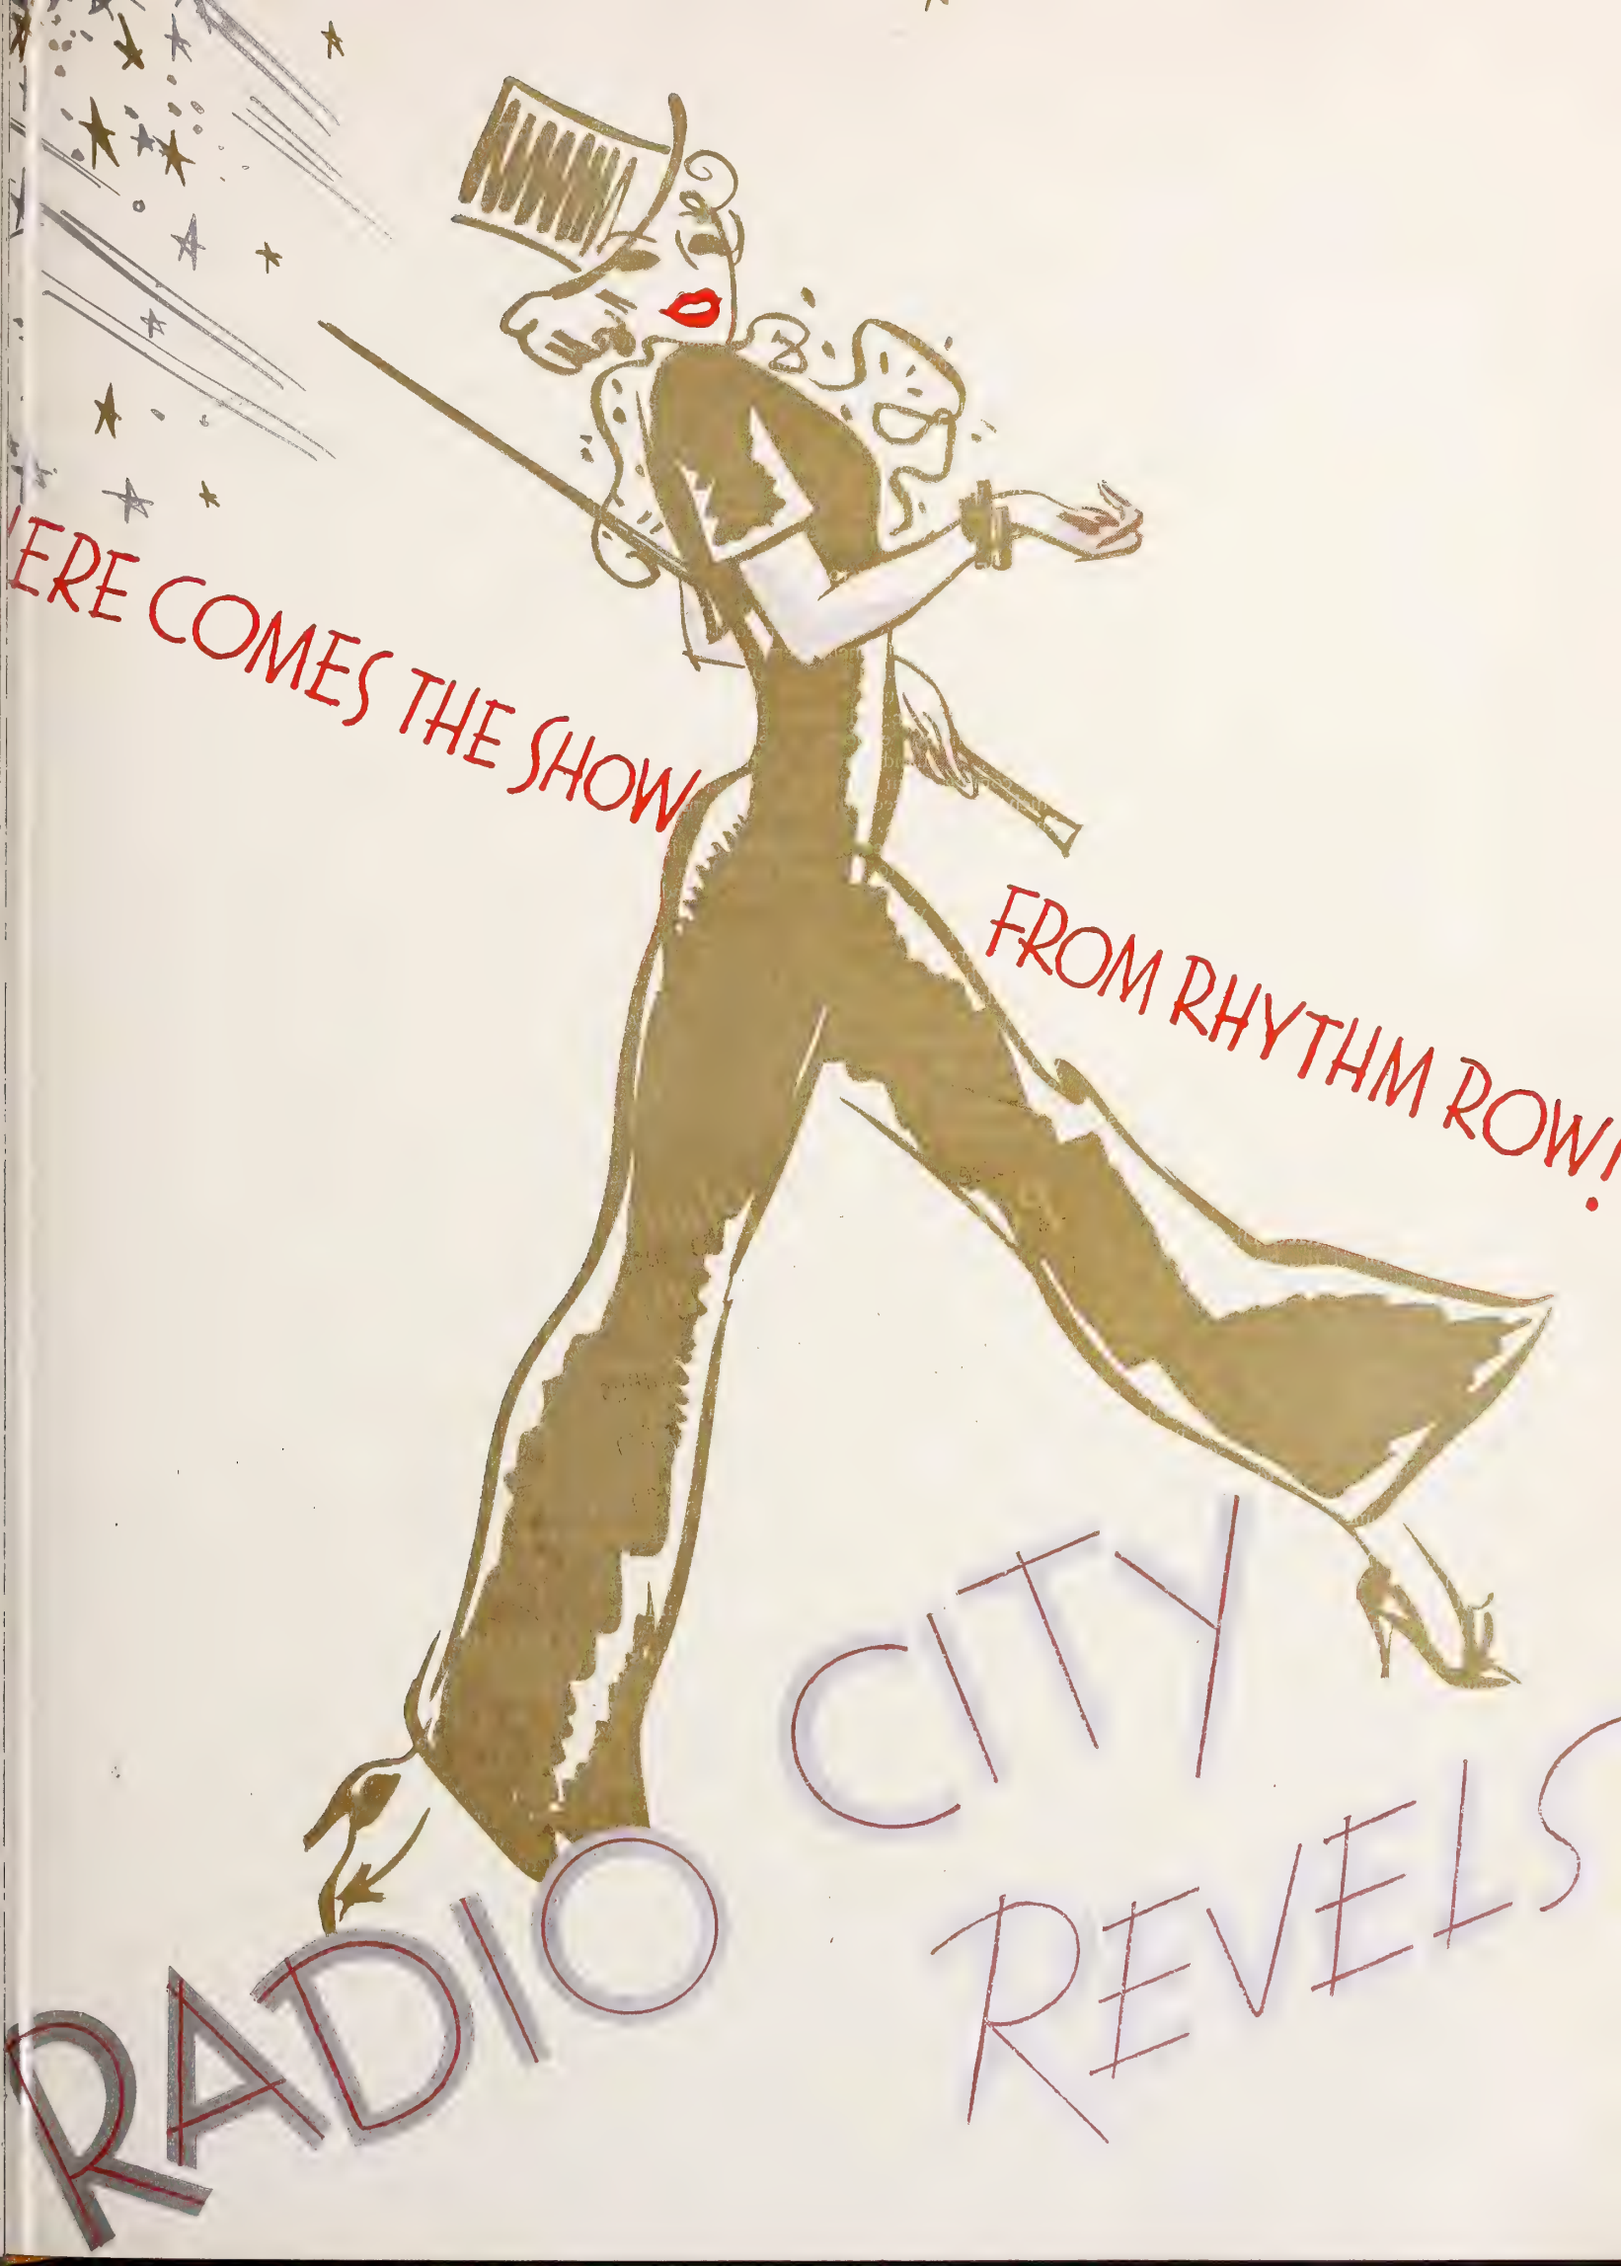
Entrance of International Projector in the sound field has incurred increase in plant facilities requiring about 80,000 square feet of additional space, according to Mr. Hines, and also the addition of about 200 employees. Additional manufacturing quarters have been acquired in a building immediately adjoining that shared by the projector company and National Theatre Supply at 92 Gold Street. Practically all of the sound equipment, except horns, will be fabricated in this plant.

Executives and technicians of General Theatres Equipment and its two subsidiaries present at the luncheon were, in addition to Mr. Hines:

Walter E. Green, president of National Theatre Supply Company; Mr. Griffin, A. E. Meyer, sales manager of International Projector Corporation; E. M. Hartley, director of sound sales for National; Mr. Friedl, director of sound engineering for International Projector; and P. A. McGuire, advertising manager of the latter firm.

Representatives of the trade press present included Terry Ramsaye, A-Mike Vogel, George Schutz and F. H. Richardson of Quigley Publications.

Trust Suit Marked Off



After 12 adjournments, John C. Knox, judge of the United States district court in New York, this week marked off the calendar the $55,953,125 Sherman Anti-trust suit brought by Vocafilm Corporation against American Telephone and Telegraph, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc. The court said the case could be restored to the calendar when both sides are ready.

Toronto Houses Acquired

Twentieth Century Theatres Limited, Toronto, headed by N. A. Taylor, prominent in independent theatre circles of Ontario, has acquired two more houses in Toronto, the Brock and Kenwood theatres in the West End which were operated for many years by Sam Lent. Twentieth Century is now operating upwards of 20 houses across the Province of Ontario, all of which have been acquired during the last two years.

KC Houses Reopened

Theatres that have reopened in Kansas City include the Bijou, Roanoke, and La-Salle, Mutual Theatres unit. Fox Midwest is expected to reopen the Brookside within a few weeks. The Empress, downtown first run theatre, is also planning to reopen in a few weeks.

WPA PLAY JUGGLES THEIR WORDS TO DRAW 'BOOS,' SENATORS CHARGE

Friends of Byrd, Andrews and Tydings Say "One-Third of a Nation" Associates Them With Evils of Slums

The threat of an investigation of the WPA Federal Theatre Project arose in Washington this week after three senators charged that they are depicted as villains in a New York City production which is supported by government funds.

"I don't think Americans are responsible for this kind of presentation," declared Senator Charles O. Andrews, of Florida. "I don't know much about New York, but I have liked its theatres. I think some foreign element must be behind this."

Mr. Andrews and Senators Harry F. Byrd of Virginia and Millard D. Tydings of Maryland are the three Congressmen reported by the New York Herald Tribune as being irked by the play, "One-Third of a Nation."

The newspaper article was met with an official silence at the Federal Theatre Project's New York office, but "unofficially" it was said: "It looks as if someone has gotten to the three senators and given them the wrong idea."

"Calculated to Draw Boos"

It was denied, still unofficially, that there was any intention of holding the three senators up to opprobrium, as the newspaper had reported. The spokesman also pointed out that the relief-paid actors who portray the trio of lawmakers use lines taken directly from the Congressional Record.

However, the newspaper also pointed out that the senators did not claim they are misquoted but that they did contend their speeches were edited in a manner "calculated deliberately to draw boos."

The play, and the resultant furore in Washington, revolve around the senators' fulminations in regard to the low cost housing bill which was adopted after its introduction by Senator Robert F. Wagner, Democrat, of New York.

The New York WPA spokesman, who refused to be quoted, explained that the presentation in question was part of "The Living Newspaper." The scene in which the "senators" appear lasts only 20 seconds, he said, and "we had to cut down the speeches to get them in. The scene is just part of the general picture on housing conditions that we are attempting to present."

How It's Presented

"Before this scene," the Herald Tribune pointed out, "fire, disease, crime and poverty stalk the boards. Even as the staged senatorial discussion proceeds, there is a scenic fadeout and a symbolic presentation of the collapse of an old tenement with shouted news of death to 21 people.

"Friends of Senators Byrd, Tydings and Andrews say they are thus associated with all the social evils and calamities of the slums. They point out that in this role, with the aid of public money voted by the Senate, they may be presented to audiences throughout the country."

The newspaper then called attention to the fact that, in addition to playing in theatres, the WPA has used trucks to carry a caravan theatre to the public parks. The article also brought out that the project claims past attendance figures of 20,000,000 across the nation.

Why the Senators Object

The newspaper went into detail to explain why the presentation drew the ire of the Senators.

"On the stage," the article read, "a spotlight picks out Vice-President John N. Garner. Senator William E. Borah, Republican, of Idaho, asks: 'Why do we have these awful degraded conditions?' Senator Wagner speaks of low incomes and the fact that slums would not exist if there were 'a more fair distribution of the wealth of the country.'

"Bright Lights" Is Reason

"Senator Andrews is then portrayed saying that the government ought not to induce people to come in from foreign countries or elsewhere by supplying them with homes. He declares that the 'bright lights' have attracted people to New York City from everywhere, 'and that is one reason why there are so many millions in New York without homes.'

"Senator Byrd is presented as offering an amendment, 'the purpose of which is to prevent the extravagance which has occurred in other homestead projects throughout the country. This amendment is presented for the purpose of preventing the expenditure of more than $4,000 a family unit.' No mention is made on the stage of the Senator's specific citations of government housing extravagances, but Senator Wagner is put under the spotlight to declare the amendment would kill the bill.

Eliminate Sentences

"The stage script took two separated sentences uttered by Senator Byrd from the Record, but eliminated two intervening sentences, namely, 'I asked the senator from New York (Mr. Wagner) what he estimated would be the average cost of these family units. He said $4,000, or $1,000 a room. 'After the Wagner mention of killing the bill, the script gives another half sentence to Senator Byrd, ending with the words, 'I am thoroughly in accord with that.' In the Record itself this half sentence was far removed from the quotation assigned to the actor of the Wagner role.

"The play gives Senator Tydings a couple of sentences supporting Byrd, declaring that if $4,000 will not provide housing for a family, 'then we had better give up slum clearance.'

"The Record shows that Senator Andrews voted for the housing bill, and that Congress adopted the Byrd amendment in modified form. Instead of the $4,000 limitation on cost, exclusive of land and slum clearance expense, as Byrd proposed, a limit of $5,000 was applied."

No Vital Changes Seen for RKO Executive Setup

Deliberations on the designation of new management in RKO are nearing a conclusion with no official indications up to this time that the company's executive setup will be disturbed in any vital respect.

With final decision still likely to be delayed for a matter of days no authoritative statement on what the results of the deliberations will be can be reported without qualifications, even at this advanced stage of the discussions. There are, however, definite indications that a number of preliminary decisions have been made and very substantial evidence that most of them will undergo slight changes between now and the conclusions of the discussions over management.

At the present time the intention is:

1. That Leo Spitz, president, will continue with the company.
2. That J. B. McDonough, former president of RKO Radio Pictures, will be designated for an executive post with well defined authority, presumably, however only until the company is out of reorganization.
3. That Pandro S. Berman will be designated production head.
4. That the present RKO Theatre operating setup will continue without change for some time to come.

Columbia and Eastman Kodak Declare Dividend

The board of directors of Columbia Pictures this week declared a quarterly dividend of 25 cents per share on the common stock, payable April 1st to stockholders of record March 18th.

Directors of Eastman Kodak Company on Wednesday declared a quarterly dividend of $1.50 a common share payable April 2nd to stockholders of record March 5th. A similar payment was made at the same time last year.

Milestone Sues Roach

Lewis Milestone filed suit in Los Angeles this week against Hal Roach Studios, charging he is owed back pay and is entitled to recover penalties and damages. The action is for a total of $81,666 and is based upon Mr. Milestone's contention that he was employed to direct "Roadshow."

Benny Goodman and his orchestra have been chosen the outstanding band to play the Paramount theatre, New York, according to the Second Annual Paramount Theatre Band Popularity Pool results completed this week. More than 2,000,000 votes were cast by patrons since last summer.

DUAL BILL ADVOCATES SCORE IN LOEW'S POLL

Practical Test at Box Office Also Shows Double Features Preferred by Most Patrons

Although not looking upon polls as the most practical method of determining theatre patrons' likes and dislikes in regard to double feature programs, Loew's Inc., through Oscar Doob, advertising director, conducted an informal, unofficial survey that showed dual bills are favored three to one over single bills.

"As a matter of fact," Mr. Doob explained, "of course there is no need for polls or surveys so far as the theatre manager is concerned. All he need do is watch his box office and the jingling there will give him all the straw ballots he needs. It would take but a few test bookings to let him know whether his public wants doubles or singles. This is particularly true of circuits that can make comparisons between similarly situated theatres."

"Practical Test" Made

As for Loew's position in regard to double features, C. C. Moskowitz, head of Loew's theatres, said: "It would simplify our operations and cut our costs if we could show only single features. But so long as the public demands doubles, we must serve the majority to succeed. Whenever that sentiment changes, we'll be for singles."

In addition to the unofficial poll, Loew's conducted what Mr. Doob termed " a practical test" to determine public sentiment on double bills.

"As recently as during the showings of "Good Earth," Mr. Doob explained, "it was arranged to run this picture single at several houses and double it up with another feature at comparable houses. The results showed the picture did more business with an associate feature. A test with 'Maytime' showed the same results."

Followed Protest Letters

In regard to the unofficial poll, Mr. Doob explained that it was made as a result of letters protesting against double bills.

"At first," Mr. Doob continued, "a majority of 'votes' came from advocates of single features—people living in the better neighborhoods and quite apparently middle-aged or elderly people. As soon as it appeared that the 'singles' might 'win' the election, the doubles-advocates began to pour in 'ballots' and within a week the doubles list overshadowed the singles three to one."

The poll, according to Mr. Doob, shows nothing new. The voting on a question like this can not be conclusive, he continued, because those who like doubles have them and therefore do not often bother to vote or express themselves. Those who want singles and have not got them, naturally make up the noisy majority, he concluded.

Bill Powell and Marlene Dietrich Seek Tax Rebate

William Powell this week asked the Board of Tax Appeals to review federal taxes levied on a 1934 salary of $195,000. Powell protested disallowance by the Internal Revenue Bureau of $22,732 he claimed as a loss on demolition of a home in Beverly Hills which he said was a business investment and not his personal home. The actor paid $74,046 in income taxes on his 1934 salary. His appeal was from a treasury claim for $13,433 more.

Marlene Dietrich filed suit in Los Angeles against the United States Government for $32,000, claiming she overpaid on her 1931 and 1932 income taxes.

MAGAZINE MAILS 150,000 BALLOTS

Cue, New York entertainment magazine, this week forwarded ballots to 150,000 residents in the metropolitan area, asking them to vote on the question of single versus double feature motion picture programs.

The decision to undertake an extensive survey was made after a test poll which was won by single bills by a vote of three to one in some locations and as high as nine to one in other districts.

In addition to requesting the recipients of the ballots to note their preference as regards single and double bills, the magazine also is seeking to determine which type of short subjects are preferred. The ballots also contain space for the voters to indicate if they would like to have any features revived.

Blumberg to Set Product Lineup

Universal's production schedule for the remainder of the current season and production plans for the 1938-39 season will be the chief topics of discussion at conferences to be held at the company's studio, starting next Wednesday. Nate J. Blumberg, president, plans to leave New York for the Coast Sunday for the talks with Charles R. Rogers, executive vice-president.

Larry Waterman, Mr. Blumberg's secretary, will leave the home office for the studio Friday to make arrangements for Mr. Blumberg's extended stay. John Joseph, advertising and publicity director, also plans to leave for the coast Friday and Marshall Grant, eastern story and talent head, left Tuesday.

Universal has four more pictures scheduled for release this season, two of which are not yet in work. No definite production plans have been made beyond that. The Danielle Darrieux and Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy pictures will be started first and the balance of the season's schedule will then be decided upon.

Film Troubles in Mexico Growing, Says Seidelman

Despite improvement in revenue, operating conditions in Mexico are becoming increasingly difficult and some of the American distributors are contemplating closing their offices in Mexico City, Sam Seidelman, United Artists sales manager for that territory, said this week on arriving in New York.

A record gross of 5,000,000 pesos, equivalent to $1,300,000, was done by the eight major companies in Mexico in 1937 with a total distribution of 420 features. However, labor's control of industry, censorship problems and mounting taxes make the continuance of business precarious, Mr. Seidelman said, stressing that despite the fact that American companies had their best year in Mexico last year, this does not mean that they made money.

There is an ever present threat of Governme confiscation of property, Mr. Seidelman said. Business men fear that the land confiscation which is well under way will spread and that, under pressure from radicals and labor unions, various types of business will be affected, he said.

Payroll overhead of the American distributors in Mexico City increased 150 per cent in the last 14 months, this being accounted for by higher salaries and larger staffs brought about by compulsion from the highly organized labor unions, he reported.

Censorship is becoming more strict, he said. While officially there is no film censorship in Mexico, the authorities point out what deletions they would like to have made and if the distributors or exhibitors do not comply they are penalized in various and devious ways, according to Mr. Seidelman.

There are 428 wired theatres in the country and not more than 12 which still play silent pictures, that is, sound pictures without the sound track, he said. Twenty-five theatres were built in Mexico in 1936 and four large houses are under construction now in the capital city, with seating capacities ranging from 4,200 to 5,500. He added, however, that no further theatre construction is in sight.

Mr. Seidelman cited "Aya El Rancho Grande," made in Mexico City, to show that domestic product is making headway. The picture cost a little more than $20,000. United Artists is distributing the film in Latin America, exclusive of Mexico and has already turned over 250 per cent more than the cost of the picture to the producer, in addition to United Artists distribution charges. The company will distribute "Refugees in the Embassy of Madrid," produced by the Fama company, he said.

Mr. Seidelman will remain in New York for conferences with Arthur Kelly, foreign manager, who is expected to return from a cruise in two weeks.

Buenos Aires Critic Arrives

DYNAMITE, SNOW, BONFIRES, BAND AT WEAVERVILLE "GOLD" PREMIERE

And New Friend Fires Three Bullets Into Screen When Barton MacLane Is Roughed Up Early in the Picture

by GUS McCARTHY
in Weaverville, Cal.

Not since the day, more than three quarters of a century ago, when the first gold nuggets were washed out of its rugged mountains has the isolated little hamlet of Weaverville been the scene of so much wild excitement. The cause of all the furore of the town's entire population of 850 and some 2,500 visitors was the world premiere of Warner Brothers' "Gold Is Where You Find It." (Previewed by William R. Weaver in the January 22nd issue.)

For weeks the town had been getting ready for its big moment. Saturday night, February 5th, would put it on the map along with Hollywood, New York, New Orleans, Miami, even on the same map as Las Cruces, New Mexico, where eight or nine years ago MGM held the world premiere of "Billy the Kid." Falling snow, snow a foot and a half deep, rain, sleet and slush could not quench its ardor. And now the oldest and youngest inhabitants have a new wonder to brag about.

We lotus eaters from the sunny lands of Southern California had no idea of what we were going to run into when we left the train at Redding and boarded the bus for the ride up the mountains to Weaverville. It was cold in Redding and we were advised to outfit ourselves with galoshes.

Half way up the mountains we ran into snow, and how the bus managed to hang on to the narrow, twisting, slippery road was for someone else to explain. Fortunately the windows frosted and few realized how much cliff hanging they were doing.

Snow was falling and so was night when we reached the town. A couple of earth shaking dynamite blasts told us we were there. Then the crowd began to yell and the Weaverville Silver Cornet Band went into action. No sun arcs slashed across the sky. Instead the stars, George Brent, Margaret Lindsay, Beverly Roberts, Olivia de Havilland, Wayne Morris, Jayne Bryan, and the accompanying studio and press entourage marched down a gauntlet of roaring bonfires that roasted us on one side as we froze on the other, meanwhile slithering through the snow, slush and mud.

Weaverville's hotel accommodations are nothing to brag about, but what the folks lacked in facilities they more than made up for in hospitality. Graciously the stars distributed themselves around to be supper guests in the homes of persons to whom motion picture personalities are fabulous creatures.

The bonfires burned, the dynamiting continued, so did the snow, and the Silver Cornet Band practically blew itself out of wind getting ready for the coast to coast NBC broadcast. Then the red shirted volunteer fire department set about bringing order out of chaos.

We sought out manager Harry Butler, who formerly ran theatres in Minneapolis, to see what he was doing about taking care of all who wanted to see the show.

The little Memorial Hall, in which on Saturday morning hard bottomed orchestra seats had supplanted benches, could seat only 450 persons, but 1,200 or 1,500 had tickets, some paying the inevitable scalpers as much as $5.00 for tickets so that one day in some far distant future they could tell their grandchildren that they were there at the great event.

It is to be expected that those who were watching the picture (many of them having worked as extras and yelling when they saw themselves) would think it was the greatest ever made. But all the excitement in and over the film was as but nothing compared to that which a Mr. Charlie Haynes provided. It seems that, while the picture was being filmed, Charlie had made himself quite a pal of Barton MacLane. Early in the action, MacLane gets roughed up a bit.

Charlie, viewing the picture, didn't like that, so he whipped out his gun and took three shots at Mr. MacLane's principal assailant. The fire department quickly shunted Charlie out into the snow and cold, but he left his mark of three bullet holes on the screen.

After the show, willing hands quickly cleared the floor of seats for a cider-doughnut dance.

Somebody took good care to see that the cider was amply fortified with more volatile elements and the fun began. The local blades had a grand time dancing with the Misses de Havilland, Lindsay, Roberts and Bryan, while Brent and Morris swayed and stomped around with the mountain belles.

As dawn was coming—and so was a blizzard—the welkin was still ringing. The fires were burning out and the dynamiting had ceased. What happened to Charlie Haynes must have left an impression on the gun toting boys, for there was no more pistol and rifle firing.

A few of those who stayed up late gave a rousing send-off to the first party, which left about 5:00 A. M., but when it came time for the second party to board the bus for the slide down the mountains Weaverville was quite tuckered out. There were a few tired "Goodbyes" and "Come Agains," but most of Weaverville was tucked in bed. The falling snow had covered up the bonfire ashes. Weaverville had had its night of nights. Reporting it to the Redding paper, the Weaverville correspondent captioned his article—"COLOSSAL! SENSATIONAL! STUPENDOUS! AMAZING!"

It was. For nobody came to this grand opening in white tie and tails or tuxedos. Knee high boots, galoshes, corduroys, heavy wool shirts and stocking caps, snow shoes and skis that were parked outside were the order. We did see one girl in a shimmering blue evening gown, but there's always one girl at least in every mining town who wears shimmering silk.

Jurisdiction Vote Reveals Healing Of AAAA Rift

A rift which threatened the strength of the Associated Actors and Artists of America, newly revived as the central organization for talent guilds in the stage, screen and radio fields, apparently was healed last week when the Screen Actors' Guild voted with a majority of the other talent unions to dismiss charges brought against the Chorus Equity Association. The charges held that the Association had failed to organize its field and their dismissal gave Chorus Equity continued jurisdiction in the night club and presentation house fields, a jurisdiction which had been claimed by the American Federation of Actors.

The AFA was reported maneuvering for support of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees in an effort to extend its jurisdiction, but its future course, in the light of the vote by the Four A's board, was not disclosed. Ralph Whitehead, AFA head, was absent in Florida.

An investigating committee appointed by the Four A's board is to report next week on complaints that the AFA is giving active support to the IATSE claim of universal jurisdiction in the entertainment field.

The Screen Actors' Guild, which had some inclination to support the AFA claim, voted with the majority of the other unions to dismiss the charges, indicating that a truce with the parent organization had been effected. Kenneth Thomson, executive secretary of the Guild, left New York for Hollywood immediately after the meeting.

Eight Hour Day to Be Asked

The Screen Actors' Guild was reported in Hollywood to be considering presentation to producers of a demand for an eight-hour day for all actors. Indications were that the demands would be presented at the next meeting of producers and Guild heads in April and that they would cover senior and junior Guild members and extras. Although it was believed producers would refuse the proposal Guild officials were reported confident that resort to arbitration, required under the present Guild contract, would result in a victory.

Playwrights' Suit Dismissed

A suit for $200,000 for libel damages brought by Screen Playwrights, Inc., against the Screen Writers' Guild over what was claimed to be a defamatory letter written to a Playwright member by a guild member during the recent membership drive of the rival groups was dismissed this week in Los Angeles Superior Court.

SUBSIDY FOR LEGITIMATE THEATRE IS SEEN AS THE REAL AIM OF SIROVICH

Would Carry on Job of "Reviving American Art" Started by WPA, House Patents Committee Is Told

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

Representative William I. Sirovich's widely touted plan for establishment by Congress of a Federal Department of Science, Art and Literature was this week stripped of its verbiage and disclosed to be merely a subsidy for the legitimate theatre, to which the Congressman himself has contributed as a playwright.

Witnesses appearing before the House Patents Committee Monday, at the opening of a new series of hearings on the New York Congressman's resolution, unwittingly made the disclosure when they told how ten subsidized theatres throughout the country, guaranteeing 40 weeks' performances, would revive the stage and enable it to withstand the onslaughts of the films and radio and the anticipated raids of television.

The proposed department, the committee was told, could carry on the work of reviving American art which was started by the Works Progress Administration theatre project, but now unfortunately, according to Morris Watson, vice-president of the American Newspaper Guild, in the hands of Army officers with little regard for culture and the mores.

Represented at the hearings were the legitimate actors, the writers, the artists and other groups which have had to resort to WPA help. These were the "Arts." Unrepresented were such activities—not arts—as have been able to struggle through the depression, among them motion pictures and radio.

"As Many As Possible"

Profundities far beyond the comprehension of this reporter were voiced by witnesses, among them the following gem from the lips of Burgess Meredith, acting president of Actors' Equity:

"Since the job of the Government is to benefit as many people as possible, it seems to me a bureau of fine arts should benefit as many people as possible."

The theatre has failed, he explained to the committee, "because it has taken some time to accommodate itself to the new mechanical arts which have developed."

"Don't you think the motion picture industry and radio have been a great contributory factor to the decline of the drama?" Representative Sirovich, chairman of the committee, asked sadly.

"In my opinion, the mechanical arts have caused the theatre to make a readjustment, have diminished the theatre for the time being, but at the same time have given great strength to the theatre because they have forced the theatre to find new forms," Mr. Meredith replied.

As for Television——

"When a man or woman becomes a great artist in one or two productions in New York and is paid $500 a week, the motion picture industry comes along the following month and takes that actor or actress away and pays them $3,000 or $4,000 a week," the Congressman observed. "Will television, which is just around the corner, be instrumental in finishing it up?"

"I do think it certainly would take away more and more talent," the witness admitted.

"The United States is the only country which not only makes no contribution to the theatre but actually takes money away from it in the way of taxes," Mr. Sirovich concluded.

Whether motion pictures are art appears to depend upon whether you have worked in them.

While making no statement, Mr. Meredith's sentiments indicated that he has never been immortalized in celluloid for, in answer to a question by Representative Karl Stefan of Nebraska, as to whether motion pictures are as artistic as many stage plays, he said: "I cannot say I enjoy movies as much as a play, for no movie has quite the impact of a play."

Pressing the question further, Mr. Stefan asked for Mr. Meredith's opinion of "David Copperfield," which the Congressman apparently admired, only to be informed that "David Copperfield' was taken from a masterpiece and was a very poor reproduction."

"Motion pictures are a derivative art," Mr. Meredith added.

However, the Nebraska representative later was somewhat cheered when Blanche Yurka, who has appeared in films and, among them, "David Copperfield," said it was not only art but a "very excellent visualization."

The Difference

Miss Yurka was anxious to educate the committee, on which are representatives from Wisconsin, Nebraska, western Pennsylvania and other parts of what Chairman Sirovich denominated the "hinterlands," and explained that the difference between motion pictures and the theatre "is the difference between sitting back in your chairs and sitting forward in your chairs."

The actress admitted that stars left the stage for the screen to make money but took the crassness out of that statement by explaining that they wanted the money "to provide against the failure of miracles."

"The salaries are an inducement," she confided, "especially in the sense they will provide an actor with a security which may one day enable him to get back to the theatre."

Hearings Held Last Session

At the opening of the hearings, it was carefully explained by Chairman Sirovich that the matter of a Department of Science, Art and Literature was not new. Hearings were held on the measure during the last Congress, but were not concluded because of the pressure of other work, he said. Now the hearings are to be completed, and the measure is to be turned over to a subcommittee for such revision as may be found desirable.

Reporters at the press table are sitting through the hearings in the hope that some member of the plumbing industry will appear to explain one of the 13 "whereases" in the preamble of the resolution, which points out that "as the ancient Grecians made beautiful the most common articles of daily use, so in the last two decades the American people have demanded the application of art; that is, art in its sense of beautification, to the most common articles of their daily use and the old and ugly forms of utilities have been discarded for new structures, constantly being improved, that at least partly satisfy the growing artistic consciousness of the American people."

That "whereas"—No. 6—was by vote acclaimed a far higher flight of fancy than "whereas" No. 10, which explained that:

"The limitations of the olden stage have been removed by the motion picture, accompanied by sonancy, and the genius of dramatic authors and writers is no longer pent up in the Utica of confination to small stages and auditoriums but ranges the United States so that the lesser villages may now receive the same presentations as the major cities, and instead of fustian and buckram the backgrounds of film dramas are as realistic as if, as in many cases they are, they were the actual scenes of the words and actions of the plays shown on the films."

Mutual Admiration

Seven Works Progress Administration officials were called to testify before the House Patents Committee in support of the Sirovich resolution Tuesday. They submitted prepared statements totaling 18,000 words, discussing what the theatres, arts, writers and other projects were accomplishing but with no mention of the Sirovich proposal.

Mutual admiration was expressed by the committee and the witnesses for each other's work.

WPA Plans Four New Theatres in New York

Four new neighborhood theatres are planned or are under construction by the WPA in branches of the New York Puplic Library, Lieutenant Colonel Brehon B. Somervell, Works Progress Administrator for New York City, said this week. Eleven such theatres have been installed.

One of the largest is planned for the Port Richmond Library on Staten Island. It will have an auditorium seating 250 and will be fitted like an old Swedish meeting house, with walls of knotty pine and seats designed to resemble old church pews. The other locations are in Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn.

Laurels Appeal Tax

Redetermination of alleged deficiencies of $3,030 in income taxes for 1934 has been asked of the Board of Tax Appeals in Washington by Stan Laurel and Lois Laurel, his former wife.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Six Films Start

Hollywood did not bestir itself to any extent, so far as the business of starting and finishing pictures is concerned, during the first week of February. Reports that several recently released productions are enjoying extended runs probably have given the factory hands the impression that now is as good time as any to enjoy a vacation. Whatever it is, and no one seems willing to advance a theory, there must be a reason for the slackness. Companies continue to announce that they will have intensive production programs under way shortly, but outside of the frequency of the announcements, it doesn't seem that much is being done about the matter. If the present pace, or lack of pace, carries on, some day will come a realization that there will be a picture shortage. Then the fur will fly.

In the last six days only six productions were started. Two of them are almost certain to receive considerable attention. Five were finished. Of these, two and possibly a third most likely will be the centers of heavy exploitation barrages.

Monogram started two pictures. "Rose of the Rio Grande" will present Movita, Antonio Moreno, John Carroll and Lina Basquette. Tim McCoy, Judith Ford and Rex Lease are the principals in "Code of the Rangers." The titles identify the character of both productions. The title also tells what "State Police," Universal, is about and in which John King, Connie Moore and Larry Blake will be featured. "Fire over the Waterfront" also is meaningful. Republic is making it and it will present Rosalind Keith, Bob Livingston and Warren Hymer.

One of the important starters is "Alexander's Ragtime Band." A 20th Century-Fox feature which will have the personal attention of Darryl Zanuck, it will offer for names—and many more are to be added—Tyrone Power, Alice Faye, Don Ameche (the "In Old Chicago" trio), Jack Haley, Ethel Merman, Marjorie Weaver, Jean Hersholt, Helen Westley, John Carradine and Douglas Fowley.

The second potentially big picture is Warner's "All Rights Reserved," in which will be seen Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland, Rosalind Russell and Dennie Moore.

The list of films receiving finishing touches includes "Mad about Music" and "Madelon."

Universal's "Mad about Music" will feature its prize star, Deanna Durbin, in the company of Herbert Marshall, Arthur Treacher, William Frawley, Charles Judels, Jackie Moran, Helen Parrish, Marcia Mae Jones, Christian Rub, Nana Bryant, Elizabeth Risdon, Joan Tree and Syd Grauman.

The cast of "Madelon," MGM, includes Wallace Beery, James Stewart, Maureen O'Sullivan, Frank Morgan, Jessie Ralph, Cora Witherspoon, Charley Grapewin, Robert Spindola, the piper in "The Firefly," and Etienne Girardot.

Because Lou Gehrig, Yankee baseball player, will make his debut as a motion picture actor in it, Sol Lesser's "Rawhide" probably will be a talked about picture. It will also present Smith Ballew, Evalyn Knapp, Cy Kendall, Si Jenks and Arthur Loft.

Paramount finished "Tipoff Girls," formerly titled "Highway Racketeers." The cast lists Lloyd Nolan, Mary Carlisle, J. Carroll Naish, Harvey Stephens, Roscoe Karns, Larry Crabbe, Anthony Quinn, Benny Baker and Barlowe Borland.

"Condemned Women" was completed at RKO-Radio, Sally Eilers, Louis Hayward and Anne Shirley are featured. Also to be seen will be Lee Patrick, George Irving, Esther Dale, Leona Roberts, Netta Packer, Richard Bond, Rita LaRoy, Edythe Elliott and Frank M. Thomas.

THEN HAL ROACH TOOK THE DIRECTOR'S CHAIR

Ten years ago, a career as extra, actor, star and director behind him and enjoying the first fruits and profits of a producer, Hal Roach laid down his director's megaphone and became a suave, stoutish producer. The other day, John Blystone became ill and it appeared that shooting of "Swiss Miss" would have to be postponed pending his recovery.

Although Mr. Roach is keenly interested in an animated merry-go-round which operates some thirty miles east of Culver City, he heard about Blystone's illness soon enough. The visions of a holiday which danced before the eyes of the cast soon were dissipated as Hal planted himself in the director's chair and yelled, "Let's go."

For two days the cast went at a pace that brought to Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy memories of the good old times when a picture was considered an epic if it had more than a three-day shooting schedule. All were glad to welcome Blytone's return.

The Academy

For 10 months every year the offices of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, high up in the Taft Building, at the famous corner of Hollywood and Vine, are shrouded in cathedral like dignity. Administered by Donald Glehill, executive secretary, the suite is seldom the center of any excitement. The office force seems to go around on tip toes. Conversations are carried on in subdued tones. Only down in Gordon Mitchel's office, where as manager of the Academy's Technical Bureau he sometimes finds it difficult to explain a scientific advance in calm, casual words to a reporter who is anything but up on science, does anyone occasionally hear a voice raised.

But for about 10 weeks every year, from early January to mid-March, the cathedral-like silence of the Academy gives way to a condition that might be more properly descriptive of a madhouse. The occasion is the preparation for the Annual Awards. Dozens of extra employees, many unfamiliar with Academy traditions, are recruited. Hundreds of committee meetings are held. Thousands of nominating ballots are sent out, and, as all kinds of political skulduggery are to be warded off, only placid Don Gledhill retains much semblance of dignity.

Then comes the deadline for nominations and the counting of ballots that keeps the Committee on Awards Voting busy 36 to 48 hours at a stretch. In the meantime an army of correspondents has moved into the Academy offices and corridors. Everyone wants the first break. Everybody pulls strings. Rumors and reports fly around like debris in a cyclone, but not until every last nomination is down on paper does Mr. Gledell hand out the mimeographs, whereupon the exodus from the building looks like a panic. Probably no other happening in Hollywood is given such thorough world wide coverage as are the nomination announcements and the final awarding of the gold statuette and certificate trophies. To add to the Academy's stock troubles this year is a rather acute predicament. So many persons have requested reservations for the Awards ceremonies that it has been impossible to find a banquet hall in Los Angeles large enough to accommodate all.

And that condition is an odd commentary on the Hollywood state of mind. As the Academy prepares for its 10th Annual Awards Presentation Banquet, there lies behind it a trail of crises that more than once has threatened to wreck the institution during its short decade of existence. Sustaining members have seceded. Groups and branches have rebelled en masse to set up their own organizations. The Academy has been damned as representing everyone and everything except the ideals it was organized to preserve and enhance. Men who won awards refused to accept them. The Academy has been humiliated, its cherished trophies found in hock shops.

Yet, save for the 10-week pyrotechnical interlude, the Academy goes placidly on its way. As an organization, it is probably more influential today than ever before. Therein may be found the reason why some 6,000 persons have requested reservations for the 10th Annual Award festivities.

DISTRIBUTORS PONDER VALUE OF COOPERATIVE THEATRE ADVERTISING

Warners Drop "Co-op" Plan, Supplant It With System Giving It Complete Control; Other Companies' Attitudes

Several of the large distributors appear to be displeased over the lack of cooperation from some exhibitors in the manner of "cooperative advertising," in which the theatre and the sales company split the costs of local ad campaigns for a particular picture.

Warner Brothers this week discontinued its cooperative advertising policy, supplanting it with a system under which the distributing organization will have complete control over any advertising campaigns in which it shares costs.

Mort Blumenstock, head of the company's New York advertising and publicity department, explained the company's position by declaring: "Cooperative advertising as it has been practiced is going to be dropped. We feel we have been imposed upon by some exhibitors."

Although it was widely reported that other companies would adopt a stand similar to that taken by Warner Brothers, a check with other distributors failed to disclose any plans for radical changes. In most cases, officials said they believed some exhibitors did not carry out their share of advertising campaigns but that distributors were forced to look upon the condition as something to expect.

However, at United Artists a spokesman of the company announced that "we're going to get tough" with exhibitors, who adopt small budgets and then look to the company to share the cost of advertising above the budget.

The United Artists official pointed out that his company was forced to enter into cooperative campaigns for virtually all of its pictures because the individual producers who distribute through the company are interested only in their own pictures.

In other companies, he continued, cooperative campaigns can be undertaken for a few pictures and those campaigns will carry the company's other pictures.

United Artists, however, insists upon the right to draft the advertisements used by exhibitors in a cooperative campaign. The chief purpose of United Artists campaigns, the official explained, is to obtain long running time and "we believe we can lay out the ads to better advantage than the individual exhibitor."

The United Artists official, Robert Gillham, advertising director at Paramount; Charles E. McCarthy advertising head at Twentieth Century-Fox, and an advertising official of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, expressed themselves as strongly in favor of cooperative campaigns. All plan to continue their present policies without any change.

At Universal, John Joseph, advertising and publicity director, said his company has not decided upon any set policy. But, he added, "we're not going to spend any money foolishly." Small sums, he explained, were expended on "You're a Sweetheart" and in some locations where cooperative campaigns were undertaken the results were not as good as in cities where the exhibitor shouldered the entire cost.

RKO Radio also has no set policy, according to Barrett McCormick, advertising and publicity director.

One distributor's representative ridiculed the idea that an exhibitor could impose upon a distributor in a cooperative campaign. It is a simple matter, he explained, for the distributor to know the average budget of an exhibitor.

A check is kept on his advertising over a long period and an average is taken, he continued. After that, he added, it is just a matter of getting tear sheets and measuring the advertisements to know whether an exhibitor is living up to the agreement.

Another advertising head traced the present friction between exhibitors and distributors over cooperative advertising to the depression days of 1932 and '33. At that time, he explained, virtually every exhibitor pared his budget to the bone and now many of them refuse to increase their budgets.

SHANGHAI TAX AIDS REFUGEES

The French Municipal Council in Shanghai recently levied an amusement tax. The tax was designed for the benefit of the thousands of refugees who swarmed into Shanghai from neighboring towns and villages. The tax is said to be the first of its kind ever enforced in the history of Shanghai.

Joseph Schenck Bars Myron Selznick Agency

Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox, has barred the Myron Selznick agency from the company's studio. Mr. Schenck accused the agency of being "out of sympathy with constructive activities of the film industry."

Mr. Schenck issued a statement which said the Selznick agency sought to pyramid salaries of players they handle to where it would be ruinous to the studio and the industry. He invited players represented by the agency to do business direct with the company.

In reply, Mr. Selznick labeled the statement "farcical" and said the perspective of Mr. Schenck was distorted. Mr. Selznick said he took pride in increasing the salaries of his clients.

Frances Goodrich, secretary of the Screen Writers Guild, protested to Mr. Schenck Wednesday as follows: "Many members of this guild are served by the Myron Selznick Agency and they are by your ruling denied representation on the 20th Century-Fox lot. Since this is obviously unfair to these Guild members the executives of the Guild take this occasion to protest against the arbitrary exclusion of artists' representatives from a studio without a hearing before an established, impartial body."

Cochrane Resigns Universal Posts

Robert H. Cochrane resigned all of his official positions at Universal this week after having served the company in various capacities, including president, for approximately 32 years. Although Mr. Cochrane's attorney, Saul R. Rogers, said the settlement of the former president's contract involved a "substantial" sum, the terms were not made public.

The resignation of Mr. Cochrane marked another step in the J. Cheever Cowdin changeover of management which had its beginning when Carl Laemmle sold his control of the company to the Cowdin group some two years ago.

Since then Mr. Cochrane has been replaced as president by Nate J. Blumberg; James R. Grainger was succeeded as general sales manager by William Scully, from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; P. D. Cochrane and Paul Gulick were replaced as advertising and publicity directors by John Joseph, from RKO Theatres in Chicago; Willard S. McKay was replaced as general counsel by Charles D. Prutzman, of Mr. Cowdin's Standard Capital Company; Charles B. Paine, assistant to Mr. Cochrane resigned and Matthew Fox was named as assistant to Mr. Blumberg; and Charles Ford, editor of Universal Newsreel; Joe Weil, in charge of exploitation; Gus Schaefer, export manager; R. V. Anderson, newsreel business manager, and Edward Bonns, in charge of short subject sales, resigned.

The posts which Mr. Cochrane relinquished this week were chairman of the executive committee, director of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., and Universal Corporation and all offices held in subsidiary companies.

It was the second time within three months that Mr. Cochrane figured in the rearrangement of personnel. On November 30th, Mr. Cowdin announced that Mr. Cochrane no longer held the position of president. The deposed executive declined to accept the decision, pointing to the fact that his contract still had nearly three and one-half years to run.

Mr. Cochrane's association with Universal started in 1906 when, after newspaper work in Toledo and several years with the Cochrane Advertising Agency in Chicago, he joined the Laemmle Film Service as an advertising executive. In 1909 he became vice-president of the old IMP organization, Mr. Laemmle's first producing company. With the formation of Universal in 1912 he became a vice-president, continuing in that capacity until April, 1936 when he was elevated to the presidency.

Although succeeded last month by Joseph Seidelman, Mr. Schaefer did not formally resign until this week when he reached an agreement with Universal officials on the settlement of his contract which carried a 52-week cancellation clause.

CANDIDATES NAMED FOR ACADEMY AWARDS IN 17 PRODUCTION GROUPS

Ballots Will Be Mailed Tuesday; Voting Is Opened to Non-Members "With Established Qualifications"

With final balloting to be open to more than 15,000 professionals and technicians in Hollywood, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences this week announced nominations in various divisions for the tenth annual "Academy awards for distinguished achievements in motion pictures during 1937."

Ballots for the final voting will be mailed next Tuesday and the winners will be announced at the annual "awards presentation banquet" Thursday, March 3rd. The place at which the banquet will be held has not been determined.

The fields in which awards are to be made include production, acting, directing, writing, art direction, cinematography, sound recording, short subjects, film editing, assistant directing, music and dance direction.

For the first time in the history of the organization the voting this year will be opened to include not only the members of the Academy but also non-members with "established qualifications in all branches of production."

The committee's recommendations in these two divisions are made to the Academy's board of governors.

Sign Gene Austin

Ray Kirkwood has signed Gene Austin, radio, stage and motion picture player, to a five-year exclusive contract. Mr. Kirkwood will star Austin in six pictures a year the first of which, "Reno Magic," with story by Zarah Tazil, will start March 1st. Mr. Kirkwood is at present on a tour of exchanges.

"Hurricane" Canada Holdover

Samuel Goldwyn's "The Hurricane" has been held over for a total of 24 weeks in six engagements in Canada. The picture played six weeks in Montreal and Vancouver, five at Winnipeg and was held over for a third week in Toronto and Ottawa and a second in London, Ontario.

Elmer J. McGovern has joined Tri-State Film Company in Cleveland as editor.

AUSTRALIAN TREATY NOT TO AFFECT FILMS

Recent decision by the United States State Department to accord Australia most favored nation tariff treatment as a result of the Australian announcement on December 7th that import restrictions would be abolished, is not expected to aid American film exporters doing business in that market since film quota restrictions will not be affected by the treaty.

Australian restrictions on American merchandise were adopted in 1936 and included the adoption by New South Wales and Victoria of a quota for motion pictures which in five years was to raise from 4 to 15 per cent the ratio of Australian films to be shown. Because of the inability of the Australian industry to produce sufficient pictures to fulfil the quota, the premier of New South Wales last month announced, as reported in the accompanying story, that the ratio for 1938 and 1939 would be 3 per cent.

C. L. Gett Is Named Astoria Studio Head

Charles L. Glett, vice-president of Audio Productions, Inc., has been named vice-president in charge of operations at Eastern Service Studio, Astoria. The studio was recently acquired by Audio as a separate division. Mr. Glett has had long experience both in production and distribution. He was associated with United Artists and Samuel Goldwyn for a time.

Frank K. Speidell, president, said this week that the move is a part of the new development program of the company aimed to equip the studio with the most modern apparatus and to supply it with personnel so that producers seeking eastern facilities will have them at their disposal.

Elect Screen Club Officers

The Rocky Mountain Screen Club, Denver, in an election of officers this week named Emmett Thurmon, president; Mickey Gross, first vice-president; E. M. Loy, second vice-president; Henry Friedel, treasurer; Ross Bluck, secretary; Jack McGee, recording secretary; Duke Dunbar, counsellor, and Al Smullen, auditor. The board of directors includes Robert Cain, Jack Langan, A. P. Archer, Frank Culp, J. J. (Jap) Morgan, J. H. Ashby, C. J. Bell, Buzz Briggs, William Argren, Al Hoffman, R. J. Morrison, Mr. Thurmon and Mr. Gross.

Owen McKivett Honored

Owen McKivett, manager of the Warner Brothers Venetian theatre in Racine, Wis., was honored in observance of his 25th anniversary in the theatre business this week by 50 representatives of the Warner circuit at a regional meeting in Racine. Among those attending the meeting were James E. Coston, Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana zone manager; Thomas Saxe and A. D. Kvool, Warner-Saxe Theatres, Milwaukee; Charles Ryan, assistant zone manager, and Jack Keegan, district manager, both in Wisconsin.

MGM to Hold Production Plans To 52 Next Year

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will schedule the same number of pictures for the 1938-'39 season as the current season in which the company will release a maximum of 52 and a minimum of 44, Al Lichtman, executive assistant to Nicholas M. Schenck, president, said this week on his arrival in New York from an extended stay on the coast.

The company will have no national sales convention this year, regional conferences to be conducted by William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, and other distribution executives, being planned instead, Mr. Lichtman said.

"We don't need a sales convention," he observed, indicating that the company's policies and sales methods will be carried over without great change. The studio is making plans for next year and has lined up stories for the new season, he added.

Metro's plans for production in England do not include Alexander Korda, Mr. Lichtman said in response to a query in connection with reports that the London Films head had discussed the possibility while here.

The company's British production plans, will proceed as originally planned, Mr. Lichtman said, regardless of other companies' decisions to defer their production over there until adoption of the new British quota. The second British production, "Citadel," based on the novel by Dr. A. J. Cronin, will go into work in April, with King Vidor directing, he disclosed. This will leave four more to be made by MGM in London under the supervision of Ben Goetz, the first, "A Yank at Oxford," having been set for release this month.

Kenneth MacKenna, MGM story editor, who returned with Mr. Lichtman, reported that the studio had purchased two stories during his stay of a month there.

Standard Corporation Organization Complete

Standard Pictures Corporation, producing and releasing company, has completed its organization in Hollywood and take possession of the recently acquired Vitagraph studio March 1st.

According to present plans, Standard will make 18 "B" pictures this year with the possibility of distributing eight others made by a separate organization. Distribution plans are said to call for the establishment of exchanges in 30 American cities and in four Canadian spots.

Officers of the organization are: B. W. Richards, president and production manager: Lou O'Brasky, vice-president, and Charles D. Taylor, secretary and treasurer. The organization is financed by eastern capital which was not previously identified with motion pictures and which is represented by Van Rensselaer Sternburgh.

Statement and designation has been filed with Secretary of State Edward J. Flynn, in Albany, N. Y., by Imperial Pictures, Inc., to deal in films. Capital stock of $1,000,000 is shown, with shares priced at $1.

This Marriage Business

(RKO-Radio)

Comedy

Although several bits of sustaining melodrama and a liberal amount of love interest are to be included in the production, "This Marriage Business" nevertheless is being planned as a comedy. Its main theme has to do with a marriage license official who boasts the proud record that none of his "clients" ever has gone to the divorce courts.

The picture will star Victor Moore, in "Radio City Revels" and in "Swing Time," "Make Way for Tomorrow," "We're on the Jury" and "Meet the Missus." The supporting company is composed mainly of members of RKO-Radio's stock company, including Allan Lane and Vicki Lester, who have the second leads, Jack Carson, who was prominent in "Stand In," Jack Arnold, known to radio fans in the Myrt and Marge programs, Richard Lane, Frank M. Thomas, Cecil Kellaway, Bryant Washburn, a film favorite in the silent days, Paul Guilfoyle, Kay Sutton, Ida Vollmar, Richard Bond and Leona Roberts.

The basis of the production is a story by Mel Riddle, one time publicity man, and Alex Ruben. The screen play is credited to Gladys Atwater, lately associated with "Crashing Hollywood" and "Criminal Lawyer," and J. Robert Bren, who did "Double Danger," "Danger Patrol" and "Behind the Headlines." It is being produced by Cliff Reid, whose films include "Lost Patrol" and "The Informer," and directed by Christy Cabanne, maker of "Night Spot" and "Annapolis Salute" for RKO-Radio.

Release date: To be determined.

Tipoff Girls

(Paramount)

Melodrama and Romance

Planned to be full of thrills and danger-packed situations and, of course, carrying love interest, "Tipoff Girls" will trace the adventures of G-men engaged in breaking up a new kind of racket. To bring in a gang of crooks who specialize in hijacking cross country trucks loaded with valuable merchandise, the officers turn hijackers themselves.

The hijacking squad is made up of J. Carroll Naish, Evelyn Brent, Larry Crabbe and Anthony Quinn. Lloyd Nolan and Roscoe Karns are the G-men, with Karns naturally providing the comedy relief to Nolan's seriousness. The girl in the case is Mary Carlisle. Supporting roles are filled by Benny Baker and Barlowe Borland.

A general manager's office production, "Tipoff Girls" (the title of which is vague in its suggestion or description of theme) is being produced in the same fashion that caused several of Paramount's recent secondary features to receive favorable exhibitor and patron comment.

Several writers participated in the story's creation and adaptation, and the studio as yet has not arrived at a decision as to who will receive the credits. The director, however, is Louis King, who made "Bulldog Drummond's Revenge," "Bulldog Drummond Comes Back" and "Wild Money" for Paramount during 1937.

Release date: April 22, 1938.

College Swing

(Paramount)

Musical Comedy

In this episode of pretentiously produced and glamorous collegiate musical comedies, the value of which has been evidenced since 1933, Paramount will parade the flower of its comedy, singing and dancing stars.

Inasmuch as this will be the fifth number, the entertainment and production substance is fairly well known. Consequently, the matter of personnel is undoubtedly the factor in which most exhibitors will be interested.

"College Swing" will have Martha Raye, George Burns and Gracie Allen, Bob Hope (soon to be seen in "The Big Broadcast of 1938"), Jerry Colonna, eccentric dancing Ben Blue, Edward Everett Horton, the studio's glamour girl, Betty Grable, and her husband, Jackie Coogan, and Nell Kelly. Supporting roles will present Skinnay Ennis, Charles Trowbridge, Jerry Bergen, John Payne, June Ray, Cecil Cunningham, Tully Marshall and Irving Bacon. Specialties will be contributed by the Slate Brothers and St. Brendan's Choristers. A singing-dancing collegiate chorus will accentuate the eye appeal.

In gist the story is comedy. It concerns the experiences encountered by Gracie Allen as the first of her clan in two centuries to be able to graduate from college.

Idea for the production is based on a thought suggested by Ted Leaser which Frederick Hazlitt Brennan adapted and which comedy writing specialists Walter de Leon and Francis Martin whipped into screen play form. Direction is in the hands of Raoul Walsh, maker of Paramount's "Artists and Models" and "Hitting a New High" for RKO-Radio.

Release date: May 6, 1938.

Little Lady Luck

(Warner Bros.)

Whimsy

Although the major backgrounds will be race tracks and horse racing and most of its characters gamblers, racketeers, police and others whose business it is to be around race tracks, the main character of the story is whimsy that has considerable human interest content and its principal character will be a five-year-old girl, Janet Chapman, who Warner officials believe has all the earmarks of a potential child star.

An orphan child, who knows a father only in her dreams, is slightly injured in an accident when she strays from an orphanage. A pair of small time gamblers on the way to the track follow the ambulance and when they're halted for speeding, one claims the girl as his.

The group which fosters Miss Chapman consists of John Litel, now in "A Slight Case of Murder," Ann Sheridan and Frank McHugh. Other players are Robert Homans, Eric Stanley, Jean Benedict, Maureen Rodin-Ryan, Lottie Williams, James Nolan, Vera Lewis and John Ridgeley.

Albert DeMond and George Bricker prepared the original screen play and John Farrow is the director.

Release date: Sometime in March.

Stolen Heaven

(Paramount)

Melodrama with Music

Jewel thieves posing as musicians, police and an old concert pianist who dreams that he will one day play again, are the central characters in this story. Departing radically from formula, it is planned in "Stolen Heaven" to endow the crook-police entertainment recipe with many new elements which, in the hope of producer-director Andrew L. Stone, who is also the writer, will have unique exploitation value.

Yet the novelty of story, quality and scope of production detail appear to be factors of secondary importance, considered from a commercial viewpoint, when cast names are considered.

"Stolen Heaven" will present Paramount's prize star bet, Olympe Bradna, who was featured in "Souls at Sea," in her first leading role.

Members of the jewel thieving gang other than Miss Bradna are Gene Raymond, long with RKO-Radio, Glenda Farrell, seen in many Warner pictures, and Porter Hall. The aging musician is Lewis Stone, who makes his first appearance in years in other than MGM product. The supporting cast includes such competent players as Joseph Sawyer, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Douglas Dumbrille, Bert Roach, Esther Dale, Rolfe Sedan and Hooper Atchley.

Mr. Stone, who is filling three jobs, numbers among his various credits the direction of "The Girl Said No," Grand National. The screen play was done by Eve Greene, a collaborator on "Artists and Models" and "Turn Off the Moon," and Frederick Jackson, a participant on "Wells Fargo" and "She Asked for It."

Release date: June 3, 1938.

Torchy Blaine in Panama

(Warner Bros.)

Comedy Adventure Mystery

Unless exhibitors and the public display an interest in "series" pictures, producers abandon them. Consequently earlier numbers in the "Torchy Blane" films must have been successful, else the studio would not have decided to continue them, though Glenda Farrell and Barton MacLane, who created the roles of the newspaper woman and detective, have been succeeded in "Torchy Blane in Panama" by Lola Lane, seen in "Hollywood Hotel," and Paul Kelly, who has a long record of creditable performances.

The supporting cast features Anthony Averill as the dark, handsome, but sinister villain, Tom Kennedy as Kelly's comic chauffeur aide, and, in incidental and character roles, Larry Williams, Betty Compson, Frank Shannon, Joe Cunningham, George Guhl, John Ridgeley, Hug O'Connell, George Lloyd, George Regas and John Harron.

Anthony Coldeway wrote the original story which was adapted by George Bricker. William Clemens is directing. The photographer is Tony Gaudie, Academy Award Winner and the man behind the camera on "God's Country and the Woman."

Release date: Some time in March.

FROM READERS

URGES CULTIVATION OF SCHOOL FIELD

To the Editor of the Herald:

I have read with interest the article "Films Have No Educational Duty" appearing on page 17 in the January 29th issue of your publication.

I note that Mortimer J. Adler states that in his opinion the film industry has no educational responsibilities whatever, and while there is undoubtedly a great deal of truth in Mr. Adler's views, I should, nevertheless, like to express my sentiments on this matter.

Hollywood certainly does have no other obligations than that of furnishing distributors with suitable and acceptable film material. However, I do not think that the modern educator can deny the fact that some of the best educationals made have been produced in Hollywood, and while, as pointed out by yourself, certain individuals, who are loud in their criticisms of Hollywood material, should go to work with a camera to produce material which they think is acceptable, nevertheless, one cannot deny that such material could not possibly be of the finished or worthwhile value, since no other institution in the world possesses the facilities that are owned by our large producers.

In my opinion it is not a matter of attempting to dictate in censorship fashion what the product of Hollywood shall be. Technical films, research and scientific studies, etc., may perhaps be best produced by independent organizations, who wish to utilize this material in a rather limited fashion.

On the other hand, viewing many of the Hollywood successes of 1937 such as your historical studies (as we might call them from the educational viewpoint) and the ever popular biographical product, or other films of definite teaching, one cannot but feel that it would be difficult for any layman to attempt to compete with the finesse and artistry of Hollywood.

The statement, therefore, that schools and colleges should not take Hollywood seriously, when they are failing so miserably in giving adequate liberal education—as I construe Mr. Adler's remarks—I believe is somewhat paradoxical.

I believe the matter of contention has been and is "What shall be the method of distribution of films," not "What shall be the subject matter of these films."

When suitable and organized channels for distributing educationals have been established, I believe it will be Hollywood that will make these educationals regardless of subject matter.

It is not my thought that the present method of distribution will ever be discarded. The local distributor is an intrinsical and necessary part of the picture, but why should we take the stand that educational institutions should not be included?

I have great faith in and an abundant appreciation of the work of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and their efforts to route through school channels pictures having definite educational value. And I do not believe that the school or university will ever form a logical competitor of the theatre. Films used in schools and other educational institutions are used for the purpose of education, not entertainment.

It appears that the general public is gradually being educated in the acceptance of worthwhile productions which are not only commensurate with Hollywood high standard productions, but also are becoming increasingly valuable for their narrative or historical, or scientific contents, etc.

It seems to me that cultivating the school field, especially in 16 mm. sound with 16 mm. sound film, will result in increased earnings for local distributors who naturally could handle these films and tend to educate the child mind toward the type of films which producers could easily control, and would similarly add worthwhile films to posterity, as their usefulness in school curriculums would not be confined to a single showing.

It seems to me that we could very well blend the opinions of two conflicting camps at the present time, since I, for one, see in educational films not a competing medium but a real and practical solution to the problem of giving worthwhile films the fullest possible measure of usefulness.

Please understand that my remarks are not intended as personal criticism in any way, either in publication or its qualities, but simply that my opinions differ from those of Mr. Adler's.—John K. Crippen, Assistant Advertising Manager, Herman A. DeVry, Inc., Chicago, Ill.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Musicman Lou Greenspan tells the story about the Hollywood production supervisor who was supervising his first musical picture. The high-priced orchestra was rehearsing a hot number, and the leader was pepping the boys up:

"Forte," he shouted. "Forte!"

The supervisor felt this was the time for him to exert his "weighty" supervisorial hand in the filming. "Boys," he piped, "this is a big picture. I think it can stand fifty!"

Running neck-and-neck in showmanship efforts to establish new Broadway box office records these past few weeks have been the managements of the Music Hall theatre and the Paramount. Music Hall started opening its doors at nine in the morning. Paramount came back with a 7:30 A. M. opening. The Music Hall has been playing pretty little "Snow White" and the cute little "Seven Dwarfs." Paramount had the buxim Mae West, swooping through "Every Day's a Holiday."

Never having had anything like it before, some of the big-guns at RKO's home office in New York were frankly, but privately, in a speculative frame of mind over the box office success of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," when, at the Music Hall in New York, the picture opened to a mere $11,500 on the first day—"mere" in comparison to the $16,000 daily average which the picture grossed in the following four weeks. So, we wagered two-to-one with one of Radio's executives that this first feature cartoon would be the first feature in the five-year history of Mr. Rockefeller's Music Hall to play five weeks! The winnings will be reported on the income tax blanks next month—if they are collected.

Carrier pigeons were used to carry acceptances of notables for the world premiere of Samuel Goldwyn's "Goldwyn Follies" at the State theatre in Miami. The birds were delivered earlier in the week to the guests with instructions to place their acceptances in the metal containers on the pigeons' left legs and then release the messengers, which flew back to the State's roof.

Unionism has taken some unique turns in motion pictures, but none so humorously strange as the picketing of Werba's theatre in Brooklyn.

Seems that there were three beads on the scanty garment worn by Annette Margules, playing Tondeleyo in a stock version of "White Cargo." One of the beads popped off and was sewed on by non-union hands.

So the pickets came, picketed for two nights, and left only after the non-union bead was plucked and re-sewn by a unionist.

THAT distinguished radio and motion picture character, Charlie McCarthy, caused some uncomfortable moments in the editorial room of Vancouver's Daily Province the other day.

Edgar Bergen's young blockhead, a close friend of Mae (Adam and Eve) West, was nominated for the legislature, as a gag, of course, by a Saskatchewan political convention. A wheezy editorial writer of the Vancouver paper seized on the opportunity to toss off a bit of breezy humor, and learnedly wrote of the qualifications the dummy would have for public office—he could easily be manipulated, and, like many politicians, he had a wooden head.

The editorial duly appeared—as follows:

CHARLIE IN POLITICS

CHARLIE McCARTHY was nominated at Saskatoon, the other evening, for a place on the central executive of the Conservative Association. His name was applauded, but he was not elected. The members were not sure of his politics.

It is too bad. Charlie, if only given an opportunity, should go far in politics. He has quite a number of characteristics that would help carry him along.

He is voluble, and irrepressible, and his skin is, oh, so thick.

He is never at a loss for an answer. He is the champion maker of excuses. He can pass the buck to the king's taste.

He speaks up with the voice of the boss, and he dances when the boss pulls the strings.

And would it be too unkind to add that he has a wooden head?

The political writer was called on the carpet by the big boss.

"What are you trying to do?" shouted the chief. "Do you want to ruin us? Think of the libel suits, you dimwit."

"What libel suits?" queried the puzzled editorialist.

"Why, what do you think Mr. McCarthy is going to do when he sees this editorial? It accuses him of having a wooden head. And, incidentally, who is this McCarthy, anyway?"

On the other hand, Mr. Depinet's colleague at Paramount, Mr. Neil Agnew, doesn't care at all for hillbilly tunes. He likes playdates, too, though. But next to that gives his undivided attention to the stage. Particularly to the Broadway play, "All That Glitters." And to the beautiful Arlene Francis, who appears therein. She's Mrs. Neil Agnew.

Too, there probably would be the devil to pay if, dressing in a hurry one morning, for a date with the King. Joe inadvertently put on the long stockings of one of the kids and made the youngster late for school.

THREE BILLS AFFECTING FILMS UP IN NEW YORK

Ohioans Protest the Proposed Increase in Admissions Tax; Missouri Sales Levy Attacked

New York State's legislature now has in hand several films affecting the motion picture industry, reintroduced after having been defeated last year.

Included are the Moran proposal for an impost of five mills per foot taxation on films;

The twin Rossi bills designed to prevent sales of seats when none is available and to provide a matron for each 35 children attending theatres;

The International Alliance for Theatrical and Stage Employees-backed proposal for a full crew of two motion picture operators at all times.

Elsewhere there were legislative activity in Ohio, Georgia, Missouri and Minnesota and several local situations.

Earliest film legislation to emerge from committee in Albany was a bill of Assemblyman Harold B. Ehrlich, of Buffalo. Last session Assemblyman Ehrlich proposed a bill providing that children over eight and under 16 years of age be admitted to theatres where chaperones or matrons were employed. It was passed and signed by Governor Herbert H. Lehman. However, its companion bill never was nudged from committee and died, leaving on the statute books another section to the penal law which made it illegal for the above-classified children to be admitted without a parent or guardian.

Revenue Measure

The tax bill of Assemblyman Bernard J. Moran calls for revenue of five mills per foot upon every original film or copy thereof presented to the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Education for examination or approval. Operation of the tax would be invested in the Department of Taxation which additionally would be empowered to collect a dollar for each certificate proving payment of the levy. Mr. Moran's legislation was originally drawn up last session as a compromise bill.

Credited by some exhibitors as having the strongest backing of any film bill on Capitol Hill is the "full crew" bill thrown into the hopper last week by Assemblyman Robert Crews. Briefly it would require two projectionists in theatres of first class cities, New York and Buffalo. Other provisions require persons threading up motion picture apparatus to have a license; permit practical experience in lieu of apprenticeship as credit to applicant desiring to become a licensed operator; relate to hearings for revocation and establish certain other procedures. Sponsored by the IATSE, the bill, handled last year by Assemblyman Bernard Austin, was approved by the State Federation of Labor convention in Jamestown last August and made a "program measure" by the steering committee of the American Federation of Labor at a subsequent legislative meeting in Albany. State Federation of Labor President George Meany told MOTION PICTURE HERALD sometime ago that the legislation would be introduced in both houses "with full support" of his organization. American Labor Party bloc in the lower house and Committee for Industrial Organization are also understood to have approved the bill. To date, no Senate sponsorship has been obtained.

Assemblyman Nicholas A. Rossi has reintroduced his theatre capacity and matron bills. One measure would eliminate crowds congregating in the rear of the theatre when seats are not available. The second bill provides a matron for each 35 children attending any performance. Neither bill has ever progressed, though introduced each year.

Senator Arthur Wicks and Assemblyman Salvatore DeMatteo, the last named an American Laborite member, are sponsoring bills which accord 24 consecutive hours of rest to theatre firemen and engineers "in any calendar week," with the period from 7 A.M. to 7 P.M. to be included. Both bills are, however, essentially more important to the hotel and restaurant businesses.

Senator John J. Howard is the author of a bill providing that state police supervise and enact industrial laws in upstate communities, where no other responsible authority exists. A later amendment to the Howard bill also empowers county Sheriffs to engage in these duties.

Protest Higher Tax Plan

P. J. Wood, secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, is contacting state legislators to maintain the state gross admissions tax at the present three per cent level. Mr. Wood said Governor Martin L. Davey and some members of the Ohio Legislature want to impose a higher tax because the state needs revenue, but that the legislature as a body is sympathetic to exhibitors.

A so-called luxury tax prepared in compliance with recommendations of Governor E. D. Rivers has been introduced in the Georgia Legislature. It would tax theatre tickets and other admissions on a sliding scale, ranging from two cents on tickets selling from 15 to 25 cents to 20 cents on tickets costing $2 or more.

Wants Sales Tax Dropped

Urging that the sales tax be abolished, Attorney General Roy McKittrick of Missouri told the Central Missouri Press Association in Columbia, Mo., this week, that the ballot this fall should permit Missourians to vote on repealing the two per cent levy. He said that inheritance, income and liquor taxes would produce more than enough to take care of the state's requirements for old age welfare.

H. J. Williams, exhibitor of Granada, Miss., has promulgated a tax bill calling for five per cent on gross as a substitute for existing 10 per cent admission tax.

A luxury tax has been proposed in Minnesota that would impose one cent levy on every 25 cents paid for theatre tickets, cigars, cigarettes, tobacco and cosmetics to raise $13,000,000 annually for schools.

The board of aldermen in Hickory, N. C., have amended a city ordinance which prohibits midnight showings on Saturday.

A bill to extend from 10 p.m. to 11 p.m. the hours in which boys and girls under 21 may be employed (except industries) is being considered by the Massachusetts legislative committee on labor and industry.

Philadelphia has enacted a measure taxing every billboard $2.50.

The question of Sunday opening in Charlotte, N. C., is uncertain since City Attorney Basil M. Boyd has declared illegal the action of the city council in permitting Sunday operation. Mr. Boyd based his decision on the fact that the vote was less than two-thirds of the membership.

Stuart Doyle left Hollywood last week aboard the Mariposa bound for Australia. Prior to his departure he said that he has abandoned the plan to build five theatres in South Africa.

Sears Elected Vitagraph Head

Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager of Warner Brothers and First National Pictures, was elected president of the Warner subsidiary, Vitagraph, Inc., at a board of directors meeting last Thursday.

Carl Leserman, assistant general sales manager, was named a vice-president of the organization, a position Mr. Sears had held since June, 1935.

Mr. Sears first became associated with Vitagraph in 1919, after serving in the World War. He worked as a salesman in the company's St. Louis office. Later he became a salesman for the World Film Company in New York. He was transferred to the St. Louis office and subsequently worked for Republic and Selznick.

In December, 1920, he joined First National as a salesman in Chicago. He was appointed Cleveland branch manager in 1925 and branch manager in Chicago in 1928. A year later Mr. Sears was named southern and western sales manager for the company and in 1931, after the merger of Warner Brothers and First National, he was appointed southern and western sales manager for both companies.

In June, 1935, he was elected a vice-president of Vitagraph and in August, 1936, he became general sales manager.

Harry Charnas, after a vacation in Florida, has rejoined Warner Brothers as a special exploitation representative for the distribution department. The company also announced that Phil Engel will continue as eastern field representative.

A new policy of weekly Warner studio "previews" on Broadway will begin at the Strand Friday evening, when "Gold Is Where You Find It," the new Cosmopolitan color feature with Olivia de Havilland, George Brent, Margaret Lindsay and Claude Rains, will be previewed at the two regular performances after 6 p.m., in addition to the presentation of the current attraction.

On Saturday morning "Gold Is Where You Find It" begins its regular Broadway engagement at the Strand, where it is scheduled for a run.

Ennis Joins Caravel As Advertising Head

Bert Ennis, well known film publicist and writer, joined Caravel Distributing Corporation this week as head of publicity and advertising.

According to Stanley Neal, managing director of Caravel, Mr. Ennis, who has directed the publicity and advertising activities of Columbia, the Roxy theatres in New York and other film organizations over a period of several years, will inaugurate an intensive publicity and exploitation service for the benefit of the several thousand theatres which will present the various sponsored films distributed by the company.

Kalafat Honored

Cleveland exhibitors honored John Kalafat with a surprise dinner this week in recognition of his five year's service as treasurer of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association. About 60 attended the affair which was held in the Allerton Hotel ballroom. Mr. Kalafat was presented with a Philco radio bar.

Joseph M. Schenck Elected President of the AMPP

The Association of Motion Picture Producers met in Hollywood Monday with Will H. Hays, president of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in its annual session and elected Joseph M. Schenck president. Mr. Schenck succeeds Louis B. Mayer, whose term has expired. Mr. Mayer was named first vice-president, Jack L. Warner second vice-president and Fred W. Beetson was renamed executive vice-president and secretary-treasurer.

Officers of Central Casting Corporation, subsidiary of the association, were renamed as follows: Mr. Beetson, president; Campbell McCulloch, vice-president, and William Reeves secretary.

Directors of the association are Harry Cohn, R. J. Obringer, Mr. Schenck, Mr. Mayer, Henry Herzbrun, Pandro Berman, Hal E. Roach, Charles R. Rogers and Mr. Warner. Mr. Berman replaces Samuel Briskin as RKO representative on the board, the only change in personnel.

After discussing association budgetary affairs the producers turned to problems raised by the forthcoming Shrine and American Legion conventions. They voted to participate in conclaves without determining actual details. In the discussions it was brought out that entertainment of visitors at studios is becoming a serious problem

Korda Seeking More Revenue, Declares Sutro

Alexander Korda will seek a release from his agreement with United Artists and an affiliation with another major company unless United Artists gives his product greater attention and obtains increased playing time for it, John R. Sutro, a director of London Films, said this week on his arrival here from England.

Mr. Sutro said Mr. Korda's $9,000,000 production program for 1938 calling for 15 features to cost $600,000 each, is expected to increase London Films' acceptance in this country. He said the American market was very much in Mr. Korda's mind in planning the program.

He said that Mr. Korda had no intention of seeking to reopen the negotiations for purchase jointly with Samuel Goldwyn of control in United Artists. Mr. Sutro also said that he was not here to seek finances for London Films' production program. He said the money would come entirely from London sources.

Mr. Sutro plans to stay in New York for two weeks to survey the general situation as it affects London Films. He said he may go to Hollywood, in which event, he would extend his visit to a month.

CENSOR ARGUMENTS IN THREE STATES

New York Regents Viewing Disputed Films; Board Inquiry Demanded in Pennsylvania

Additional arguments are developing on the state of censoring of socalled "sex" and "clinical" films in New York, Pennsylvania's state censor board is hearing repercussions from its censoring of three "political propaganda" pictures, and in Wilmington the showing of "sex" films is bringing demands for establishment of a state censor.

Gordon Knox Bell of New York was elected as the new member of the Board of Regents at a joint session of the Legislature Wednesday, and Roland B. Woodward of Rochester was re-appointed to a new full term. Both men were selected by the Republicans, whose combined voting strength in the Senate and Assembly exceeded that of their Democratic and American Labor Party foes. Frank C. Walker, executive of the Comerford circuit, as Democratic nominee, opposed Mr. Bell.

The Board meets Thursday, at which time it is expected to consider the appeals on "The Birth of a Baby" and "Remous."

Decision on the New York State censors' banning of the Foy Production, "Tomorrow's Children," which has sterilization as its theme, is expected early in March when the appellate division reconvenes.

The Pennsylvania Censor Board, already under fire by liberal groups in the state, through its banning of three pictures, which they labeled propaganda, was concerned this week with the demands of Mrs. Arthur Goldsmith, prominent Philadelphia clubwoman, for an investigation of the board's activities.

Mrs. Goldsmith, who is president of the Motion Picture Preview Committee and Study Group, took the censors to task for banning pictures on purely political or economic reasons. Mrs. Goldsmith contended that the elimination of films, because they are propagandistic or advocate political action is a violation of freedom of speech and press, and insists that the board's sole duty, is to eliminate obscenity from films.

At a meeting of the New Century Guild, Mrs. Goldsmith and her committee unanimously agreed to send a resolution to Governor George H. Earle asking that at least a part of the $210,000 paid into the state treasury's general fund by the censor board be turned over to the Board of Education.

Comments on Board of Review

At the meeting Mrs. Goldsmith commented on the National Board of Review. She said: "I have been suspicious of the board for three years. It collects $40,000 a year from the industry, and from the $3 dues of clubwomen who are members. But there is no accounting made of the money. The article in the January 29th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD has confirmed my suspicions, and I want you all to read it."

A bill that would have created a state board of censors in Delaware was introduced at the last session of the Legislature but was defeated. Another attempt is expected next January as a result of numerous complaints received from Girls' and "100 Men and a Girl," displays in civic and other organizations protesting the showing of several kinds of sex pictures in various parts of the state.

After having been turned down two years ago by a censor board and an appeal board appointed by City Manager H. F. McElroy on two different occasions the film "Ecstasy" opened at the Empress theatre in Kansas City, Mo. this week.

Jewel Asks Injunction

Jewel Productions, Inc. has applied to Judge Coxe of United States district court for the southern district in New York for an injunction to restrain Henry M. Morganthau, Jr., as Secretary of The Treasury, and Harry M. Durmin, as Collector of Customs, from seizing the film entitled "Science of Mankind," or "Mysteries of Sex." The film was admitted to the country by customs officials two years ago.

Jewel, through its attorney, Henry Pearlman, claims that when the print was admitted, voluntarily, by the officials and released to the company the character of the shipment as an article of foreign commerce ceased upon such release and therefore became a matter for special jurisdiction.

In Portland, Ore., Judge Claude McCulloch in United States district court there has taken an action on "Ecstasy" under advisement. He ordered Portland city officials and W. G. Smith, counsel for Jewel Productions to submit briefs.

The Ohio State division of film censorship reviewed a total of 451 reels in January from which 24 eliminations were ordered. This compares with 701 reels and 30 eliminations in December. In January, 1937, there were 502 reels reviewed and 28 eliminations.

Hitting at "filth in print" as well as "unchaste pictures and advertisements," a pastoral letter from Bishop Edmund F. Gibbons was read in all Catholic churches within the Albany, N. Y. diocese last Sunday.

The Lutheran Pastoral Conference of the Missouri Synod of the Albany District, through its chairman, Reverend Paul G. Prokopy, pledged support to the campaign "in intensifying the fight against commercialized immorality, not only against printed poison, but any immodesty and indecency whether of the screen, stage or in advertising, publicizing, bathing beauties or morbid accounts of immoral perversions and sex-soaked stories."

ALLIED AND MPTOA PLAN CONVENTIONS

Allied Names Committees for Pittsburgh Sessions; MPTOA Considers Fall Convention

Highlight activities of the week in organized exhibition included:

Appointment by Allied States of a committee to handle its national convention, at Pittsburgh;

Abandonment of a proposed equipment exhibit contemplated for a national MPTOA convention;

A parting challenge made by W. A. Steffes, at the closing of Northwest Allied's "Silver Jubilee" convention, to meet the production and distribution executives with an "open mind" in an effort to iron out the many problems now confronting exhibitors and distributors.

The committee chairmen of the Allied convention in Pittsburgh, May 17-18-19, appointed by M. A. Rosenberg, convention chairman, are: William L. Brown, general committee; Carl A. Poke and E. T Beedle, banquet; Harry W. Walker, transportation and hotel; Frank Panoplos and Sam Fleischman, exhibits; William R. Wheat, Jr., entertainment of delegates; Dr. C. E. Herman, publicity; Bart Dattola, convention arrnagements; Bennett Amdur, credentials; M. N. Shapiro, reception, and William Finkel, registration.

In addition to Mr. Rosenberg, the following have been selected as members of the convention committee: Nathan Yamins, Irving Dollinger, E. L. Peaslee, W. A. Steffes, M. B. Horowitz, Martin G. Smith, Maurice Rubin, Ray Branch, H. A. Cole, Fred J. McWilliams, Aaron Saperstein, H. M. Richey, Arthur Price and C. H. Olive. Fred Herrington will act as secretary of the committee.

Plans for an equipment exhibit to be held in connection with a convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have been abandoned this year due to lack of support of the project among equipment companies, it was reported this week.

MPTOA Convention Not Decided

MPTOA has made no final decision on whether it will hold a 1938 convention, although it is definite that earlier plans to hold one in Chicago this spring have been abandoned.

Edward L. Kuykendall, president, this week issued a bulletin announcing: "While no definite decision has been reached and no definite plans have been presented to the board of directors, who decide the matter, it looks as though a national conference of theatre owners will be held by MPTOA in the early autumn of this year, possibly in Oklahoma City."

Arrangements for an equipment exhibit were not being promoted by MPTOA. The national exhibitor organization, however, agreed to cooperate to the extent of holding its convention simultaneously with the exhibition in the event the equipment companies succeeded in arranging such a show. The fact that equipment companies did not complete arrangements is understood to have resulted in abandonment of the plans for a spring convention in Chicago.

Mr. Kuykendall, in a bulletin to members this week said that the joint conference for trade practice regulation between MPTOA and Allied representatives "has been blocked before it got started by the action of the Allied 'leaders' in forcing their president to revoke his public offer to participate in such a joint conference."

The joint conference proposal was initiated by Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York. In his bulletin Mr. Kuykendall further said: "Conflicting statements have been issued as to just what was intended which have confused the matter to some extent, but we do know that Mr. Brandt published a cordial invitation for a joint conference in New York to which he would be host for a discussion of the regulation of trade practice abuses in this industry.

"The proposal for such a conference was made by an 'open letter' to myself and Nathan Yamins, published just after I had started on a previously announced long trip through the far west. While it was obviously impossible for me to attend a conference in New York until my return, nevertheless, I accepted the invitation at once when it was communicated to me en route. When I did get back to New York City, I was advised that Allied had officially changed its mind and wanted no part of such a meeting."

"Not Too Many Lawyers"

"You'll have to pick the Moses," W. A. Steffes said to the film men present at Allied Theatres of the Northwest Silver Anniversary Jubilee in Minneapolis last week. "We've tried on several occasions but nothing particularly good has come of it. We leave it in your hands to select the leader who can get the company officials to meet with exhibitor leaders on an even and friendly basis."

Mr. Steffes, as did others who spoke at the meeting, placed significance on getting the distribution and exhibition leaders together without too many lawyers present to disrupt what would be intended as friendly meetings to iron out problems concerning both parties.

C. C. Pettijohn, another speaker at the final session, also emphasized the objection to having too many legal minds involved in what were primarily problems for distributors and exhibitors. Mr. Pettijohn said that from appearances it wouldn't be long before the lawyers would have control of the picture business and those who are now in the business would be "out in the cold."

Indications that the film men would agree to make the first move towards the establishment of a means for getting together with exhibitors were voiced by W. F. Rodgers of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Charles Reagan of Paramount.

The annual film ball sponsored by the ITOA of New York will be held at the Hotel Astor, April 2nd.

New York exchanges will be represented at the beefsteak dinner and party sponsored by Allied of New Jersey at the Ritz Restaurant, next Tuesday.

The Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan is expected to meet in Milwaukee the latter part of this month.

Commonwealth in Deal

Commonwealth Amusement Corporation, Kansas City, Mo., has purchased a 50 per cent interest and an operating partnership in D. E. Fitten's Lyric and Plaza theatres at Harrison, Ark. The company is also negotiating with Mr. Fitten and W. E. Blume for a two-thirds interest in the Rialto and New theatres in Searcy, Ark. Mr. Fitten will remain as manager of the theatres. C. A. Schultz is executive head of Commonwealth.

Fleischer Studio Plans Completed

Max and Dave Fleischer returned to New York this week from Miami with their plans set for the building of a studio in Miami at an approximate cost of $300,000. The studio is expected to be ready for occupancy on October 1st.

Concessions were made by the city of Miami, Dade County and the Delaware Housing Company of Miami, the principal factor being that the studio ground and building will be tax free for 15 years. Also, a substantial part of the cost of the studio and ground will be absorbed locally, it was intimated. The city of Miami has pledged itself to build a road to cost $100,000 which will run in front of the building and connect with the Hialeah road leading to the racetrack.

The studio force of 200 in New York has been asked whether they want to make the move and 70 per cent have already signed up, according to the studio. Last summer the studio was confronted with labor troubles when the commercial artists and designers walked out on strike followed by the musicians' union, the projectionists' union and the cameramen's union. It was said that labor troubles had no bearing on the situation.

The building will be one-story, of poured concrete and steel and will have air conditioning throughout. It will have 30,000 square feet of space, an increase of 25 per cent over the present premises at 1600 Broadway. With an additional plot for recreation and parking, and a patio in the center of the development, it will cover a total of two square blocks, Mr. Fleischer said.

The Delaware Housing Company is planning to build low cost homes for the employees, to be financed in part by Federal Housing loans, which will be rented or sold. The dwellings will be offered to employees for about $4,500, it was said.

All functions now performed in New York will be handled in the Miami studio. Paramount will continue to handle the printing in New York, as in the past, and color developing and printing will continue to be done by Technicolor on the coast.

Doubts Aid to Employees

The Commercial Artists and Designers Union, a Committee for Industrial Organization affiliate, said Monday that the move "will be of no ultimate benefit to the employees."

The studio termed this statement "a surprise, in view of the cordial relations existing with our employees." Of the 200 Fleischer employees, 64 are members of the union, the studio said. At a conference in the offices of Phillips and Nizer, Fleischer attorneys, the studio agreed to accept without reservation the demands made by the union.

The demands were that wages be not reduced in Florida; guarantee of one full year's employment and maintenance of hours, vacations, sick leaves and other benefits. Mr. Fleischer volunteered to pay the employees' traveling expenses to Florida, their hotel accommodations there for a month and traveling expenses to any employee who decides to return to New York within a year.

Oscar Doob, head of publicity for Loew's Theatres, left New York last Friday for a three weeks vacation in Florida.

Kleckner in Group Heard By Roosevelt

Joseph P. Kleckner, president of the Motiograph Corporation, Chicago, who served as secretary of the loans-to-business group at the Department of Commerce conference in Washington was a member of the committe of "little business men" which visited the White House on last Friday to ask President Roosevelt for Government cooperation with business.

The group offered a 23 point program outlining what it thought the Government should do for the minor industries of the country, including repeal of the undistributed profits tax, development of machinery for the making of loans to small concerns, legislation to make labor unions as well as employers responsible for the observance of contracts, reduced Government spending, anti-trust enforcement, abandonment of efforts to enact wage and hour legislation, investigation of the National Labor Relations Board and reduction of social security taxes in industries.

Mr. Kleckner left Washington for Chicago Saturday after saying he would return there about the middle of March to lay final plans for the setting up of a permanent small business council.

Educational and GN Discuss Studio

Edward L. Alperson, president of Grand National, and E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, have been having discussions in New York, not concerning a merger of the two companies, as reported, but about Educational's use of Grand National's Hollywood studio, in the event Educational transfers its production westward, on the expiration of Educational's distribution arrangement with Twentieth Century-Fox this year.

Mr. Alperson said that Grand National is "in good shape and does not need any money now, having cut our overhead, and are meeting current operating and production expenses out of current collections."

Grand National has some 5,500 accounts, he said.

The company will close its home office in New York late this week and will establish the departments at the company's exchange in the Film Center Building.

Mr. Alperson and William J. Neary, assistant treasurer, who has been acting as controller for the company, will make their headquarters at the Hollywood studio. Edward J. Peskay, general sales manager, will divide his time between New York and the coast.

Morris Epstein, manager of the New York exchange, has resigned.

Kennedy to Sail February 23

Joseph P. Kennedy, newly appointed ambassador to the Court of St. James's, said this week at his home in Boston that he would sail for England on the Manhattan February 23rd.

RKO Organizes Home Offices and Field To Insure Success of Depinet Drive

In RKO Radio's 38 exchanges in the United States and Canada, and in every country where the company has branch offices the personnel is striving to outdistance all competitors in the number of features and short subjects dated into theatres from January 29th to May 13th, the period of the Ned Depinet Drive.

The campaign has brought all employes in all offices and departments together and to Mr. Depinet personally have come thousands of pledges of support.

Some three thousand RKO Radio employees are wearing campaign badges, offices are decorated with banners, pictorial matter and slogans. Paper strips bearing these adorn walls and desk tops in the home office as well as the exchanges.

The dedication of the drive to Mr. Depinet was suggested by Jules Levy, general sales manager, who called in Walter Branson, midwestern district manager, as drive captain. Mr. Branson first visited the studio to familiarize himself with the major features in production, including "Vivacious Lady," "Bringing Up Baby," "Radio City Revels," "Joy of Loving," "Having Wonderful Time" and "Hawaii Calls."

In conferences at the home office a campaign plan was formulated. The progress of each branch manager and salesman is shown daily in a working sheet, or shuttle sheet. Recordings on this shuttle sheet reveal to each representative just how he stands from day to day in percentage of billings to quota.

After several weeks of preparation at the home office Mr. Branson set out on a tour of the RKO exchanges in the United States and Canada, with his schedule calling for visits, addresses explaining the working plan in detail and rallies with the personnel of 38 branch offices in 29 days. The editor of the special drive publication, Harry Gittleson, accompanied him, and four editions were set for publication in the field. This party was augmented by the managers of various territories; E. L. McEvoy, eastern and Canadian sales manager; Cresson E. Smith, western and southern sales manager; Nat Levy, eastern central district manager; L. M. Devaney, Canadian manager; J. H. MacIntyre, southern district manager; H. C. Cohen, south and western district manager.

The exact schedule was followed throughout the trip. Now and then its members had to catch a milk train or travel overland by automobile. Leaving Des Moines with A. M. Avery at the wheel, they were caught in a blizzard.

Scores of leading exhibitors put into words their loyalty to RKO and Ned Depinet. One showman, G. H. Christoffers, of the Orpheum Theatre, Yuma, Arizona, remembered having met Ned Depinet 23 years ago, in 1915, and wrote a letter of congratulations to the RKO Radio executive and forwarded a number of playdates to the exchange manager in the territory.

NED E. DEPINET

At Baltimore, I. M. Rappaport of the Hippodrome and a score of exhibitors in the territory met at the Lord Baltimore Hotel and organized two teams of showmen who pledged themselves to aid Robert Folliard, Washington manager, to win the capital award. Two units of five showmen each were formed and in addition to giving every possible playdate they will work with the salesmen in selling other exhibitors.

Mr. Branson, one time half-back at the University of Nebraska, and successively salesman, branch manager and district manager for RKO, was matched abroad by the aggressiveness of the sales forces under Phil Reisman, foreign sales manager. Mr. Reisman called in Ben Cammack from his Latin American outpost to guide the drive as captain in foreign territories. After the campaign abroad had been planned and launched, Mr. Cammack embarked for South America to hold rallies in the exchanges on that continent.

Mr. Reisman at a meeting in Paris with his European staff received pledges of over-quota marks.

An unusual aspect of the drive was a rally of the entire home office personnel.

RKO Using New Sound System

"She's Got Everything" is the first RKO Radio feature picture to employ a new and "more effective" sound recording system, known as the "galloping mixer," which was developed by Radio Corporation of America, according to the company. The apparatus can be operated from the set.

Musical Comedy

Past editions of this nameful annual have flung into box office eminence such profitable personalities as Bing Crosby and Jack Benny, a circumstance arguing the advisability of spreading plenty of copy about now in behalf of Bob Hope and Shirley Ross. If history repeats, as it has previously, these will be among tomorrow's money names. The production has a full quota of today's.

First place in billing goes, of course, to W. C. Fields, back on the screen after a steadily if not altogether happily publicized absence, and back in top form, gusty, bombastic and immensely effective if not invariably impeccable in his choice of tag lines. His familiar golfing routine gives way to a new, more robust version, his pool table drolleries are different but as funny as the old, and his references to alcohol are as salty as they are numerous. He uses everything from mayhem to trick photography to get laughs.

Dorothy Lamour and Martha Raye probably rank next in contemporary marquee value, but Miss Raye has somewhat the better of the footage allotment and improves her position with a slam bang rendition of "That Moon Is Here Again," which winds up in terrific manhandling that had the preview audience in stitches. Ben Blue, Lynne Overman, Lief Erikson and Lionel Pape are mentionable as competent performers given less to do than their talents warrant.

Along about here would be the place for showmen to give special display to the Hope-Ross combination, which happens to be the love interest, if the picture may be said to possess one, and to account for the finest demonstration of what to do with a popular song hit the screen has seen this year. The number is "Thanks for the Memory," already a peak number on the radio, and the casual, conversational, consummate delivery of the frankly sophisticated lyrics is probably the most memorable sequence in a production that has plenty of them.

Kirsten Flagstad of the Metropolitan Opera is outstanding among the interpolated specialties, singing in magnificent voice and judicious brevity an aria from "Die Valkyrie." Tito Guizar is relatively notable for two songs, one his own "Zuni Zuni." Shep Fields' rippling rhythm orchestra, on early in the proceedings, gains something from novel use of cartoon technique in presentation of its single number.

All the songs save Mme. Flagstad's and Sig. Guizar's are from the gifted Ralph Rainger and Leo Robin, three of them already in the hit class and a fourth, "The Waltz Lives On," likely to arrive there, when the populace has had a chance to experience it as executed in the course of the seven-minute dance review which is the production's major spectacle.

The story, which pops up for modest attention at long intervals, is a fanciful thing about ultra-modern liners racing from America to Europe. The right one wins by a prow.

Previewed at the Paramount theatre, Los Angeles, where audience response was of a kind to indicate that the 1938 edition will rank high among its fellows, and professional prognosticators proclaimed it a gold mine.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER

Cassidy of Bar 20

(Paramount-Sherman)

Western Melodrama

It has come to pass in an essentially fluctuant art that certain congenial combinations of cause, effect and circumstances have worn deep acceptance grooves and, perforce and per profit, must adhere to these if all are to be made happy. Such a combination is represented in the Hopalong Cassidy series of western melodrama, and about all the public, and therefore the showman, wants to be informed about each new item in the sequence is that it keeps faith with its predecessors. That is the important news about "Cassidy of Bar 20."

People will want to know that Bill Boyd again is to be seen in the name role and that he again fades out at picture's end in good health, victorious and unquestionably in pursuit of further noble adventure. They may also be told that there's plenty of shooting and a goodly percentage of it proves fatal to the gentlemen on the receiving end before everything is settled to the hero's satisfaction.

This time "Hopalong Cassidy" and his aides, "Lucky" and "Pappy," ride to the succor of "Nora" and her brother, whose ranch is coveted by the nefarious "Clay Allison," boss of the community and a casual killer. "Hopalong" hires out to "Allison" and gets the situation well in mind before taking it well in hand in an explosive combat which terminates tragically for "Allison." Then "Hopalong" rides away to fight another day.

Of Human Hearts

(M-G-M)

American Folk Play

What with Hollywood and the Continent assiduously engaged this long while in feverish pursuit of the smart-smarter-smartest objective in cinema manufacture, the plain people of whom there are so many have had little opportunity to expose themselves to plain homespun comedydrama of the kind they've loved since road companies toured the provinces. It is more than a certainty that they are good and hungry, by now, for a substantial helping of sound, down-to-earth folk play and this is exactly that. If showmen haven't forgotten how to exploit basic product, the selling of this attraction should be a profitable pleasure.

"Of Human Hearts" derives, by way of a radio title contest which was quite some exploitation in itself, from "Benefits Forgot," a novel by Honore Morrow purchased by Clarence Brown in 1920 and treasured all these years as a directorial labor of love now finally achieved. Something akin to Mr. Brown's devotion to the subject seems to have animated Bradbury Foote in fashioning the screen play, John W. Considine, Jr., in producing it, and all the actors in performing it, for the handling throughout is sane, sober and sincere to a degree bordering on reverence.

Names for marquee use are Walter Huston, James Stewart, Beulah Bondi, Guy Kibbee, John Carradine, Charley Grapewin and Sterling Holloway, although several other players give distinguished portrayals. Charles Coburn, for instance, a veteran stage player in his first screen appearance, and Leatrice Joy Gilbert, daughter of the late John Gilbert, in here, contribute vital realism to their roles. So do Gene Lockart, Clem Bevans, Gene Reynolds and the late Robert McWade. In short, a showman might care to tell his customers that the picture assays more honest acting to the linear foot than anything that's come along since Hollywood learned the definition of sophistication and fell victim of it.

The central story thread, to which others are appended, concerns a minister and his family in a small Ohio town during the period 1845 to 1862. Ill supported by his parishioners, the inflexible cleric carries on, teaching the Scripture by text, precept and brawn, his son finally rebelling and running away to medical school. After the minister's death the boy's requests for money compel his mother to sell her scant personal treasures while he gains distinction as a surgeon in the Civil War. After two years without word from him the mother writes President Lincoln regarding the whereabouts of his grave, believing him dead, and the President summons the boy, reprimands him and sends him home on furlough. (This scene, widely accepted as authentic Lincolniana, is a high point in the picture, tellingly written and compellingly acted by John Carradine as Lincoln and James Stewart as the soldier.)

Previewed at the Village theatre, Westwood, Cal., to a thoroughly seasoned professional audience that surrendered completely to the charm of an honest story told with brilliant simplicity. —W. R. W.

A Slight Case of Murder

(Warner-F. N.)

Comedy Satire

Every once in a while a rousing comedy comes along which possesses elements that seem to guarantee its success in any kind of theatre, whether it be metropolitan picture palace or wayside village house. When such a thing happens the public is quick to sense its amusement value and exhibitors are quick to appreciate its exploitation possibilities. "A Slight Case of Murder" looks like that kind of picture.

Although the picture is smartly staged, directed and acted by a capable cast of name players, its outstanding audience appeal is found in the refreshing story idea. Chock full of laughs in dialogue, situations, action and characterization, the story is a showmanship feature in itself and showmanship also derives from the names of the authors, adapters, director and writers. All are well known because of their association with other important pictures, and the principal and chief supporting players are by no means unknown quantities.

Upon Repeal, "Remy Marko," rich with the profits of his Prohibition bootlegging activities, announces to his henchmen, headed by "Guiseppi" and "Mike," that he is going into the legitimate brewing business and henceforth they must become respectable salesmen. His wife, "Nora," becomes socially ambitious for the sake of their daughter "Mary," who is shipped off to a European finishing school, the family moving into a mansion. In devious ways "Remy" learns that, tough as the illegitimate brewing business was, the legitimate game is tougher. Soon, while keeping up a front, he is involved in financial difficulties.

"Mary" returns to fall in love with a rich young man, "Whitewood," whom she will not marry until he gets a job, whereupon he becomes a policeman. "Remy" is loath to have a representative of his ancient enemies, the police, courting his daughter but places his stamp of approval upon him at "Nora's" insistence.

A gang, bent on dividing stolen race track gambling money, shoots itself up and the survivor leaves the bodies in "Remy's" house. "Guiseppi" and "Mike" distribute the bodies elsewhere but, when they read that a big reward has been posted for their capture dead or alive, they quickly return them to "Remy's" mansion.

With the $500,000 which "Remy" recovers from the dead men, he satisfies his creditors, and "Whitewood," who shoots the dead men all over again, along with the live one he accidentally kills, is given credit for their capture and the reward derived therefrom enables him to marry "Mary."

Done in the free and easy style that has marked many recent successful comedies outside the beaten path, the picture, though possibly not questionable as far as moral tone is concerned, nevertheless is an adult attraction. Even the manner of dealing with the boy from the orphanage does not bring it within the scope of juvenile entertainment.

Previewed in the Warner theatre, Hollywood. Theme, plot and cross plots, dialogue, action, situations and characterizations had the preview audience laughing heartily from beginning to end. It is reasonable to assume that showmen who go about presenting the picture in their houses in a showmanlike way may expect the same reaction.—Gus McCarthy.

My Old Kentucky Home

(Monogram-Crescent)

Folk Piece

Homespun is the word for "My Old Kentucky Home". It is a film which has, in order of attractiveness to the general public, songs of long ago, their able presentation by the Hall Johnson Choir, a fairly substantial story, and the struggle between Northern and Southern folk.

The cast is headed by Evelyn Venable, Grant Richards, Clara Blandick, Bernardene Hayes and J. Farrell MacDonald.

The homey story's main attribute lies in the familiar Stephen Collins Foster songs which the Johnson singers chant, and thus open an avenue novel in recent cinema history for exploitation purposes. Showmen playing this E. B. Derr production should remember that "My Old Kentucky Home" was produced with the idea that there are more small towns than metropolises.

John T. Neville wrote the original story and screenplay and Lambert Hillyer directed, with Frank Melford as associate producer.

"Larry Blair" becomes entangled with "Gail Page", Northern actress, although betrothed to "Lisbeth Calvert" of an old Southern family. "Blair", also of an old Southern family, is to inherit the Blair fortune. "Blair" is almost blinded attempting to save "Gail" from committing suicide. Realizing the extent of the misfortune, "Blair" attempts to hide it from "Lisbeth" but "Gail" sacrifices her love to tell the truth, and "Blair" and "Lisbeth" are reunited.

Scandal Street

(Paramount)

Small Town Comedy

Though a lot of time is used up in getting around to it, there is a plot in "Scandal Street." The early part of the film, with variations, some relevant and others not, but for the most part humorous, is devoted to an exposition of what causes scandal. Practically all the action takes place in a small town neighborhood and thus the story has an intimate flavor.

When "Joe McKnight" takes a position in South America his fiancee, "Nora Langdon," becomes librarian in a small town and paying guest in the "Smith" household. Domestic situations are embarrassing to "Daniel," but they are amusing, as are the picturizations of a neighborhood bridge party-social where all indulge in politely catty chatter, "Maybelle Murphy's" rehearsings of the children dancers for a recital, and the antics of "Wilma," a tomboy, whose amazing ability to tell weird and fearsome stories makes her the envy of all neighborhood kids.

Meanwhile, "Austin Brown," who aspires to be a gay blade, is forcing his attentions on "Nora" while becoming involved in a shady business deal with "Wilson." Thus first whispers of scandal are born. Innocently, by word and deed, "Nora" becomes implicated with "Brown" in a manner that eventually becomes critical for her. During "Maybelle's" recital, "Brown" is slain. "Nora" finds the body and is accused of murder. All the women, with jealous vengeance, land on "Nora" like a ton of bricks. Their testimony, all inspired by desire to create a choice scandal, is a flood which even the returning "McKnight" cannot stem. But, just as she is the star of the picture, "Wilma" becomes the star of the investigation, She tells a vivid imaginative tale that so stuns "Wilson" that he traps himself into confessing the murder. Of course all the neighbors are as one in telling "Nora" that, no matter what they said about her, they always knew she had nothing to do with the murder.

Although the picture makes many excursions into dialogue and pictorial descriptions of small town life, all is done to show how scandal may come about. However, although several sequences are included to give its characters the impression that philandering is going on, nothing actually takes place that would raise a question as to the production's moral value. sequently "Scandal Street," despite the rather sensational title, comes within the realm of family entertainment.

The Affairs of Maupassant

(Gallic Films)

Literary Love Drama

It can be reasoned that a primary aim in selection of the title of this foreign film was fixed on the saleable inducement behind the storm-centered name of the French naturalist writer, Guy de Maupassant. Rather the production should have been titled with the exotic name of Marie Bashkirtseff, for it is from the girlishly revealing pages of her celebrated diary that the story draws its inspiration and basis. In addition, the romantic and literary figure of Maupassant is considerably subordinated in importance and playing prominence to the screen portrayal of the lovely and pathetic Russian artist.

Production merits for the work have been placed on a high scale of artistic and technical excellence. Subtly subdued rather than sensationally sounded, as was to be expected from the titular implication, the narrative is a dramatically engrossing and emotionally sustained picture of the life of a tragically frustrated young girl. Henry Koster, whose American directorial assignments have been such pictorial highlights as "Three Smart Girls" and "100 Men and a Girl," displays in this, his last European effort before embarking for the States, the well founded talent that attracted Hollywood notice. The photography and the settings have been handled with a careful eye to artistic authenticity and effectiveness. Lili Darvas, as the ill fated Marie, plays her role of the tubercular artist with the expected appeal. Hans Jaray portrays the Gallic penman according to script specifications, which reveals the gentleman more concerned with his amatory accomplishments than his literary achievements. Szoke Szakall in the role of Marie's father gives a delightful and warming characterization as the indulgent and loving parent.

The love idyll begins with Marie's excursion into an unwholesome Paris slum neighborhood to sketch some unaffected young urchins. Attracted by her fine attire, the girl is harassed by a gang of hoodlums and is rescued by the young and gallant Maupassant. The first meeting is followed by many subsequent appointments and as a result the two fall in love. Minor difficulties to a happy culmination of the romance are supplied by Marie's cold mother, her art instructor, who is in love with his student, and a persistent young lady who clings to a dated affair with the writer. A greater obstacle is found in the girl's burning ambition to be a great painter. When all these combined objections are resolved and the way seems clear for the two to continue their amorous way, Marie is stricken with her fatal illness.

Though the film's dialogue is in German, Julian Leigh has translated for English speaking audiences an excellently written collection of readable titles. The picture should appeal particularly to patrons of foreign class productions and the more literary and artistically inclined of the average audience.

Sailing Along

(Gaumont British-GFD)

Musical Romance

There is a freshness of setting and style about this latest Jessie Matthews musical which helps it to stand out above most of its predecessors, and a brighter sheen on its direction and production values which will inspire more than one revision of attitude to director-cum-husband, Sonnie Hale. It is, of course, a Jessie Matthews picture, but the spirited teamwork of the engaging and lively Jack Whiting is in danger at times of stealing the stellar thunder.

Background this time for a goodly share of the entertainment is London's River Thames, and there are glimpses of sailing barges bellied in the winds of the estuary and sleepy, punt-scattered backwaters which are not the least appetizing of the film's constituents. Though La Matthews, as a sort of waterfront Cinderella, does tap dance a measure or two on the sailing barge whence she hails, the greater portion of the music and dance material, which is her fan's more delectable fare, is put over in cabaret, vaudeville, theatre and sophisticated salon. This presentation element is well if artificially staged, and the final River scene, a multifold panorama of song and dance, has polish about it as well as lavishness.

Jessie's role is that of a dance struck Cinderella of the River who is sponsored to stardom by an eccentric soup manufacturer, who captivates her tutor and leading man but goes back after tempestuous quarrels and misunderstandings to her sailorman boy friend, the day after she makes the headlines. It is very confected and ingenuous stuff, and Miss Matthews handles it in a confected and ingenuous manner, but her sunny personality and Jack Whiting's engaging manner keep it entertaining and alive. There is a venomous and philandering blonde wife in the picture, a very resourceful if unscrupulous press agent—this last a characteristic Noel Madison creation—and an entirely irrelevant lunatic painter, all of whom dress the yarn with familiar and rather faded trimmings. There are laughs, however, mainly thanks to Roland Young's eccentricities, and Athene Seyler's characterization as his sister, and one delicious essay in song and dance burlesque by the star in a kitchen.

The songs are tuneful if hardly sensational. The Matthews costumes vary between flannel slacks and print frocks on the one hand, and Norman Hartnell creations on the other, and opinions will vary on which suit her better. We have not yet had the best that is in Jessie Matthews, but "Sailing Along" will be found a step in that direction.

Previewed at the Cambridge theatre, London, the film attracted the attention any Jessie Matthews picture normally does, and was acknowledged one of the best yet.—Aubrey Flanagan.

La Damincella di Bard

(I.C.I. Cinema Industries)

Italian Drama

An Italian melodrama, the title of which when translated into English is "Damsel of Bard," this is principally a dialogue film with practically no action or comedy. Consequently its value as entertainment is confined exclusively to Italians for there are no English titles and the story has several angles, which necessitates skipping around from scene to scene which to an observer unconversant with the Italian tongue, are apparently disconnected and irrevalent sequences.

The film stars Emma Grammatica who is billed as the foremost Italian actress and the story concerns the life of the "Countess Maria Clotilde" of Bard from girlhood until old age.

As the story opens, a young man in love with "Maria" asks her father for the girl's hand in marriage. He refuses. The scene shifts to the house of "Maria's" brother, where on a stormy night, he and his wife are slain and their young son kidnaped.

Many years pass and "Maria," who has not married, becomes penniless, is dispossessed from the palace left her by her father and which is acquired by a Marquis but she is permitted to live in a garret of the palace. "Renata," the daughter of the Marquis, falls in love with "Franco" but the Marquis refuses to allow his daughter to wed "Franco" because he is "illegitimate." It then develops that "Franco" is 'Maria's" nephew. The climax has "Maria" restored to her rightful place in the palace and "Franco" and "Renata" married.

Reviewed at the Cine Roma teatro, New York. An afternoon audience viewed the picture in silence for the most part, only occasionally responding to some remark in the unusually long winded dialogue. At the finish there was a round of applause.—Paul Mooney.

turned into a very good modern film, due to the excellent free adaptation and screen play by Marcel Achard and Jean Lustig, and the clever direction by Marc Allegret.

The theatre value, however, will come above all from the name of its male star, Charles Boyer, in his first French film since "Mayerling," and from the work of Michèle Morgan. It is only her second film.

Miss Morgan, an 18-year-old French girl, was discovered among extras, about six months ago, by the director, Marc Allegret, who gave her the feminine lead in "Bribouille." This appearance procured for her a contract for America, and she will sail in a few months. In "Orage" she is absolutely outstanding.

Bernstein's play has been changed much for the screen. The story deals with an engineer, André Pascaud (Boyer), happily married. When his company sends him to Paris for a few days, his brother-in-law asks him to call upon "Françoise" (Michèle Morgan) in whom he is interested. André falls in love with the girl and she with him. They go to spend a week in the country. When they return she discovers that a man whom she once loved has returned from Africa and is waiting for her. "André" returns home and he and his wife leave for a tour of Europe. But he cannot stop thinking of "Francoise." His wife offers him his freedom. He finds that "Francoise" left the man from Africa and is being kept by a wealthy American. Their love is rekindled, but "André" learns that his wife is to have a child. "André" does not realize that his wife is critically ill. He asks for a divorce and is going to take "Francoise" abroad and start life anew, but she commits suicide. He decides to return to his wife.

The story, which brings situations not always in accordance with the American Production Code, contains several powerful and moving scenes.

Marc Allegret has included a great deal of youth, freshness and even poetry, with beautiful photography of the French countryside. The camera work, by Amand Thirard, is excellent.

Once again Charles Boyer proves his worth as an actor, and the French critics say he is much better in French films than in his Hollywood interpretations. ("Conquest" has not yet been shown in France.)

Viewed the third day of its world premiere at the Marignan theatre, Paris, at an evening performance. Patrons followed the film attentively and seemed stirred by the final scenes.—PIERRE AUTRE.

Excellent Nature Study

Ornithologists in particular and the vast class of unspecified nature lovers will find ample material for enthusiastic study in this excellently done bit of natural history reporting. Under the watchful eye and ear of Dr. Arthur A. Allen and Albert R. Brand of the Laboratory of Ornithology of Cornell University, the telephotic lens of the camera and the sensitive impressions of the sound track have recorded against beautiful mountain background of the Adirondack country some extraordinary views and musical renditions of bird life. Together with first rate camera work, and well finished narrative, the subject is a distinct brand of entertainment, especially suited for school audiences and children's matinees.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Travelogue Up North

Filmed in the bleak area of the Arctic Circle and with the mercury ranging around 40 degrees below zero, this travelogue excursion to the land of the vanishing race of Laplanders is an interesting if not expert work of the exploration variety. Despite the technical deficiencies of editing and photographic irregularity, the material offers information concerning the life and ways of this strange people that is higher in educational value than in entertaining value. The views of the Laplanders at home and afield, together with some arresting shots of reindeer herds being corraled for slaughter, comprise the outstanding items.—Running time, 8½ minutes.

What Do You Think, No. 2
(MGM)
Puzzle Picture

For audiences willing to give some extra thought and discussion to their picture going, this interrogative short subject provides a puzzling problem for consideration. As outlined by the commentary of Carey Wilson, the item skims cleverly and compactly over a situation that contains material enough for a feature length production. Concerned with a rather occult situation, the film pictures the near tragedy of an impetuous and jealous young husband planning the murder of a doctor friend because the wife of the man was seen by him in the arms of the mutual acquaintance. How the resolution is broken calls for a conclusion that will cause the spectator to ask himself several questions, and find as many answers. Running time, 10 minutes.

By means of an informative running commentary and, particularly, through a skillfully composed collection of clear cut camera angles, the case under consideration is given expert handling and concrete illustration. There are sightseeing excursions around the lovely and historic environs of New Orleans, showing the fascinating blend of the new and old components of this busy Southern metropolis; scenes of corn and rice cultivation; shots of the bustling waterfront sections, and an inspection of the state's educational sites. Some shots of colored field workers jigging before their impoverished and ramshackled cabin quarters jar the generally peaceful tone.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Miss They Missed

Willie Howard Riot

Making full use of Willie Howard's talents in farce, this short subject gives the comedian as well as the audience a mirth provoking time. Equipped with wide linguistic ability, Howard dons many disguises and is just as hilarious in any tongue or costume that he may assume. As a slightly pixiliated Gallic Sherlock Holmes, he is given the assignment of locating a missing heiress. The trail leads through amusing situations and, of course, at the very last moment the lost young lady turns out to be Howard's girl friend, who, now in the cash, cannot be bothered with an eccentric human bloodhound. —Running time, 18 minutes.

Harry Langdon here has a mania for buying things advertised as a bargain. Acquiring, thereby, a dog collar and a kennel, he shops around for a dog to fit the collar. The dog, a St. Bernard, causes such havoc to Harry's apartment that he, his wife and the dog are evicted by the landlord. Harry buys a trailer and the three set out for greener pastures, which turn out to be a plot bordering on a precipice. The dog manages to dislodge the trailer, which comes to a halt on and half over the cliff. Only fair entertainment. Running time, 18½ minutes.

Tuneful Bit

As refreshing as the youthful personalities concerned in the comic and musical divertissement of this subject is the quality of lightweight entertainment contained in its two reel running time length. Presenting the comely and vocally smooth Niela Goodelle in the principal billing spot and aided by a likely young juvenile, Lee Sullivan, the thread of plot sketches the efforts of the talent at a radio station to place Miss Goodelle on a prominent program. At intervals are bright bits of song and comedy play. The material has generally been given careful mounting.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Court Orders Midland Company to Open Books

Judge Albert L. Reeves in federal district court in Kansas City this week continued the Midland Investment Company in possession of the Midland theatre and Midland office building properties, and ordered the Midland Investment Company to open its books to a bondholders committee. Midland Investment recently petitioned for the right to reorganize under 77b of the bankruptcy act, and its reorganization manager, Securities Service Corporation of Chicago, has submitted a plan of reorganization.

A bondholders committee has been formed by Kansas City financial and investment men, and was represented in court by Charles Blackmar and Ed Scheuffler, Kansas City attorneys. The bondholders want an impartial trustee appointed, and desire certain changes in the submitted reorganization plan. However, the court will not act on these matters until bondholders have completed their audit of the Midland Investment's books. This will require several weeks.

Court Again Refuses To Bar New Theatre

New York Supreme Court Justice Bernard L. Shientag this week refused to reverse his former ruling which directed License Commissioner Paul Moss to grant Minnie Cohen a license to erect a theatre in Brooklyn. The license was opposed by the Kingsway Jewish Center on the grounds that the erection of a synagogue had started on an adjacent lot.

Justice Shientag pointed out that there was no law which prevented the erection of a theatre next to a synagogue. He ruled, however, that it was "extremely bad taste and so undesirable that if the synagogue involved was in the process of construction," the petition would have been denied. Construction on the synagogue stopped two years ago.

Autry Injunction Sustained

The motion to vacate the injunction Republic obtained against Gene Autry was argued before Judge R. B. C. Howell of the state court, Nashville, Tennessee, this week. The motion was not granted. The original injunction order stands. Autry cannot appear on the air, in vaudeville or pictures in the United States or any foreign country not only for the present term of his contract, but in the event of its renewal or extension under exercise of any option.

Constance Bennett has been awarded a verdict of $35,000 by Superior Judge Charles S. Burnell in Los Angeles in the breach of contract suit Miss Bennett brought against GB Pictures. She claimed a $35,000 guarantee offered in the event that she hold herself in readiness to produce "The Hawk," which never was made.

Suit for $25,000 has been brought in New York against SOS Corporation, International Theatres Equipment and J. H. Moss Manufacturing Company by O and W Cine Enterprises for alleged breach of contract.

Melies, Producer of Early Magic Pictures, Dies

Georges Meliès, early producer of trick and mystery motion pictures which induced new life in the cinema after the novelty of its first efforts had subsided, died in a Paris home for aged indigents January 21. He was 71 years old.

Mr. Meliès, credited with the development of the fade-out, overlap dissolve, double exposure and other practices which are now common camera technique, retired from the motion picture field before the World War. He remained in obscurity until ten years ago when he was found vending candy in a Paris railway station. Benefit performances were held for him and he was admitted to a home conducted by the French industry where he died.

Mr. Meliès was attracted to motion pictures in 1895 when, as an understudy for the magician Robert Houdin and manager of the Houdin theatre in Paris, he attended a showing of Louis Lumière's films at the Grand Cafe. He built a camera of his own, Lumière having refused to sell him one, and began the production of pictures which were the sensation of their day and which became the instruments of a new technique.

His product grew in pretentiousness and a world market opened for the films titles of which included "The Nightmare," "The Devil's Manor," "A Trip to the Moon," "The Adventures of the Munchausen Baron," "Cinderella," "The Kingdom of the Fairies," "Gulliver's Travels," and "Joan of Arc." "The Kingdom of the Fairies" was one of the most widely exploited of any of the early motion pictures and it was accompanied by a special musical score at its openings in Paris, New York and London in September, 1902.

Because of the widespread practice at the the time of making duplicate copies of films and selling them without authorization, Mr. Meliès sent his brother Gaston to open an office in New York to protect his interests. A catalogue of Meliès "Star Films" was issued, probably the first trade mark and brand name in the business, and a warning was published that the company was prepared "to pursue all counterfeiters and pirates."

In December, 1907, Meliès' company was one of the group including Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig, Essanay, Pathe and Kalem, which formed the Edison Licensees in an attempt to end years of litigation over patent rights and which exactly one year later with the addition of Biograph became the Motion Picture Patents Company.

Peggy Goldberg Resigns

Peggy Goldberg has resigned her position as fan magazine and trade paper publicity representative for GB Pictures. Miss Goldberg left New York for Hollywood this week to continue publicity work.

Louis B. Mayer, head of MGM production, has been decorated by the Czechoslovakian Republic with the Order of the White Lion, the highest award a person in civil life can receive from the government, according to the company.

Condor Stock Sold By Wisconsin Company

Bankruptcy hearings on the B. E. Buckman and Company suit in Madison, Wis., before Miles C. Riley, special master, reveal that the company, underwriters of the stock of Condor Pictures, Inc., had sold approximately 300,000 shares of the stock at $3.25 a share, much of it to Wisconsin residents.

It has been testified that Buckman company owns a substantial block of stock in Condor, which is now undergoing financial reorganization under chapter 77b of the Federal bankruptcy act. Testimony indicated that one subsidiary of the Hollywood company would pay up enough to satisfy all creditors, but little hope was held out for the investors.

The subsidiary, testimony relates, owns 600,000 feet of unused film of Frank Buck's "Bring 'Em Back Alive" and is reported to have a big film business with homes.

IMPORT QUOTA PLANNED IN JAPAN AS PART OF PROPOSED FILMS ACT

Three Hour Program Stipulation Threat to Foreign Films; Manchukuo Government Assumes Control of Distribution There

by HIROMU TOMINAGA
in Tokyo

After endless discussions on the future possibility of the importation of foreign films from almost every point of view, definite indications are seen that the ban will be lifted and licenses granted for such importation, to be limited, however, under a quota system similar to that enforced in Germany. Official announcement of the plan has not been made by the Finance Ministry which is studying the plan and its possible results.

Reports of the possibility that the restrictions will be lifted, at least to some degree, were preceded by three other developments of importance to American and other distributors—further amendment of exchange control regulation and the enforced shortening of the play hours for motion picture theatres which was seen as a preliminary to the enactment of a comprehensive statute regulating the film industry in all particulars.

The permission for importation of foreign films, so far as can be learned at present, will be granted under a quota system by which a total of 100 films will be permitted to all foreign distributing companies in Japan. It is reported the Government intends to divide the year into four terms and allow the distributors to release 25 feature pictures during each term. Under this system there should be no objection from the Shochiku and Toho circuits, the leading vehicles for foreign presentation, since they will be able to show one picture a week each, under the new play hour regulations.

While actual standards for the allotment of the quota among the various distributors have not been published, it is said generally that the percentage will be determined through appraisal by the Finance Ministry of the cost of the films to be imported as well as through examination by the Home Office and other authorities of the substance and quality of the submitted features.

The authorities are said to have taken into consideration the fact that in view of the recent attitude taken by foreign distributors, paricularly the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in connection with the direct distribution of films in Manchuko through the Manchukuo Motion Picture Association, prudence will have to be followed in making the final allotment of percentages.

Further strengthening of the existing foreign exchange control law was decided by the Exchange Control Commission early last month and the revision was announced in the official gazette on December 11th, to take effect immediately. The two provisions having direct bearing on the film import business, when and if it is resumed, are that the maximum monthly amount of import exchange and non-exchange bills bearing imports for which Government permission is not required is lowered from the previous Y1,000 to Y100, and that import exchange permission must be obtained before importation of the goods involved.

The action was taken, it is reported, because notwithstanding the Commission's expectation that control of foreign exchange could be attained to a greater extent by the previous reduction of the maximum from 30,000 Yen to 1,000 Yen, rather a marked increase was shown in the import amount of non-urgent commodities as covered by non-exchange bills.

It was revealed early this month that the Government finally had decided to shorten motion picture theatre play-hours. This is, indeed, a serious shock to our exhibitors at large, if not necessarily to houses of first-run major rank, and is a further setback to foreign film distributors.

Since early last fall, shortening of play-hours has been contemplated by Home Office officials who frequently called representatives of film companies for conference to study the problems. Synopsis of the new ordinance, effective from February 1st, 1938 throughout the country follows:

"The play-hours of motion pictures for one show at movie theatres is provided not to run any longer than three hours. Silent films to be shown in the hour stipulated must not exceed over 4,500 meters in total footage, while in the case of sound pictures, their footage must not exceed any more than 5,000 meters. In case of violation of these regulations, offenders will be fined or punished with detention."

Explaining the motive of this ordinance, Director Abe of the Police Bureau of the Metropolitan Police Board is quoted as having said:

"In view of the various circumstances which our film industry faces, definite revision of exhibition hours has become necessary. As main reasons for the new regulations thus prescribed on the play-hour, two items will be cited, namely, the prevention of deterioration in quality of pictures and the furtherance of the production of sound and excellent pictures. Consequently, it will be advisable for exhibitors to present in one show double programs consisting of two feature-length films with one cultural picture, newsreel or other short subject.

"So I wish everyone of the film producing companies sincerely to consider the motive of these regulations with the idea that he should hereafter devote more efforts to make as many good pictures as possible, and at the same time, I wish to suggest that in order to attain this important object, there should be more rigid action in censorship in the future. As important for local exhibitors is their redoubled efforts to operate their cinemas on a more rational management system, and to solicit a greater amount of new patronage, thus to pave the way for complete achievement of the national mission the motion picture has, for which we need the whole-hearted support and cooperation of all men concerned in our film industry. . . ."

The trade, particularly the exhibition field, is grumbling the argument that while houses of major category at key centres may suffer little from the shortened play-hour, local theatres of lower rank will be affected a great deal, now that they have to cut short their play-hour from four or five to three hours without distinction to theatres of all locations and classes. Explaining the seriousness of the effect on local third and subsequent-run houses, it is most probable that they will meet many obstacles in the way of arranging programs which for one show must include at least three different types of picture, one historical, one modern style Japanese feature-production, and one foreign product in order to meet the general taste of local patrons.

Under the new regulations, therefore, foreign films threaten more or less to be alienated from programs of such small houses where, in majority of cases, they have to arrange, first of all, Japanese programs before seeking foreign product. Except independents, the rest of the Japanese theatres are tied to some producing distributing units either under definite agreement or otherwise. Besides, with their play-hours thus limited, theatres of small towns which generally have to present such variety of pictures for one show may be compelled to withhold playing foreign product even against their will.

Both the regulation of play hours and the reported provisions of the import licensing act are regarded as preliminary regulations which eventually will be incorporated in a new cinema statute which will cover all phases of the industry. The law, reported to be in the drafting process in the Home Office, acting in cooperation with the Educational, Financial, Foreign, Commerce-Industrial and Military Ministries, will go to such lengths as to regulate the type of pictures to be shown on all programs, with so much playing time for entertainment, so much for cultural films and so much for short subjects.

The statute is expected to be submitted to the next session of the Diet.

Monopoly in Manchukuo

Quick to take advantage of the capture of Nanking, the capital of China by the Japanese troops, the Bureau of Tourist Industry of the Japanese Railway Office is taking the initiative in producing pictures for North China where our Government is contemplating the spread of culture through motion pictures, as well as taking the safest and wisest measures for the improvement of political and economic activity in that region of China where peace has now been restored.

MANCHUKUO LAW MODEL FOR JAPAN

An Imperial Ordinance issued in Manchukuo late in December under which minute rights are reserved to the Prime Minister for the regulation of the motion picture industry is regarded as a model for the law which is expected to be enacted in Japan for the same purpose.

Under the Manchukuan law no person or company can engage in production, distribution, export or import without the express permission of the Prime Minister; the Government may order the production of a certain film, and all films produced must be submitted for Government censorship. Violations are punishable by imprisonment and fines.

Among other ways to help advance cultural undertakings there, the Government has found motion pictures the most appropriate medium through which this purpose can be attained to the extent of bringing in harmony relations between Japan, Manchukuo and China. With this idea in view, the Bureau of Tourist Industry has now decided to produce 10 superimposed prints in the Chinese language on "A Glimpse of Japan" which the Bureau made last year, those having been already shipped to North China on December 13th. It is also learned that they will start large-scale production of similar pictures for the same region early next spring. The title of the pictures, probably a series of three-reel films, which are intended for distribution to North China territory, is "Marching Japan."

In keeping with the above plan under way by the Bureau of Tourist Industry, it is further revealed that Messrs. Kobayashi and Ohtani, Japanese film magnates, are planning the joint organization of an amusement company for the North China territory.

Japanese Films for China

After much controversy, the distribution of foreign films in Manchukuo has been settled with the arrangement that all motion pictures must be distributed through the Manchukuo Motion Picture Association, a corporation established early this year with a joint investment of 2,500,000 yen each by the Manchukuo Government and the South Manchuria Railway Company. Although, after difficulty, an amicable arrangement was reached between the MMPA and leading Japanese film producing units, no peaceful agreement was made between the MMPA and the American Motion Picture Association of Japan, composed of representatives for Japan of American film companies here, on the direct distribution of their pictures to Manchukuan theatres.

As a result the branches at Dairen of those American firms already have shut down, seeing no prospects any longer of direct sales to Manchukuoan houses. It is reported in this connection that except RKO and Warners, other offices there which are genuine branches of American corporations are planning to burn all their prints in the Dairen stock to save superfluous expenses for the special consumption tax which otherwise would be collected by Japanese custom houses, if the prints were returned to their offices in Japan. United Artists, Fox and Universal already have burnt them, while Paramount, MGM and Columbia have sent them back to their Osaka offices. Thus, there is now no American film left at Dairen for direct distribution to Manchukuoan theatres. Other foreign film distributing firms handling European product also are considering abandoning Dairen.

Newsreels Popular

Influenced by the public's growing interest in newsreels, now at its peak, every Japanese cinema is presenting newsreel war films featuring the North China and Nanking fronts every week to support feature pictures. In addition a number of theatres are being converted into cinemas showing newsreels and short subjects only for very cheap admissions.

It is rather pleasing that in spite of the current trend of the exhibition field which is receiving a poor supply of feature productions, both domestic and foreign, newsreels are now a strong inducement to frequentation of cinemas by all classes and ages of people, resulting in increased box-office grosses, while making active inroads into the exhibition field covered hitherto by feature length films. It is, however, feared that in that the play-hour is to be shortened definitely commencing from February 1st, the extended volume of newsreel presentation may eliminate long-footage feature films.

The total number of newsreels censored for the past ten months is reported to have amounted to 32,332 compared to 24,008, the number of those censored during the previous year. This situation, of course, is attributed to the amazing increase in the number of newsfilms produced three months in August, September and October. The fact, moreover, that the amount of newsreels exempt from censorfee for August, September and October is reported at 8,682 speaks volumes for the decrease in the number of photoplays produced during the same period.

Interesting still further is the present situation in the increased number of applications for the construction of newsreel houses filed at the Home Office censor board. It is worth special notice that despite the recent Government regulations restricting the construction of various buildings including cinema-houses, indications are that the number of movie houses showing newsreels and short subjects will continue to show gradual increase particularly in key centres of this country.

Circuit Manager Attacks DeMille Views on Costs

In an open letter to Cecil B. DeMille, R. N. Hurt, general manager of the Alger Theatres in Illinois, has taken exception to the producer's views on rising costs and the proportion which the exhibitor should shoulder, expressed in a speech at the meeting of Paramount district managers in New Orleans on January 8th.

Opening with the statement that his purpose was to give "an exhibitor's viewpoint on the subject and, at the same time, offer some constructive criticism which would benefit the industry as a whole," Mr. Hurt plunged immediately into his argument:

"One of the first things you mentioned is the high cost of production. To us it would seem this could be better stated by saying 'the cost of high production.'

Exhibitor "Materials" Up

"You mention that the cost of materials has gone up, which increases production cost. We find that the cost of our materials, which in this case happens to be pictures, has also gone up, as last year we granted increases ranging from ten to twenty-five per cent."

Touching on one of Mr. DeMille's conclusions the manager said: "You now go further to state that the theatres should carry a share of the producer's burden, even to the extent of taking a loss on operation, so that the producers could continue to make a lot of so-called specials' with no box-office value, which run into tremendous sums of money. The exhibitor who would attempt to do so, and many of them have, can only wind up in the poorhouse. . . ."

Mr. Hurt, commenting upon Mr. DeMille's statement that theatres have reaped a profit of three to one over the producers raised a question of whether Mr. DeMille had included bonuses paid to executives of the companies.

Wants "Good Pictures"

"You further mention the fact," he continued, "that you could make cheap pictures but do not want to. The fact of the matter is, you do make cheap pictures and a lot of them. We are forced to find some disposition for them because of your block-booking method of selling. What we want in the exhibition end of the business is good pictures, having mass appeal, which can be produced reasonably and sold in the same manner."

Concluding he said: "We quite agree with you that you cannot get back the cost of your productions in the approximately one thousand de luxe houses in this country. The fact that you have to have the supply of fifteen thousand smaller theatres, of which we are a representative, should indicate to you that productions should be based on the line that can be sold in these theatres. Experience has taught us, time and time again, that class pictures produced for the glorification of the producer in the foreign market, with historical, costume, epic or grand opera themes, suitable only for big situations, are poison to the small exhibitors. You cannot expect to get preferred time with this type of production. . . . The thing in our mind that should be most important in production is, 'What will it do at the box-office?'"

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Starring Laughton

Erich Pommer has selected Vivien Leigh to play opposite Charles Laughton in the new Pommer-Laughton Mayflower production, "St. Martin's Lane." Miss Leigh made her first important screen appearance for Erich Pommer in "Fire Over England."

Over the last three months, practically every actress of importance has been either considered or tested for the role, while Erich Pommer, Charles Laughton and Tim Whelan, director on the production, have visited theatre and cabaret shows in London, even traveling up to the Provinces in their search. Unknown girls have been picked from the chorus or from the ranks of extras, to make a screen test opposite the English star.

"St. Martin's Lane" is the second Charles Laughton starring vehicle to be made by the Mayflower Pictures Corporation, and was written for Laughton by Clemence Dane. With Laughton taking the role of a theatre queue entertainer, most of the action takes place against a background of London theatre queues and in the streets and pubs of the West End.

Pommer and Whelan were last associated in the production of "Farewell Again," one of the finest British films of last year.

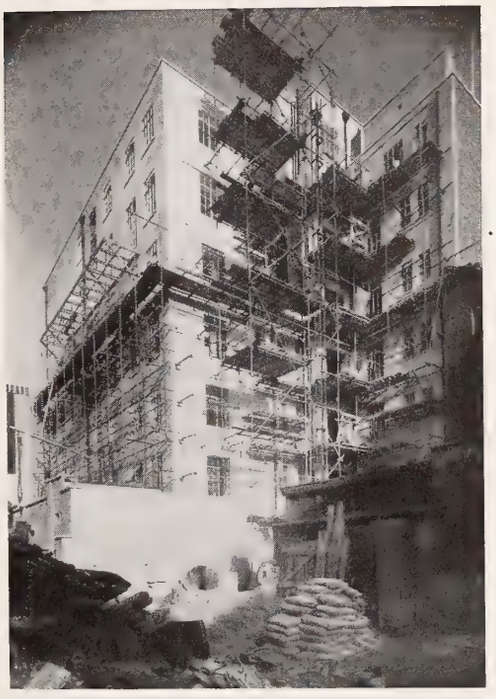
The first Pommer-Laughton Mayflower production, "Vessel of Wrath," has been completed, and will have its London premiere at the Regal, Marble Arch, on February 24th. Both subjects will be distributed in Great Britain by Associated British Pictures Corporation, Ltd.

Nelson Romance

In announcing that Anna Neagle's next film will be based on the romance of Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson, Herbert Wilcox says he has solved the knottiest problem of his career—to follow up the success of "Victoria the Great" with a subject of equal magnitude and appeal.

The new film is due to start production on April 13th. Wilcox is to direct personally and the production will be entirely in Technicolor.

It will take an unusual line by tracing in parellel action the careers of the blacksmith's daughter and the son of the country clergyman who both rose to be dominating figures in the history of their country and whose lives ultimately became interwoven. This dual story will be unfolded against the background of the Napoleonic War. The Battle of the Nile and Trafalgar will be filmed on a spectacular scale.



The same writing team who were responsible for the script of "Victoria the Great" are working on the Lady Hamilton subject. Charles de Grandcourt has written an original story and Miles Malleson is writing the dialogue. A special musical score is to be composed by Anthony Collins, whose music for "Victoria the Great" was recently broadcast in the form of a symphonic suite.

The treatment has been approved by the Hays organization.

Herbert Wilcox Productions, who have been making pictures at the British Lion Studios, Beaconsfield, for British Lion release, are continuing that process. Into production last week went "No Parking," a Gordon Harker comedy thriller which is being directed by Jack Raymond, director of "The Rat."

British Lion is directly associated with the production and will distribute.

Included in the cast are Frank Stanmore, Fred Groves and George Hayes.

The London offices of Twentieth Century-Fox, now in Barners Street will be moved into the building above at 31/32 Soho Square about the middle of March.

Comic Opera

Geoffrey Toye, musical impresario and operatic showman, has announced that he will head a company which will start production in June of a series of films devised from the Gilbert and Sullivan operas.

Victor Schertzinger has been engaged to direct the first of these, either "The Mikado" or "Yeoman of the Guard," at the Pinewood Studios. Release through General Film Distributors has been arranged but details of American distribution await settlement.

At the time of the announcement no title had been agreed on for the producing company, which in fact had not yet been registered.

Mr. Toye has, he states, the approval of Mr. D'Oyly Carte in his schemes.

Educational

A new era in film education was inaugurated by Gaumont-British Instructional on January 22nd, when a series of educational film matinees commenced simultaneously in London, Leeds, Manchester, Chester and Newcastle. In this series, for the first time, some of the films are to be inserted into the normal running hours, and additionally, some of the programs will be of an entertainment character.

Thousands of schools in all the areas centered round the above cities have been approached, and the response has been such that overflow houses on alternative dates may have to be arranged.

The programs will be based on particular themes: "Deserts," "Growth Throughout the Seasons," "Entertainment Programme," "Special French Programme," "India & Ceylon," "The country in Spring" and "Scotland and Wales," each on successive Saturdays.

In March and during May revision programs of educational films for school certificate candidates will also be put on, also on Saturdays.

Lawrence Huntington, director who writes his own stories, has written and is directing "Bad Boy," a film about a Borstal (detention school) boy, who comes out of jail to degenerate into a gang leader. In the lead is John Warwick, who has, to support him, Kathleen Kelly, John Longden and Brian Buchel.

Production under the Radius Films marque is in progress at the Stoll Studios, Cricklewood, London.

Arrangements have now been completed for Associated British Film Distributors to distribute a short in Dufaycolor entitled "Design for Spring."

The film was directed by Humphrey Jennings and produced in collaboration with Norman Hartnell, dress designer, whose models are worn by Royalty and society hostesses in this country.

Inspired by Leslie Stuart's sentimental song, "Little Dolly Daydream," Butcher-Argyle Productions has gone before the cameras at Nettlefold Studios, Walton-on-Thames, under the direction of Oswald Mitchell. It will be released by Butchers Film Service, lesser English distributing concern.

Topping the cast is the vaudeville star Talbot O'Farrell, who is supported by Sidney Fairbrother, Cathleen Nesbit and others.

On the floor at Associated British Studios, Elstree, now is "Lover's Knot," which has gone into production under the direction of Paul Stein.

COMMONS COMMITTEE PREPARED TO RUSH ACTION ON FILMS ACT

Proposal for Supplementary Quality Test Accepted at the First Session; Stanley Withdraws Alternate Quota

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Refreshed by the winter suns of Chamonix, Kitzbuhel and Mentone, confused by the British film industry's intricate display of mercurial disunity members of the House of Commons Committee on the Cinematograph Films Act, this week returned from the Christmas recess to the Parliamentary battle front.

Charged with the thankless task of making sense out of nonsense, and weaving from Mr. Stanley's complex constitutional strands a pattern which will mollify all and exasperate none of the industry's hydra heads, they this week continued the examination and approval of the remaining nineteen of the bill's clauses.

As the committee met on Tuesday of this week Mr. Stanley announced that following general rejection by the trade he would take no further action regarding his alternative quota scheme. He rebuked the producers for their roundabout rejection of the proposal instead of rendering a frank yes or no as they had been requested. After reaching the clauses dealing with the quota schedules the committee adjourned to Thursday with indications that every effort would be made to conclude the committee stage at that time.

In its first session the committee accepted a proposal of the Government for the establishment of machinery under which any film passing the cost test for quota eligibility may be rejected on the ground of poor quality. Before an audience of 40 unemployed film technicians the committee heard it pointed out that the clause would result in every film starting with an immediate element of uncertainty.

Captain Euan Wallace, Parliamentary secretary of the Board of Trade, who presented the Government's proposal, claimed exhibitor support for it. Mr. Stanley, on the other hand, pleaded that the clause merely permitted the procedure but did not actually establish it.

The committee defeated an amendment offered by Sir William Layland that the minimum labor cost be increased to £20,000. Its defeat followed the protest by Mr. Stanley that reciprocity was of real importance and that an increase of the minimum labor cost would tend to force reciprocity rather than assist it.

The deliberations of the committee were preceded by a demonstration in which 200 unemployed film workers participated. They gathered in the House of Commons building and engaged in vigorous lobbying among members. A meeting had been planned for an outdoor site but it was prevented by police.

The group demanded increased quota percentages and fair wages, claiming there are 8,000 unemployed in the film industry. It was suggested that between 60 and 70 per cent of the American films imported last year were less than second rate.

Labor Clause Undecided

Yet to be considered, and presumably approved, are those sections of the Bill dealing with the delicate question of labor costs and the employment of foreign stars and technicians. As at present in draft, the Bill stipulates that 75 per cent of labor costs shall be spent on Britishers and that one foreigner, i.e. star technician or director, may be excluded from that stipulation and thus allowed to work here.

On this point, a vital one when the complete lack of star names and skilled technicians is remembered, both the labor unions, bent on defending their own territory and nationals, and dead against the intrusion of foreigners of any kind or category, have made a counter claim to Stanley's suggestions, by asking that the labor cost minimum be increased to 85 per cent.

The producers, though they have, as in the case of the alternative quota scheme, hidden their light under a bushel, are known to be tolerant of the increase of this figure to two, provided that one be a technician or director, and the other an artiste. They, too, are notoriously in favor of a higher labor cost minimum. The fact is that general studio labor is plentiful and adequately efficient, but producers are well aware that there is hardly one outstanding British film on the last two years' records which could have been made without the assistance of either a foreign star or a foreign technician or director—generally both. They are, thus, prepared to go part way in this labor policy of insularity, but not to the extent of interfering with their own bread and butter.

It is Mr. Stanley's plan to accelerate the deliberations of his Committee and get the Bill into the Commons for a third and final reading, and then to the Lords for the last lap.

Even at this stage it is perfectly safe to forecast that the figures of quota percentages will remain exactly as they are in the present draft of the Bill, and there is little likelihood that Stanley will capitulate before the changing and flamboyantly staged producer-labor thunder, or that his Parliamentary apostles will outrage the political loyalties and forsake their chief.

This confidence that the quota figures will not be interfered with is to be found in Charles Metcalfe, president of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, a man of no illusions and much foresight, who at a meeting of Scottish exhibitors last week let fall the very bald hint that they had good reason to believe the Government sympathized with them in regard to quota and that the present figures would not be altered.

Warning by Metcalfe

It is significant that Mr. Metcalfe, representing the point of view of the man who has to make his living out of British and American pictures, issued a warning against the dangers in industrial districts of interfering with the supply of American films.

Speaking personally he objected to any kind of quota on exhibitors. It was wrong in principle and did more harm than good. If any film was so bad that they would not book it without compulsion, then it should not be shown at all. It was politic, however, not to lay themselves open to charges of unpatriotism by voicing this view.

These will be the Committee's most pressing problems on its reassembly. They will, too, have to consider suggestions for the inclusion of all films made in the Dominions among Quota registrations—a plan which exhibitors, already encumbered by indifferent productions from India, Australia, New Zealand and elsewhere will hardly smile upon. The setting up of a cost test for shorts, and a proposal to impose a tax on all foreign films and use the proceeds as a subsidy to deserving British producers will occupy them briefly.

Within two or three weeks then the Bill should have passed on its way through Committee and gone back to the full House of Commons for ratification. There it will be subject to consideration and, if necessary, amendment, not in details, but rather on its general objective and purpose. . . . Then to the Lords. . . . And then into law. That stage is not yet at hand, however, so neither producers, distributors, exhibitors nor workers have yet started to prepare for the millenium.

Union Agreement Near

Efforts to achieve a nationally observed labor pact between exhibitors and their employees' unions are gradually but surely meeting with success in Britain. Agreements have been concluded or are in process of negotiation between fifty per cent of the C.E.A. branches, and the National Association of Theatrical and Kine Employees. In some areas the machinery of the London and Home Counties Conciliation Board is being used as a model.

KENNEDY INVITED TO CEA BANQUET

Joseph P. Kennedy, newly appointed United States Ambassador to Great Britain, has received an invitation to attend the annual banquet of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association as guest of honor. American interests in London are enthusiastic over the move believing that it will have considerable influence in assisting Anglo-American film trade relations.

The banquet, to be held March 8th, is generally considered the outstanding social event of the year in the British film industry. Ernest Brown, Minister of Labor, will be present.

Mr. Kennedy is scheduled to sail for England from New York on the Manhattan February 23 to assume his post. Should he accept the invitation it will mark one of his first public appearances in England as ambassador.

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 101

Question No. 101 was: (A) At what point would you recommend resurfacing the screen or under what condition would you recommend the installation of a new screen in preference to resurfacing? What type of surface would you recommend, silver, white or tint and why.

Billings and L. Jones; R. Davis and F. M. Brown; B. L. Jones; D. M. Stinson; A. W. Sullivan, H. R. Jackson and W. M. Hamilton.

I have selected the reply of G. Thompson as best suited to the needs of publication. He says: "In consideration of this question it may be wise to first give thought to what various items of damage a dirty or discolored screen inflicts. They may be enumerated, I believe, as follows: First there is loss of light, and since the production of it costs money, its loss adds to the basic cost of projection. Second, a dirty or discolored screen surface lowers its reflection power and reduces the contrast of the picture because its whites are discolored. This in turn operates to cause the picture to be less beautiful, and I believe have less of what we term "depth." Whether or not that last be correct, it certainly operates to lower the entertainment value of the picture almost in proportion to the amount of the fault.

"But, Mr Richardson, it is hard to set any definite, exact point or degree of soiling or discoloring at which the projectionist could feel justified in recommending a cleaning or resurfacing, because he would, aside from the visual test you have recommended many times, have no solid basis of proof that his recommendation was well based. In fact there is, I believe, no way of proving it at present and probably no method could be set up except to actually measure the light reflected from the screen and the light reflected from a sample representing the surface of the screen when it was new.

"In my opinion you have yourself provided the only reliable means for testing condition of a screen surface that is or could be of practical use to projectionists or theatre managers. As per this suggestion I would have a sample of the screen surface wrapped in several thicknesses of soft, black cloth, laid away in a dark closet. Every sixty days I would, by means of bent pins and the sprocket holes, suspend this upon the screen, having it perfectly flat and in contact with the screen surface. I would then project while light and, together with the manager, watch results and form judgment from the difference in brightness of the sample and the surrounding screen as to whether cleaning or resurfacing should be done. As a matter of fact, I have no such screen surface sample, so I make the experiment with white paper having, as nearly as I am able to judge, the same reflection power the original screen surface might have been expected to have had when new. We have found this quite satisfactory but we certainly got a real surprise the first time it was tried. The screen looked all right, but when that clean, white paper was hung on it, the paper shown like a morning star. The whole thing seems to be a very simple efficient test; if it is backed up by good judgment.

"I would recommend resurfacing after it has had one thorough cleaning, referring, of course, to a surface that can be cleaned, or in case there seemed to be chemical discoloration or streaks or spots. I would recommend resurfacing after one cleaning of a surface that can be cleaned for the reason that while it is not possible to clean any surface in such manner that its entire reflection power is restored, one cleaning will result very fairly well. The second would have the drop-off of the first one, plus that of the second, and so on, which I think should not be tolerated.

"As to colors, I have visited a large number of theatres during my seventeen years of service as projectionist and have looked at pictures on, I think, every kind of screen that has been to any extent in use.

"I would not presume to say which is the best type of screen surface, viewed from the reflection angle. That is a question with several "corners." What is best in one auditorium is or may be far from best in another. But as to color, it is my opinion, after careful observation and study, the plain white serves all purposes best. The tinted screen once gave apparent benefit by serving to soften the white, but very often it was not used wisely. Wrong tint or too much of it. Moreover, it does not work well with colored pictures. The "silver" screen, to my way of thinking, imparts too harsh a light tone—too 'cold.' The white seems best, provided, as "Dad" has so many times told us, the screen illumination be kept at a limit just sufficient to imprint all photographic details contained in each frame of film upon the screen. That much light is essential; anything more tends to create glare. At least it contributes to straining the eyes that must look at it constantly for a long period of time.

"As to replacing an old screen with a new one, the old screen is O K just as long as it contains no cracks, can be kept perfectly flat and its perforations are not clogged enough to seriously affect sound volume and quality. Before recommending a new screen because of the perforation diameter reduction I would examine the perforations of the old one with a rather powerful magnifying glass. I have found a strong reading glass satisfactory for the purpose. Grinding a file handle point to form a reamer, I, working very slowly and cautiously, using the magnifying glass, ream a few of the holes to their original diameter. On several occasions have discovered that perforations that looked 'not so bad' were really reduced in diameter quite a lot."

An excellent answer, friend Thompson, and one I can agree with at all points. That reamer stunt is a new one.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

CRIMINALS OF THE AIR: Rosalind Keith, Charles Quigley — Excellent little picture that pleases. — Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

GAME THAT KILLS, THE: Charles Quigley, Rita Hayworth—A fair picture that played to poor business. Played January 4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LET'S GET MARRIED: Ralph Bellamy, Ida Lupino —Like most of the Columbias, there was nothing outstanding about this one. It is a light comedy which we played on our Bank Night, and which seemed to amuse the crowd.—George W. Pettengill, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Mattawamkeag, Maine. Rural patronage.

MURDER IN GREENWICH VILLAGE: Richard Arlen, Fay Wray—No more than fair on all accounts. Played December 29.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RANGERS STEP IN, THE: Bob Allen, Eleanor Stewart—Just a western. No box office value. In face of our local situation being bad and business off, it is hard to note any box office value.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WOMEN OF GLAMOUR: Melvyn Douglas, Virginia Bruce—A dandy picture we enjoyed playing. O.K., Columbia, orchids to you. — Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

First National

ALCATRAZ ISLAND: John Litel, Ann Sheridan—Pleased a fair size crowd. Believe the title alone brought them in. I'd suggest that Metro and First National get together when making pictures of Alcatraz as prison scenes in "The Last Gangster" and this were in no way alike and this is an opinion voiced by my patrons. Running time, 64 minutes. — A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

DANCE, CHARLIE, DANCE: Stuart Erwin, Jean Muir, Glenda Farrell—This is one of those shows that you can't help liking. It is one of those comedy pictures that is not too silly, but is one of those good old funny-bone ticklers. We ran this picture on Dime Night and folks told us that it was the best comedy picture that we have played to date. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 26 - 27.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery, Patsy Kelly—If there ever was a picture that was built to make you laugh, this is it. Running time, 79 minutes. Played January 19 - 20. — R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery, Patsy Kelly—Marion Davies has always had the brains to surround herself with capable support and production effects and I have yet to see a picture of hers that wasn't good entertainment even though you hear comments to the contrary. Before you pan Marion again, analyze any of her recent pictures. — Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE IS ON THE AIR: Ronald Reagan, June Travis—Just a star-less picture, not good but not too bad. No bouquets and no bricks. Not good enough for a Sunday showing. Running time, 61 minutes. Played January 22 - 23. — Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LOVE IS ON THE AIR: Ronald Reagan, June Travis—With no stars to pull 'em in, the title on this killed our chances at B.O. and it doesn't have the least thing to do with the plot. It's not light musical comedy as one would expect from such a title. It is indeed just the opposite, being a gangster picture. Played January 11.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MISSING WITNESSES: John Litel, Dick Purcell, Jean Dale—A nice mystery drama that was well received by our patronage. Nothing outstanding and it would not stand alone but a nice double feature picture. Such pictures as these are the reason that exhibitors must play double bills, as this would not stand alone on a program in our situation. Running time, 60 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box-office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

MR. DODD TAKES THE AIR: Kenny Baker, Frank McHugh, Alice Brady, Jane Wyman — Dandy little program picture. Some of our lady fans think this boy has it on Robert Taylor, and they are real Taylor fans, too. We think the little Wyman gal is a comer. Played January 14 - 15. — Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PERFECT SPECIMEN, THE: Errol Flynn, Joan Blondell—The best from Flynn since "Captain Blood." Truly exceptional entertainment from a "perfect" cast. Running time, 95 minutes. — Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

SAN QUENTIN: Pat O'Brien, Humphrey Bogart, Ann Sheridan — Extra good prison story. — Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SUBMARINE D-1: Pat O'Brien, George Brent, Wayne Morris—This is excellent. No more need be said. Business fair. Played January 1.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THEY WON'T FORGET: Claude Rains, Gloria Dickson—Pleased a small Friday-Saturday crowd, although everyone was dissatisfied with the ending, as they wanted to know who was guilty. I don't believe that there could have been a better ending though, to put the moral of the story across. Running time, 94 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

THEY WON'T FORGET: Claude Rains, Gloria Dickson—My patrons are still wondering "who killed her." These unusual endings are not satisfactory here but, nevertheless, this is a fine attraction. Running time, 95 minutes.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BEAU HUNKS (RE-ISSUE): Laurel and Hardy—Good comedy that will support a small feature and get you money.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

BIG CITY: Spencer Tracy, Luise Rainer—Excellent picture for the common people. Holds up well. The kind of picture that gets a few dollars extra on Monday and Tuesday.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1938: Robert Taylor, Eleanor Powell, George Murphy — Our folks were pleased, and business was above average. Considering the fine cast, I agree with those who have said that the picture should have been better. For one thing, a big musical extravaganza must have good music, and the nearest approach to a hit in this one was apparently a rehashed version of "Singin' in the Rain." Running time, 110 minutes. Played January 27 - 28. — H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

CONQUEST: Greta Garbo, Charles Boyer—It's the same old story. Garbo just will not bring them in. This was a grand picture, well liked by all who saw it, but that was mighty few. Running time, 112 minutes. Played January 16 - 17. — Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE WEDDING: William Powell, Myrna Loy —The original to most imitations you see these days. After all the shouting is over, you can lean back and count on Metro to deliver pictures that have that finished touch, if you know what I mean!—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

GOOD EARTH, THE: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—I do not think this picture quite suited to small town audiences, but we managed to put this over in good shape and make some real money on it by contacting nearby high schools, and also by booking the "News of the Day" Panay pictures on the same program. I still think it was the Panay pictures that got them to attend.—George W. Pettengill, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Mattawamkeag, Maine. Rural patronage.

GOOD EARTH, THE: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—Very fine attraction, but no small town picture. Running time, 139 minutes.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

GOOD OLD SOAK: Wallace Beery, Betty Furness—Not as good as the usual Beery standard, but should please all. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 21-22.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

LAST GANGSTER, THE: Edward G. Robinson, James Stewart, Rose Stradner—Fine picture, plenty heart interest, fast action and prison scenes that will clean up for you. Running time, 81 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

LIVE, LOVE AND LEARN: Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell, Robert Benchley, Helen Vinson—Just a passable programer. Stars will help. Pleased all the way. Running time, 78 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

MADAME X: Gladys George, John Beal, Warren William—Good picture that registered zero at the box office.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

MADAME X: Gladys George, Warren William—Very good. It still makes 'em weep. Didn't do much business for us, but those who came were well satisfied. Played January 6-7.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MADAME X: Gladys George, Warren William—Entertaining and pleased all. Will please in any spot. Running time, 72 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

MADAME X: Gladys George, Warren William—The old story back with a new star. In my opinion, Miss George excelled in her portrayal. No box office, as the general comment was "I've seen it." Running time, 77 minutes.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

MY DEAR MISS ALDRICH: Edna May Oliver, Maureen O'Sullivan, Walter Pidgeon—Just a passable programer. Running time, 70 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

MY DEAR MISS ALDRICH: Edna May Oliver, Walter Pidgeon, Maureen O'Sullivan—This is a good comedy due largely to the presence of Miss Oliver. Our folks like her fine. She deserves the best material available. Played January 12.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MY DEAR MISS ALDRICH: Edna May Oliver, Maureen O'Sullivan—No kicks on this one, and it pleased. I feel, however, that this star combination is worthy of better material. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 20-21.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

NAVY BLUE AND GOLD: James Stewart, Robert Young, Tom Brown—This is too good for words. The trio of players named above do themselves proud. A good attraction at the box office. Played January 8. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NAVY BLUE AND GOLD: Robert Young, James Stewart, Florence Rice, Lionel Barrymore—The story has been done many times, but never any better. Has plenty of everything to please the folks in the small towns. Played January 27-28.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

worst money makers.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THOROUGHBREDS DON'T CRY: Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland—Here is a picture that had great prospects that absolutely fell by the wayside. One of the best matinees we have had in a long time, but when it came to the evening show, the grown-ups stayed home and listened to our chief competitors on Sunday night, the radio stars. The picture itself had the time-worn plot and we all knew what to expect and it happened. So what? Running time, 75 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

TOPPER: Cary Grant, Constance Bennett—Boys, here is a honey. It is one of the cleverest pictures we've ever played. Very funny with clever photography. Did average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Paramount

ARTISTS AND MODELS: Jack Benny, Ida Lupino, Martha Raye—Played it late and took a licking. Clearly demonstrated you can't play a poor picture late. The first 60 minutes was good entertainment, but the last 30 minutes left a bad taste. The Martha Raye number was so unnecessary and just about washes her up. Running time, 97 minutes. Played January 26-28.—D. F. Smith, Pella Theatre, Pella, Iowa. General patronage.

BARRIER, THE: Leo Carrillo, Jean Parker, James Ellison—Rex Beach's story of Alaskan gold fields. Well directed and acted picture that pleased. Played January 19-20.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE OR NOTHING: Bing Crosby, Martha Raye, Andy Devine, Mary Carlisle—Good picture that pleased. Bing well liked here.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

EBB TIDE: Ray Milland, Frances Farmer, Oscar Homolka—This is different and is worthwhile. A good story, well played, and cast is excellent for their roles. Color is superb. Business good. Played January 9-10. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

EBB TIDE: Ray Milland, Oscar Homolka, Frances Farmer—The scenery and color was beautiful but the picture and story was just another one of those rough sea pictures that don't click at the box office. I am at a loss to know just why these producers make as many sea pictures as they do. I have yet to play a sea picture that made money, especially in a small town. The public don't seem to care for sea pictures, costume pictures, English pictures, gangster pictures. Why force them on us? Why not make more pictures that are true to life? Running time, 97 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HIGH, WIDE AND HANDSOME: Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott—Supposed to be one of the best from Paramount, but it sure missed being an outstanding picture by a long way. We played it Christmas Day to a very small audience. We left out part two by mistake on the last show and nobody knew the difference. Nice picture, eh what!—George W. Pettengill, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Mattawamkeag, Maine. Rural patronage.

HIGH, WIDE AND HANDSOME: Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott, Dorothy Lamour—Better than most Paramount pictures I have played as far as box office is concerned.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

HOPALONG RIDES AGAIN: William Boyd, George Hayes, Lois Wilde—This is the first of these we ever ran. It was a better-than-average western and drew extra business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 21-22.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MAKE WAY FOR TOMORROW: Victor Moore, Beulah Bondi, Fay Bainter—Strictly adult entertainment. Young folks not interested. Good comments, but no money.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

MIDNIGHT MADONNA: Warren William, Mady Correll—Don't pass this one; it has what it takes to please 'em. Good comments.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

RUSTLER'S VALLEY: William Boyd, George Hayes—Below the standard of Paramount western's stories. Pleased the western fans. Played January 26.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SOPHIE LANG GOES WEST: Gertrude Michael, Larry Crabbe, Robert Cummings—Nice program picture which pleased, but it gripes to know that so little effort is being put behind these Class B pictures and so much money going into the super-colossals, many of which will not take in much more than film rental. Running time, 61 minutes. Played January 12-13.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SOULS AT SEA: Gary Cooper, George Raft, Frances Dee—Splendid picture that failed for me at the box office.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

HE'S RENEWING OLD ACQUAINTANCE

"Following an absence of thirteen years I wish to resume my contributions to your department," writes George W. Pettengill, Jr., of the Cameo theatre in Mattawamkeag, Maine. "During the winter seasons of 1924-25 I submitted reports on pictures from the Mirror Lake theatre at St. Petersburg, Fla.

"Since that time I have been a projectionist, newsreel cameraman and an automobile salesman. Since that time your department has moved from the old Exhibitors Herald, through the Herald-World, and finally to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Yes, we are growing up, and it seems like renewing an old acquaintance to be reporting 'What the Picture Did for me.'

"I now operate the local 'opera house' 'way down east in Mattawamkeag, Maine."

THIS WAY, PLEASE: Betty Grable, Charles "Buddy" Rogers—The recession must have gotten the best of this one because it shows the effects of economy at Paramount. However, our audience seemed to like it and that's what really counts. But don't expect a big musical production when you book this one. It's a story about a movie "palace" gone slightly batty.—George W. Pettengill, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Mattawamkeag, Maine. Rural patronage.

WELLS FARGO: Joel McCrea, Bob Burns, Frances Dee—A honey for us small town operators. Give it all the publicity you can and then count the new faces. Adverse weather the last two days spoiled a new house record for us. Is Paramount making a Will Rogers of Bob Burns or am I crazy? Why don't some of the other producers attempt a few on the order of "Wells Fargo." Running time, 115 minutes. —A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

Republic

CIRCUS GIRL: June Travis, Bob Livingston, Donald Cook—O. K. circus thriller. Donald Cook is a favorite of mine. Other stars also O. K. in this.

RIDERS OF WHISTLING SKULL: The Three Mesquiteers (Ray Corrigan, Max Terhune, Bob Livingston)—Very fine western. These stars are hard to beat. Very popular.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

THREE MESQUITEERS, THE: Robert Livingston, Ray Corrigan, Mex Terhune—Played this series on a Wednesday-Thursday to help midweek business, but was very disappointed. Weekend seems to be the spot as farmers still like them.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNAPOLIS SALUTE: James Ellison, Marsha Hunt, Harry Carey—Thoroughly enjoyable picture with Annapolis background. Young stars were good, but Harry Carey, in a character role, was especially pleasing to our patrons. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

BREAKFAST FOR TWO: Barbara Stanwyck, Herbert Marshall—Only a fair program picture. Barbara Stanwyck is slipping. Running time, 70 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BREAKFAST FOR TWO: Barbara Stanwyck, Herbert Marshall—A clever little comedy that should please any audience. Good action and well directed. Stanwyck perfect, but Marshall hard to understand at times. Business not up to normal due to weather. A good midweek or giveaway picture. Running time, 63 minutes. Played January 24-25.—D. F. Smith, Pella Theatre, Pella, Iowa. General patronage.

DANGER PATROL: John Beal, Sally Eilers—Good action story with background of Texas oil fields. Harry Carey, in support, still pleases our fans.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

DANGER PATROL: John Beal, Sally Eilers—A "thrill" picture of an unusual sort, this fair programer is by no means a fast action picture and will not be a satisfactory substitute for the regular Saturday Western. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 29.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

FIGHT FOR YOUR LADY: John Boles, Jack Oakie, Ida Lupino, Margot Grahame—Up to the last reel our patrons thought this a pretty good comedy drama. The over-burlesqued dueling sequence, etc., however, disappointed. Directors should learn that patrons prefer something that "might have happened." They can get the impossible in cartoons. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

FLIGHT FROM GLORY: Chester Morris, Whitney Bourne—Ordinary story of grounded flyers. The air-minded will probably go for it. Played January 25.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

FORTY NAUGHTY GIRLS: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Some comedy, but the picture was just fair. No great appeal, but just an average production. Fairly good for small towns and country. Played December 25.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

HIGH FLYERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is a good little comedy to run on double feature. It is no epic, but just a good little program picture for those who like their comedies. Lupe Velez has been away from the screen all too long. Running time, 60 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

LIFE OF THE PARTY, THE: Joe Penner, Gene Raymond, Harriet Hilliard—Plenty of action and comedy. Something doing every minute. Pleased our patrons. Will go over well any place. Played December 11.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

LIFE OF THE PARTY, THE: Joe Penner, Gene Raymond, Parkyakarkus, Harriet Hilliard—Good comedy. Joe Penner and Parkyakarkus steal the show. No plot. Lots of comments, no complaints, business good. That is all that is necessary. Running time, 77 minutes. Played January 24-26.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

LIVING ON LOVE: James Dunn, Whitney Bourne —Why RKO persists in using a star as good as Jimmy Dunn in such poor pictures is one reason the exhibitor must run double features. This is about as poor a picture as we have seen from this company. Running time, 60 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

MAKE A WISH: Bobby Breen, Basil Rathbone—This being the first Breen vehicle played here, I was especially observant of the audience response and found it to be completely favorable. Running time, 77 minutes. Played January 15-16.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

QUICK MONEY: Fred Stone, Dorothy Moore—Most of the money in this is in the title, but don't be afraid of it for small towns, for it will please. Good all-round cast, more good laughs than the audience will be expecting, and it ends up with a bang, both literally and figuratively. Running time, 59 minutes. Played January 22-23.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

STAGE DOOR: Katharine Hepburn, Ginger Rogers, Adolphe Menjou, Andrea Leeds—Thanks to RKO for giving Hepburn a part like this; thanks for Hepburn doing a good job with the part. A few like this and the country folks will like the gal, if it matters. Ginger Rogers shows she doesn't have to dance to get by. She can also act. The most enjoyable show in many a day. Enough smart lines for a dozen shows. Bad weather ruined business, but no fault of the show. It's a honey. Played January 23-24.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

STAGE DOOR: Katharine Hepburn, Ginger Rogers, Adolphe Menjou, Andrea Leeds—Good acting and some action. A smart up-to-date picture. A little too high class for the country or small town patronage. Fine for big towns and class theatres. Played January 22.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, La. Small town patronage.

SUPER SLEUTH: Jack Oakie, Ann Sothern—Good comedy that pleases most people.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

WINDJAMMER: George O'Brien, Constance Worth —Why do they waste the time of a good star by putting him in a picture that fits him like your right shoe would fit your left foot? The O'Brien fans were very much disappointed, so if your people like this fellow, you had better let them keep the whole picture. Running time, 58 minutes. Played January 21-22.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

at New Deal experiments and wasteful spending. Our business was cut by terrible sub-zero weather. Running time, 81 minutes.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

ANGEL'S HOLIDAY: Jane Withers, Robert Kent—This picture is made to order for any small town, and like the other Jane Withers pictures made more money for us than recent Shirley Temples—George W. Pettengill, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Mattawamkeag, Maine. Rural patronage.

BORNEO: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—A fitting last act for that greatest of explorers, Martin Johnson, who with his brave wife, Osa, has done more to bring us a knowledge of little known lands and the animal kingdom than anyone else. I have always followed their travels with interest since they spent a week in our little midwestern town soon after his return from the cruise on the Snark with Jack London, and it was with a feeling of sadness that I watched the final fade-out on the screen. Where big game hunters brought back ivory and furs that would be seen only by the privileged few, the Johnsons brought back pictures of animals in their native land, that were shown in the largest and smallest theatres and enjoyed by all. Kansas may well be proud of the Johnsons. I am glad Osa is going to carry on and I shall look forward with pleasure to exhibiting her next picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 19-20.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN ON BROADWAY: Warner Oland, Joan Marsh—One of the best. "Chan" always draws here. This was different, but had the usual "Chan" philosophy and plenty of action and comedy. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 19-20.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

HEIDI: Shirley Temple, Jean Hersholt—This has been reported as her best to date, and I agree with this estimate of the picture. It has the elements that make pictures good—well acted, some comedy, action. What more can be asked for? Played January 29.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

HEIDI: Shirley Temple, Jean Hersholt—Delightful from every angle and drew many favorable comments. The work of Jean Hersholt, also Class A. Running time, 88 minutes.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED OUT WEST: Paul Kelly, Judith Allen—Fair picture. Wonder if Fox will ever make an extra good western?—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS IN COLLEGE: Ritz Brothers, Joan Davis, Tony Martin, Nat Pendleton—This went big guns here. The Ritz Brothers should shorten their acts, but so long as their stuff is clean, which it usually is, they are O. K. by me. However, it is surprising that the company that owes so much to Will Rogers and Shirley Temple would end up any picture of theirs with Joan Davis in outright vulgar position, evidently trying hard to steal the show. Joan, tidy up your acts, and you are O. K. Running time, 94 minutes. Played January 29-30.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE AND HISSES: Walter Winchell, Ben Bernie, Simone Simon—A clean-up all the way; extended runs; music for the box office. Running time, 85 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

ONE MILE FROM HEAVEN: Claire Trevor, Sally Blane, Bill Robinson—Fine program. In my estimation, Bill Robinson stole the picture. If you have a Negro balcony, advertise this picture big to them. Plenty Negroes in it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

THINK FAST, MR. MOTO: Peter Lorre, Virginia Field—I feel that our folks made a big mistake by not coming out to see this excellent picture. My own mistake was playing it Monday-Tuesday instead of Family Night. Running time, 66 minutes. Played January 24-25.—H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

WINGS OF THE MORNING: Annabella, Henry Fonda—All I can say for this one is that it is a beautiful piece of color photography devoted to an English picture which has no appeal for a small town audience. Thanks to our serial, we managed to break even on this one. My advice is pass this one up.—George W. Pettengill, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Mattawamkeag, Maine. Rural patronage.

United Artists

PRISONER OF ZENDA, THE: Ronald Colman, Madeleine Carroll, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—A wonderful picture. Stars great. Sorry to report that business wasn't.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

PRISONER OF ZENDA, THE: Ronald Colman, Madeleine Carroll, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—A swell picture, but sure didn't do any business for us. Just can't get them in. This had action, romance and everything, but to no avail. Running time, 101 minutes. Played January 23-24.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WALTER WANGER'S VOGUES OF 1938: Warner Baxter, Joan Bennett—This is my first contribution to "What the Picture Did for Me" and it took "Vogues" to do it. "Vogues" is undoubtedly a masterpiece. The coloring is beyond description. Joan Bennett, who in the past has always been good to look upon in black and white, is literally a poem of grace and beauty in color. The story, though light, is entertaining. The cast and direction is perfect. Box office slightly above average. Advice, get behind it. It's well worth your effort. Played January 23-25.—J. O. Guthrie, Karolyn Theatre, New London, Ohio. Small town patronage.

Universal

ARMORED CAR: Robert Wilcox, Judith Barrett—Good small picture for double bill support.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

LADY FIGHTS BACK, THE: Irene Hervey, Kent Taylor—A very weak picture. Poor business draw. Played January 5.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

100 MEN AND A GIRL: Deanna Durbin, Adolphe Menjou—Expertly produced and swell entertainment. The business it did, however, hardly came up to expectations. Played January 2-3.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TROUBLE AT MIDNIGHT: Noah Berry, Jr., Catherine Hughes—An average melodrama that gets by. Business poor. Played December 28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

BLAZING SIXES: Dick Foran, Helen Valkis—Good. All Dick Foran pictures are good. Why not keep him in western pictures? Running time, 57 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SUITE 605, 729 SEVENTH AVENUE

NEW YORK CITY

DEVIL'S SADDLE LEGION, THE: Dick Foran, Anne Nagel—Good western. Business not as good as on other Foran pictures.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GO GETTER, THE: George Brent, Anita Louise, Charles Winninger—The type of picture that pleases everyone and gets word-of-mouth advertising.—Russ Anderson, Garland Theatre, Garland, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

GREEN LIGHT: Errol Flynn, Anita Louise, Margaret Lindsay—Very fine show. Played too old and paid way too much for it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

IT'S LOVE I'M AFTER: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—This is quite funny and good entertainment. More for your class patronage, however. Business not quite up to par. Played December 30-31.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

VARSITY SHOW: Dick Powell, Fred Waring, Rosemary Lane, Priscilla Lane—With this production Warner Brothers again comes to the fore in musical comedies. It introduces five newcomers to the movie world, Rosemary and Priscilla Lane, Fred Waring, Johnny Davis and Mabel Todd, all of whom are future stars. The picture itself is tuneful, mirthful melange of melody with Rosemary Lane and Ted Healy stealing the show. Although it is entirely too long, it has several bright moments, such as the Fred Waring Choir, Rosemary's singing and the spectacular finale. Dick Powell is not liked here and seemed out of place in the picture. From the above you can see that Warner just missed a winner by a narrow margin. Running time, 110 minutes. Played January 29.—J. A. Reynoldfs, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

AIR HOSTESS, THE: Color Rhapsodies—This is good.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

CASH AND CARRY: 3 Stooges—Very good nonsense.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

COMMUNITY SING, NO. 3—This is an excellent collection of singable football college songs. It is well sung and contains good variety. Orchestra is snappy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GRACIE AT THE BAT: Andy Clyde—A generally funny comedy. Baseball addicts will get a kick out of it.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RAILROAD RHYTHM: Krazy Kat Cartoons—This is the first Krazy Kat we have played from Columbia and will say that they are very good. Running time, eight minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS, NO. 2—Good entertainment. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SET 'EM UP: Special Sport Thrills—This bowling reel is interesting. They'll like it.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WRONG MISS WRIGHT, THE: Charlie Chase—A funny comedy that should please.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Educational

DANCING BEAR, THE: Terry-Toons—Clever cartoon, with catchy music. Running time, one reel.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BLOTTO: Laurel and Hardy reissue—This reissue will keep any audience happy. It's still funny and our people liked it.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

CARNIVAL IN PARIS: Musical Comedies—So poor that we didn't bother to play it the second night. We figured we could save that much extra off our electrical bill and have more satisfied customers.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

COLORFUL BOMBAY: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Another FitzPatrick we were pleased to have shown. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

GOLF MISTAKES: Pete Smith Specialties—These are justly named specials. If you live in a locality where golfing is all the go, play this up to the golf enthusiasts and you will have them for friends the rest of your life. Running time, nine minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

RESUMES REPORTING AFTER 13 YEARS

Thirteen years ago, writes George W. Pettengill, Jr., he was a contributor to "What the Picture Did for Me." This week he oiled his typewriter, put in a new ribbon, and presently were forthcoming the reports appearing in the columns this week, from the Cameo theatre at Mattawamkeag, Maine.

Reporting for the first time is J. O. Guthrie, of the Karolyn theatre in New London, Ohio.

Resuming after a year's interval, the volunteering of information on what pictures did or did not do for them are Russ Anderson of the Garland theatre at Garland, Utah, and Lee Brewerton, Capitol theatre, Raymond, Alta., Canada.

HAVE COURAGE: MGM Miniatures—Not so good and not so bad. Running time, nine minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: Musical Comedies—They don't come better than this. Coloring makes them outstanding. We have since used "Sunday Night at Trocadero" and the black and white photography used there couldn't compare.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HOUND AND THE RABBIT, THE: Harman-Ising —This is the worst one we have played from this group. Running time, nine minutes.—R. W. Chickmore Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

HOW TO START THE DAY: Robert Benchley—Pretty fair, but not so good as previous ones. Running time, 10 minutes.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

NIGHT 'N' GALES: Our Gang—Enough said! Our Gang tops.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PANAY BOMBING SCENES: News of the Day—Because we received these first through Metrotone we will express to them appreciation, not alone for the subject but for the fact the Boston office gave us sufficient notice of the booking to allow us to advertise.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SERENE SIAM: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—This is very good. Our only criticism for this series of late would be that the subjects seem to be running quite some short of 10 minutes running time. They should be full reels.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SERENE SIAM: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Travelogues always please. Running time, 9 minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

SOAK THE POOR: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Excellent.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STOCKHOLM, PRIDE OF SWEDEN: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—One of the prettiest color reels it has been my privilege to see. I have always heard that Stockholm was such a beautiful place, but I had never dreamed that it could be like shown in this Travel Talk. Running time 1 reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BALL TOSSERS: Grantland Rice Sportlights (New Series)—And 10 minutes too short. We here in Indiana are strong for basketball and this one is a knockout. The heads of Paramount had better put their short subject producer in charge of features and then we would all be happy. Their shorts have been exceptional. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

CAR-TUNE PORTRAIT, A: Color Classics—One I kept away from. Why I don't know, but it's good and if you haven't played it pick it up. Running time, seven minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

LET'S CELEBRAKE: Popeye the Sailor—Not up to Popeye standard, but not too bad. Running time, seven minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

MAGIC ON BROADWAY: Screen Songs—Cartoon followed by song and bouncing ball following "Blossoms on Broadway."—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT NEWS: I think the best of the newsreels. Possibly because I get it hot, but same is very good, except the chief voice of staff.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

UNUSUAL OCCUPATIONS SERIES: These shorts are interesting. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

DONALD'S OSTRICH: Mickey Mouse—Another top-notch Disney. Very good. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

EDGAR AND GOLIATH: Edgar Kennedy Comedy —Average Kennedy slap-stick. Running time, two reels.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MORNING JUDGE: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—Not as good as the usual Edgar Kennedy shorts, but so much better than some the others put out that you should have no complaint from those who like Kennedy. Our patrons like him. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

MUSIC WILL TELL: Headliner Series—Good musical. Running time, 21 minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Mich. General patronage.

PATHE PARADE: Very interesting, but got no comments on this reel at all. Running time, 11 minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

PHONEY BOY: Nu-Atlas Productions—This is unusually good musical stuff until a woman runs amuck with vulgar torso-twisting. Change to next reel when she comes in and folks will enjoy this subject. Running time, 11 minutes. H. Wilson Young, Wahoo Theatre, Dubach, La. Small town and rural patronage.

PHONEY BOY: Nu-Atlas Productions—A clever little musical for fans who like their western songs. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

ROYAL STEEDS: Sports With Bill Corum—Another fine single from Radio. Running time, 10 minutes. Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

PANAY SINKING: Movietone News—Equally as good as the newsreel scoop by Norman Alley at no extra cost.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

ALPINE CABARET: Mentone Musical Comedies—A fair vaudeville act.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SINGING BANDIT, THE: J. Harold Murray—Okay single.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SHOES WITH RHYTHM: Mentone Musical Comedies—A fair subject.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Vitaphone

CAPTAIN BLUEBLOOD: Broadway Brevities—A fair musical. Better pinch yourself after seeing this one to see if you are crazy or the actors in this reel. Running time, 18 minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

CLEAN PASTURES: Merrie Melodies—These cartoons as a series are very clever and you will not be disappointed in this one. Our patronage liked it immensely. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

HERE'S YOUR HAT: Cookie Bowers—Not bad and seemed to please. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

LITTLE PIONEER, THE: Broadway Brevities—Very good Broadway Brevity. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LYIN' TAMER, THE: George Jessel—A good one-reel comedy featuring George Jessel, star of radio and screen, as a speaker at a banquet during which he interpolates an imaginary conversation with mama, sister and brother. Good gags and worth booking. Running time, 11 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

MEDIUM WELL DONE: Vitaphone Novelties—If you have ever been duped by a socalled Mystic Yogi, see how it was done. This reel is very interesting and also educational. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

PLAYING WITH DANGER: Floyd Gibbons' "Your True Adventure"—This is a crackerjack nerve tingler! But don't fail to show it on the kiddies' day. It's a grand lesson for all youngsters and their parents should thank you. Better than a dozen spankings, we'd say, for it shows them just what can happen when they take chances at play. They'll remember this one, we'll bet. It packs a terrific wallop!—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PRETTY PRETENDER, THE: Broadway Brevities—You had better pretend that you have played this one and let it remain on the shelves. Running time, 21 minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

PUPPET LOVE: Salici's Puppets—Play it. It's something unusual and without a doubt will please yours as it did mine. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

PUPPET LOVE: Vitaphone Varieties—The kiddies will like this, so run it when they will see it. It's good.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STARLETS: Broadway Brevities—The best short I have played this season. Worth extra billing. Running time, 20 minutes.—Lee Bremerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

THE RIMACS IN A MUSICAL JOURNEY TO SOUTH AMERICA: Melody Masters—Poor. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TOOT SWEET: Fifi D'Osay, Rufe Davis—Too silly! Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TWO BOOBS IN A BALLOON: Edgar Bergen and "Charlie McCarthy"—The one and only "Charlie." Folks sure get a kick out of this, grownups as well as the kids. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. W. Crickmore, Rainbow Theatre, Newport, Wash. General patronage.

UPS AND DOWNS: Hal LeRoy—Not as good as some Hal has made, but it is okay.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

VITAPHONE FROLICS: Vitaphone Varieties—Excellent vaudeville reel. Acts are all good.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WOODS ARE FULL OF CUCKOOS: Merrie Melodies—The title sounded promising to us, but the showing of the cartoon only proves anew you can't judge a book by its cover. No, this falls pretty flat and is a weak cartoon subject.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

IDOL OF MILLIONS: Jack Dempsey—This we thought would do extra business, but failed to do so inasmuch as it reviewed the highlights of Jack Dempsey's fighting.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Gets Citizens to Indorse "Holiday"

William Powell, manager of the LoNet theatre in Wellington, Ohio, who has answered inquiries from his patrons regarding Mae West pictures with the statement, "If she ever makes a clean picture I will show it," has booked "Every Day's a Holiday," having first secured the approval of a committee of representative citizens of his community.

Invitations to a private screening of the picture were sent to 20 residents of the town including a Methodist minister, a Baptist minister, a Christian Church minister, a Catholic priest, the chairman of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the mayor, a high school teacher, a member of the school board, a bank cashier, the president of the Kiwanis Club, the former leader of the Eastern Star for Ohio, the wife of a newspaper editor, the wife of the president of the City Council and three church deacons.

Of the 20 people invited 14 attended, one failed to vote, two voted unfavorably and 11 voted favorably. The voting was secret and the unsigned ballots were sent directly to the editor of the Wellington Enterprise who counted them and gave the results first page prominence.

In answer to the query "Should children be barred from the picture?" ten voted "No" and one voted "Yes, under 16 years." Mr. Powell gave it as his opinion that the two who voted against the picture did so because of the excessive drinking depicted.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

BINGO, BANKO--BUNKO!

Much has been written and said concerning giveaways. Bank nights, screeno, country store, rent night, and a thousand and one nights under the guise of sundry names have all come in for their share of scorching criticism by exhibitor heads and distribution executives alike.

And now it's bath towels! We are in receipt of a theatre advertisement clipped from a newspaper somewhere in the middle west. The ad measures sixteen inches. Bath towels are profusely displayed at the top, being the only illustration used in this advertising "masterpiece."

The copy advises that a special gift offer is made to patrons as follows: three 20-cent tickets, two 10-cent tickets, one 22 by 44 inch heavy Cannon bath towel, and two 12 by 12 inch heavy Cannon wash cloths; a regular $1.27 value, all for 85 cents for a limited time only! Readers of the ad are further advised that the towels and wash cloths may be seen on display in the theatre lobby, and, oh, yes, they come in four lovely shades, and will be delivered free.

The above copy takes up fourteen inches of this sixteen-inch theatre ad; the theatre slug occupies one and three quarter inches and leaves the gargantuan space of one quarter of an inch to inform readers that the theatre is playing "Souls at Sea" and "The Big Shot" plus News, Comedy and a Cartoon.

OBSERVATIONS

During the past month we had occasion to attend the world premieres of two important productions, "Hurricane" and "In Old Chicago" at the Astor Theatre.

Last week, genial house manager Jimmy Dunn of the Rivoli Theatre excitedly pulled us into his house to witness the thrilling hurricane scene of "The Hurricane," which was on view on the huge magnascope screen. We were genuinely thrilled. When we saw this same scene at the Astor on a regular sized screen, we were also thrilled, but in a much milder way.

Which leads us to suggest to men who play this film that you employ the use of your magnascope screen, providing of course, that you have one, for this climactic scene and get the full benefit of the terrific wallop it carries.

The tremendous and equally stirring fire scene in "In Old Chicago" will also undoubtedly prove more effective with the use of your magnascope screen.

Theatre managers are playing an important part in the civic life of their communities to a greater extent than ever. The latest, entitled to a bow for himself in this direction, is Louis Charninsky, of the Capitol Theatre, Dallas, who just took the oath of office as a member of the citizens' traffic commission at a ceremony conducted in the office of Mayor George Sprague. We sincerely hope that Louie will now stop parking his car at his theatre entrance.

CONCERNING LENT

Lent this year commences on March second and ends April seventeenth.

We can recall how exhibitors in years past viewed the coming of this Holy period with a feeling little short of grave Box Office concern. In recent years, however, exhibitors have found it to their advantage to exercise great care in the matter of their bookings.

In communities where the preponderance of potential theatre-goers observe this Holy period, we even suggest that exhibitors book special subjects concerned with Lent itself, of which there are several excellent ones on the market.

In this seat it is gratifying to note, like one in a conning tower, that managers no longer sit and sigh, but rather roll up their sleeves and observe the slogan of some illustrious philosopher whose name escapes us for the moment: "Knowledge is power only when used."

During the month just passed, our files reveal a record increase in membership to the Round Table. This past January has also seen many visitors to our office, many well-known to us, and others who came in to get acquainted. All were extravagant in their praises of what they have been getting out of the Round Table Section these many years, and upon being asked whether they had been sending material of their own to us, more than half had not, they admitted. Are you one of these gentlemen who likes to "take" but neglects to "give"?

Jack Goldstein

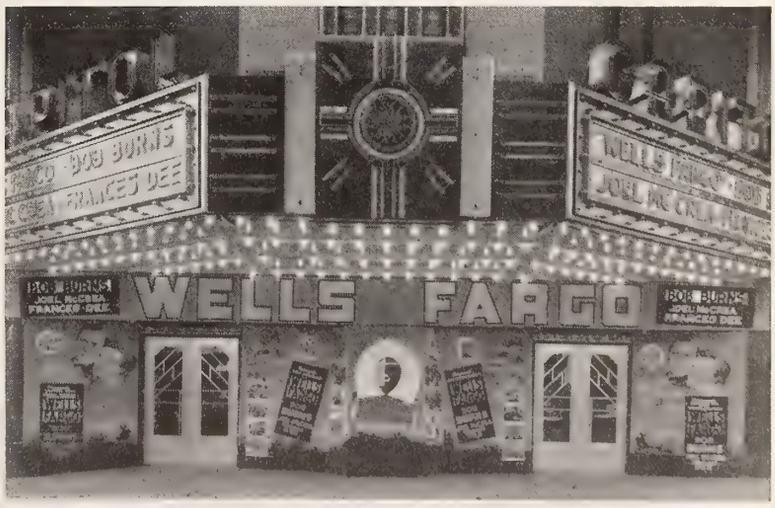
Eye-arresting indeed was Terry C. W. Leung's lobby display for "100 Men and a Girl" at the Queen's Theatre, Hong Kong, China. Directly below oversize cutout head of the starlet was replica of theatre scene showing Stokowski directing his symphony orchestra. Leung, incidentally, reports that Durbin is extremely popular with his patrons.

Because of what he terms "its genuinely refreshing and wholesome effect upon juvenile minds," Brother Fuilbert of the House of the Guardian Angel, Boston, chose "Rosalie" for the boys of his institution to see. Theatre party was arranged by Manager Fred Greenway of Loew's State who entertained hundreds of the lads, stories and photo breaking local newspapers.

Here shown, from left to right are William Pine, associate producer; Cecil B. DeMille, director and Margot Grahame, actress being presented with jumbo telegram arranged as a stunt in conjunction with the "Name the Movie Stars" contest sponsored by the Boston Evening American and all local theatres. The Hollywood ensemble were in Boston as guests of Martin J. Mullin and Sam Pinanski in conjunction with the opening of "The Buccaneer." Jack Malloy and Jack Kenney of the paper set the tie-up.

From far off Batavia, Java, comes this street bally shown above for "Prince and the Pauper" engagement at the Rex Theatre. Conceived and executed by J. R. E. Lambert, Warner Brothers manager there, this truck was completely covered on all four sides with enormous scenes from the picture.

For the date of "True Confession" at the Dubinsky Brothers' Missouri Theatre, St. Joseph, art head C. M. Griepenburg forwards this example of his poster art work. Head of Lombard was airbrushed in natural colors on a white background; panel was done in dark blue and lettering in yellow, pink, white and lavender.



Planted in dailies by Ely Seff, Garden Theatre, Davenport, Ia., was photo above of Moon Regan, program director of WOC and himself, discussing "Seargent Murphy" in which the former's brother, Ronald Regan appears. Regan is holding pressbook.

Constructed by Pat Argust, New Spreckels, San Diego, was lobby display for "Zamboanga." Added punch was given this atmospheric setpiece with use of girl wearing a South Sea Moro costume with all the trimmings.

From Harold B. Lyon, manager, Capitol Theatre, Burlington, Ia., comes this striking "Wells Fargo" front created by Eugene Gilbert, theatre artist. Cutout figures of Joel McCrea and Frances Dee were planted at either end.

QUICK REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

Junior Patrol

According to Fred Pickrel, Murray Theatre, Ponca City, Okla., Junior Patrol members observing their annual "Junior Patrol Week," sponsored the screen presentation of "Boy of the Streets" at his theatre. Showing was preliminary event before the boys annual banquet at the American Legion clubhouse.

Proceeds from the picture were used to buy new and additional equipment for the Patrol and for the banquet which was sponsored by the PTA, police department and safety department of the Continental Oil Company. Tickets were sold by the Junior Patrol boys week preceding show.

Lobby Device

During a recent M & P Theatre managers' week, Harry Goldstein, Morton Theatre, Dorchester, Mass. pulled a neat one by planting a slide projector over his box office on which was flashed a number of slides advertising coming attractions. Cards on which were listed the titles of these pictures were distributed to patrons who were requested to designate any four which they would favor seeing during the coming month and deposit cards in ballot box provided. Harry reports the idea clicked for him very satisfactorily with a return of about 40 per cent of the 3000 ballots distributed.

"Sweetheart" Candy

Through tieup with local confectioner, Tommy Read, Paramount Theatre, Atlanta, Georgia to publicize "You're a Sweetheart," distributed imprinted envelopes in which were bright cherry colored candy hearts. Copy on bags carried playdates, cast, etc. These were distributed on streets opening day by attractive girls and rings were handed out at the door in advance.

Wesp Wins

For the second time within a year, Floyd Wesp, manager of Warner's Rialto Theatre, Racine, Wis., in Jimmy Coston's zone, took down $150. first prize in their recent 10 week drive. Other winners in his group included A. Kopolas, Appleton Theatre, Appleton, Wis. who won $75. and A. Blasko, Symphony Theatre, Chicago, $25.

PRAISES MANAGERS' AWARDS CAMPAIGNS

"Will gladly serve as a judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1938.

For the past five years I have personally attended each one of these meetings and have had an opportunity to actually see the fine results that have been achieved by theatre managers due to the competitive Awards which have been presented yearly by Quigley Publications.

I must congratulate your organization on taking this iniative as I feel it is a fine stimulant for our industry."
—GEORGE C. WALSH, president and general manager, Netco Theatres, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Coast Hookup

Excellent newspaper breaks on "52nd Street" were secured by city manager Ed Crabtree for the date at the Fischer Theatre, Danville, Ill. through tieup with the Commercial News. Reporter from the paper called Hollywood and talked with Director Harold Young interviewing him with regard to the picture and its mid-western premiere. Story received three column head with story and photo.

Sidewalk arrows were used on every corner in downtown area with arrow pointing toward theatre and bearing playdates and title. For street bally sandwich man carried sign reading "you are unfair to yourself unless you see," etc. etc. Taxi fleet used imprinted tire covers, special attractive front was constructed and 24 sheets were posted at each entrance to the city, so that they could be seen by all incoming traffic.

Co-op Ads

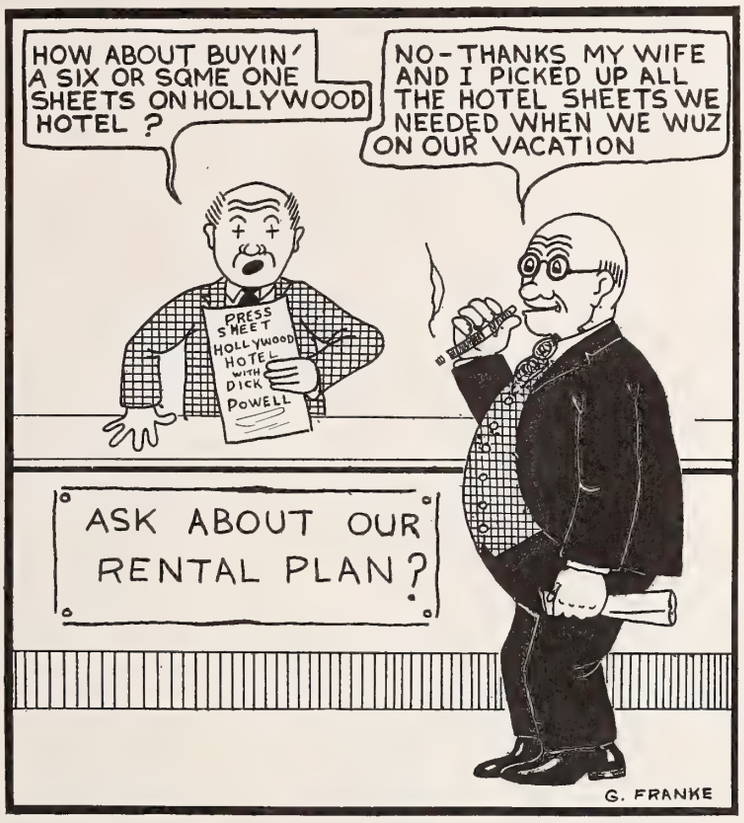
To sell "Vogues of 1938," Dan Krendel, Tivoli Theatre, Toronto, secured many cooperative ads which included playdates and picture plug. Imprinted paper napkins were planted in all leading downtown restaurants, 10,000 sticks of gum promoted from manufacturer were distributed attached to cards carrying cast and cut of Bennett and Baxter. For school coverage, Krendel distributed to students cards printed in black and white with photo of stars and crayon attached, copy reading "no matter how you color them, you cannot approach the glowing beauty of natural technicolor in," etc., etc.

Question Box

From H. M. Addison, northeastern division manager for Loew's comes new lobby idea used in Loew's State and Orpheum Theatres, Boston. Question box for patrons is planted in lobby inviting fans to submit questions concerning cast, director or any other detail of current attractions.

Patrons are requested to fill out questionnaire and drop in box provided for the purpose in lobby of both theatres. The answers are furnished by Marjory Adams, motion picture critic of the Globe for the State and Ann Masters, feature writer of the American and Sunday Advertiser for the Orpheum. The tieup with the newspapers was effected by Joe DiPesa, publicity director for Loew's in Boston.

School Tieup



Concentrating on the school angle, Arlie Crites, Palace Theatre, Lubbock, Texas for "Emile Zola" secured permission to install special box office in the administration building of the Texas Tech College to sell student tickets. Copy on picture, playdates, etc. were lettered on box office and tickets were sold for four days by one of the students. Arrangements were also made with local fraternity to sponsor sale, with special inducement of gratis ticket going to all boys selling ten or more tickets.

Contest was held in college journalism department, passes going to those submitting best essays on life of "Zola." Second contest was effected through tieup with Station KFYO, tickets awarded listeners sending in largest list of words from the title. Opening night included fifteen minute broadcast from lobby with local celebrities saying a few words; guests having been conveyed to theatre in fleet of new cars properly bannered.

Institutional

Various are the institutional slants employed by Eddie Selette, Warner's Albany Theatre, Albany, N. Y. among which are the distribution of bright yellow cards signed by the cashier and carrying message on forthcoming attractions. Through tieup with local circulating library, Eddie has managed to get his theatre imprint on all book covers. Another tieup which this theatreman has found effective is imprint on store bags, not only with playdates, but a brief editorial on the value of motion pictures as a mental diversion.

HOME OFFICE AIDS

Within a full-color four-page cover, a forty-four page exhibitors' manual on Walt Disney's first feature-length production, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," has been issued by RKO Radio, under the supervision of S. Barret McCormick. Presenting a multitude of angles in a comprehensive campaign in behalf of the picture, the book amplifies the usual production information with a history of the Disney opus, and graphic details of the Los Angeles and New York premieres. The wealth of favorable critical comment has been covered with a series of terse extracts.

Space is given the widespread advance treatment of the production by such national periodicals as Life, Stage, Good Housekeeping, Time, Town and Country, Look, McCall's, Popular Science.

For the guidance of theatre managers, examples are given of advertising by local merchants of items from the fifty licensee accounts who have issued merchandise keyed to the "Snow White" motif. These fifty licensees for "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" comprise a record for numbers of manufacturers engaging in parallel promotion with a single motion picture, and were marshalled by Kay Kamen of the Walt Disney Enterprises.

Besides various display, contest and stunt exploitation ideas, the book devotes special space to the many book tieups and the sheet music and record tieups. There are fourteen pages of ad designs and ten pages of publicity and feature stuff.

The great interest shown by High School and Grammar School students in the works of Mark Twain prompted the showmanlike educational display prepared by United Artists on Selznick International's "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" for use in English classes throughout the country.

The display consists of eight profusely illustrated panels, and is keyed to day-to-day study. The life, background, and works of Mark Twain are traced for the student, both in the text and pictures. From this point the sequence guides the study through all the intricacies of film-making, bringing home to the class that all this money and effort is spent because of Mark Twain's unique place in American literary life.

The display is being featured by more than 6,000 schools cooperating with the Hays' office in the study of the motion picture as an integral part of their English courses.

Coincident with the world premiere, and in advance of the general release of "The Spirit of Youth" starring Joe Louis, Martin Finkelstein, Globe Productions received an excellent letter from William J. Thompkins, Recorder of Deeds, Washington, D. C.

This letter written by the colored Recorder of Deeds acclaims the film as clean, wholesome and All American entertainment.

Since Thompkinson holds the biggest position ever afforded a colored person, his letter carries much weight with colored folk, and Finkelstein lost no time in having this grand send-off photostated and sent to every colored newspaper in the United States, for reproduction.

This newspaper publicity, needless to say, is certain to be of great aid to theatres catering to colored trade.

DeMille's Visit To Boston Gets Much Publicity

Cecil B. DeMille's visit to Boston in advance of the showing of "The Buccaneer" was preceded by a barrage of newspaper publicity and promotional activity that was little short of phenomenal.

Most effective was the contest planted with the Boston Evening American, with prizes promoted for the best candid camera shots of this famous producer. Heading the list of prizes was a trip to Hollywood, and expensive candid cameras.

The paper played this contest up in grand style, devoting reams of space to it, including many front page stories with art, and a complete full page of candid camera shots.

Harry Browning, publicity director for the M. and P. Theatres and his staff left no stone unturned in their exploitation efforts in connection with this visit.

DeMille was greeted at the train by hundreds of candid camera enthusiasts. He was officially welcomed by Rear Admiral Richard Byrd, a resident of Boston.

Among the many various tieups with the newspapers was one in which DeMille offered to take Maurice Tobin, Mayor of the Hub, to Hollywood, since the youthful city administrator is very handsome. Needless to say this secured many front page "breaks" in all dailies.

The Boston Sunday Post ran a full page of pictures in their special Pictorial Section.

Schedule was planned in advance of the arrival of DeMille, which kept him "on the jump" from the moment he arrived to the very last second prior to his departure. An outstanding arrangement was made whereby DeMille made a scheduled address at the famed Harvard University with resultant excellent publicity.

Front page stories, breaks on all theatre pages, news pages and pictorial sections all contributed to a stack of tear sheets which in the vernacular of the press agent was "terrific."

"Let's Hear From You!"

Use Insurance To Puff "Hurricane"

Insurance policies to protect their theatres against a hurricane proved an effective stimulant in the campaigns of several exhibitors when they played Samuel Goldwyn's "The Hurricane." It received most unusual publicity for the picture and it is reported that the price of the premiums was more than paid for by this free space.

Topping the list of such policies was one for $300,000, taken out by Ed Levin of Balaban and Katz at the United Artists Theatre in Chicago. The Chicago Tribune used a large illustrated feature story on the possibility of Chicago being swept by a hurricane.

Use of this idea proved especially effective in three New England cities: Howard Burkhart, Loew's State, Providence, Harry Spiegel, Waterbury, Conn., and James McCarthy of the Strand, Hartford, all used this exploitation medium to excellent results. The value of insurance was stressed in all cases.

CENTRE THEATRE OPENING CAMPAIGN

Radio Announcements, Newspapers, and Special Trailers Used to Fine Advantage

Third in our series of reporting activities concerning campaigns for the opening of new theatres, is that of the Centre Theatre in Salt Lake City.

The campaign for this opening executed by Manager Charles M. Pincus, and assisted by Helen Garrity with credit also to Stan Samuelson, ad and lobby artist, is as follows:

For three weeks previous to the opening of the theatre, 27 out-of-town Intermountain Theatres ran trailers on their screens plugging the theatre in an institutional way with the opening attraction also included. The angle used on these trailers hailed the opening as a "civic event."

No less than two hundred radio announcements were used for one week previous to the opening, and for six days a ten-minute ballyhoo was used on station KDYL with the heads of the various departments of the theatre organization being interviewed by the studio announcer. These theatre heads included Manager, Booker, Sound Chief, Chief of Service, Publicity Director for out of town theatres, and architect.

On opening night KDYL used short wave transmitter to long wave and broadcasted the premiere with the announcer carrying his pack on his back around the theatre, interviewing celebrities.

Fifty huge twenty-eight sheets were used, carrying name of theatre and opening date only, posted four weeks in advance of opening. Thirty 28-sheet boards were used plugging the opening attraction. Large set-pieces were used in the five Salt Lake City Intermountain Theatres.

The D.A.R. dedicated a plaque in the lobby of the theatre denoting the spot where the first modern irrigation was accomplished by the early pioneers. This event was broadcast, and among the speakers were the Governor, Mayor and D.A.R. ladies.

Two hundred street cars and buses used double space cards to sell the opening date. These cards were changed immediately after the opening to current attraction cards.

Newspapers, both local and out of town ran numerous stories concerning the new theatre and were generous with their art displays. One thousand 14x22 cards were wired around 500 light poles all over the downtown section two weeks in advance, with copy reading: "All Salt Lake Merchants welcome the grand opening of the Centre Theatre, Intermountain's newest and most modern theatre."

An advance preview of the theatre was held the night before the advertised opening which was attended by Mormon Church officials, State, City and Military invited guests. Newspaper reporters, cameramen and news service men covered this event.

Army searchlights obtained from nearby Ft. Douglas covered the skies for three nights previous to the opening. The Deseret News, leading newspaper, put out a special section for the opening and the other papers in town secured ads and ran them "run of paper."

Intermountain Theatre Boys Band of 75 pieces played a concert on a platform constructed to one side of the entrance to the theatre. This was picked up and broadcast by the largest radio station in Salt Lake City.

Many congratulatory telegrams from Hollywood personalities, exhibitors and others in the industry were prominently displayed in a large window on the main street, and attracted thousands of people.

Let's Hear from You

Defective Carpets Cause Accidents

Second of a series of articles on "Safety" as explained in a special manual issued by the M. & P. Theatres in New England. Quoting from this pamphlet:

"One of the most frequent causes of accidents in our theatres is defective carpets and linoleum. Stairways are always treacherous, and if the carpets covering the stairs are torn or excessively worn, there is a very good chance that a number of patrons will injure themselves.

"From experience we know that most accidents of this sort can be avoided. Constant and careful inspection is necessary, however. The check-ups should be made periodically, and repairs and replacements made immediately. It is far better to pay the cost for repairs or replacements than to incur a suit for damages.

"Women's high heels coming in contact with defective parts of the carpets usually account for a number of serious accidents on stairways. Many times women have slipped, broken both heels of their shoes and fallen down the entire flight of stairs. It's difficult to convince anybody that this was purely an accident and not gross negligence on the part of the theatre.

"Offhand, we can think of a number of ways in which accidents on stairways can occur. The edge of the step—that part that receives the most friction—often develops holes. Brass treads holding the carpet sometimes become broken or raised. Without constant supervision, the carpets sometimes become loose or raised. Every one of these defects is conducive to accidents.

"We don't believe it's necessary to tell you just how repairs can be made. You know, for instance, that by moving the carpet down, and by dropping the worn tread into the rise of the step, the same carpet can be used again with perfect safety. You know that by simply nailing down or replacing brass treads, you are insuring greater safety for your patrons. There are many ways to eliminate the causes of accidents. But only one slip-up on your part may mean expensive law-suits for your theatre and the company."

Quigley Awards Information At a Glance

Awards will be made quarterly; that is, your material will be judged on a basis of three-month periods. You "start from scratch" every three months. Quarterly competitions run: WINTER: Jan. 1-March 31; SPRING: April 1-June 30; SUMMER: July 1-Sept. 30; FALL: Oct. 1-Dec. 31.

There are five different classifications under which you are eligible: "A", cities of 250,000 or over; "B", cities of 100,000 to 250,000; "C", cities of 25,000 to 100,000; "D", cities under 25,000; "E", suburban or subsequent runs.

Silver Plaques will be awarded to each entry voted best in the above five classifications. An additional citation will be voted for the best entry selected as best from among these five winners, regardless of classification.

Citation of Merit Sheepskin Certificates will be awarded for the runner-up in each classification. First and Honorable Mention Sheepskins will also be voted entries not awarded plaques of Citations of Merit, but deemed worthy of recognition.

Every contribution from the field to Managers' Round Table that has to do with Advertising, Exploitation or Publicity in the theatre during each three-month period will be considered in determining the Quarterly Awards.

Complete campaigns are not necessary, although they are desirable.

Institutional campaigns such as anniversaries, festivals, new theatre openings, new season drives, kiddies' clubs, civic tie-ups, etc., will also be eligible for recognition.

Selections by the Judging Committee will be based upon an entrant's efforts during the three-month competition and not upon any one single picture campaign, as heretofore.

The Quigley Annual Awards will be continued in 1938, the winners to be chosen from among entrants earning the highest ratings in the year's four quarterly Competitions.

It is important and of vital interest to you that you keep sending material from week to week or such time as you have activities ready, since these Awards are based upon the most consistent efforts of entrants over the entire three-month period. In other words, each man may submit as many campaigns and material of any sort as he cares to during each Quarterly Competition.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures announced by the home offices of the distributing companies.

When a production is reviewed in Hollywood, the running time is as officially given by the West Coast studio of the company at the time of the review, and this fact is denoted by an asterisk(*) immediately preceding the number. As soon as the home office has established the running time for national release, any change from the studio figure is made and the asterisk is removed.

Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions may cause variations from the announced and published figures; repairs to the film may be another reason.

J C JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald

Up until now we have been having delightful winter weather, but last night the wind came down from the north. It is howling like a hungry wolf and it's getting cold enough to remind us of the '88 blizzard, and that was a pretty cold one.

Last night we went to the Moon theatre and saw "Tovarich" with Charles Boyer, Claudette Colbert, Basil Rathbone, Anita Louise, Melville Cooper and Isabel Jeans. It was a Warner Bros. picture, and if you can understand Russian and French you may like this picture.

They also had a Pete Smith short showing the trials and tribulations of a raccoon and several other animals. It was a good one, as about all of Pete's pictures are. Pete seems to undertsand the peculiarities of wild animals pretty well. He must have been raised along the Kankakee river.

We are just in receipt of a letter from our old friend, P. G. Estee of Parker, South Dakota, enclosing his check and asking us to renew his subscription to the HERALD. He says he has been rather negligent in reporting to the department "What the Picture Did for Me," but that from now on he is going to try and do better. We hope he does, for it is a department that all exhibitors ought to contribute to because of its general value to other exhibitors.

P. G. has built a second theatre in Parker and is giving that community the best there is in picture entertainment.

Thanks, P. G.

Business has started to pick up out here in the "White Spot." The other day a man offered to trade his neighbor a second-hand cultivator for his hound dog and three pups and the deal was consummated. It reminded us of a business deal that transpired in Indiana when we were a boy.

Josiah and his wife lived in a shack back in the woods near the Black marsh, and Josiah's father, Jake, who was a widower, lived with them. After a time Jake began to get kittenish with Josiah's wife and he offered to give Josiah 100 fence rails for his wife, and Josiah offered to trade if he would throw in fifty fence posts, which the old man agreed to do. The trade was made and after a while Jake concluded he had made a bad bargain and offered to trade back if Josiah would return him his fence material, and so the swap was made.

This isn't a "Believe It or Not" story and we personally know it to be a fact. Since we left Indiana and barbed wire has come in, the price of fence rails has gone down until a poor man has to try an eke out an existence single-handed and alone. They never did have the price of wives high enough in Indiana anyhow.

We can't understand why J. C. Fanning of the theatres at Brownsville, Texas, don't send us one of those big redfish he catches in the ship channel every day or two. We'd be glad to pay the express on it. There's no doggone sense of a man being so tight with his fish.

The mail brought us a letter from our old fraternity brother, Andy Anderson of the Lake and State theatres at Detroit Lakes, Minnesota. He invited us to the "Silver Jubilee" Convention at Minneapolis last week. He wanted us to try and be there, as a lot of the "Big Shots" were to be there also. Now listen to that. We don't happen to be a "big shot"; we are just a flint-lock pop gun loaded with "B. B.'s."

Andy referred to the time we visited him and Mrs. Anderson at their hotel in Brownsville, Texas, last winter. We recall that visit quite often ourself, and every time we do we have to guard ourself against the use of some bad language because of the promise he made us to call on us at McAllen, which he didn't do. The next thing we heard of him he had gone to Los Angeles (to see the stars, presumably).

He wrote us that his partner, Herb Anderson, is now in Los Angeles and that he is working up a sweat on a golf course out there. Well, if Herb has worked up a sweat we'll betcha the other fellow hasn't a dry thread on him, for that boy Herb certainly knows how to swing a golf club. In case you should doubt this we will refer you to Bonnie Benfield of the Benfield theatre at Morris, Minnesota.

Andy ought to be ashamed of himself for treating us as he did. However, we have forgiven him since getting his letter.

We just received a letter from Mr. Vincent Hoven of the H. & H. theatre at Bowdle, South Dakota, and he says, "Say, Colonel, my subscription to the HERALD has expired and I just can't get along without it. Will you have it renewed for me?" Why, of course we will. Would a duck swim? or would we eat huckleberry pie? Of course he can't get along without it; we don't know of any well regulated theatre that can. We don't recall just where Bowdle in S. D. is located, but if it is out next to the Missouri river in that driedup, grasshopper country it takes a man with plenty of nerve to operate a theatre, and our guess is that Vincent is the guy. We are for him 100 per cent.

Last night we saw the picture of the sinking of the "Panay" which was a very well taken picture, but we are wondering whether that was a news reel incident or an incident to excite the people against Japan as they were once excited against Germany. When you see the picture our advice would be to keep cool. Remember that the President claims to be trying to keep us out of war.

We also saw "Ever Since Eve" with Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery, Allan Jenkins, Frank McHugh and Patsy Kelly, a very good comedy-melodrama that we believe will suit the average customers. It's a good story, well acted and well photographed, although the title doesn't indicate what the story is about. It drew good business here.

Our mind is set on cutting this off right now, which we believe that you will agree to unanimously.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

MARTIN QUIGLEY, Editor-in-Chief and Publisher

VOL. 130, NO. 8 February 19, 1938

"WITH OFFENSE TO NONE"

UNDER the subject of "The Exhibitor's Screen—How Shall it be Used?" Mr. Martin Quigley in Motion Picture Herald of February 9 presented a discussion of the basic issues of policy raised by the much discussed issue of "The March of Time" devoted to a pictorial assembly entitled "Inside Nazi Germany."

In terms of the new provocation Mr. Quigley reasserted in behalf of the motion picture industry its essential and especially exclusive obligation of entertainment, and endeavours at entertainment, in nowise properly to be concerned with matters of controversy, either in exposition or special pleadings.

It will be remembered that last summer Mr. Quigley made this the text of an expression before the Institute of Human Relations at Williamstown, with much furore of controversy from the propagandists there assembled, and much subsequent comment in the press of the land. It is to be recorded that the press in general approved of the idea that the motion picture of the amusement screen should tend to its own business, which is entertainment.

IN connection with Mr. Quigley's more recent discussion of invasion of the theatre screen, exemplified by the pictures from Germany and talk strip from New York, it is of interest to record some expressions of reaction. For instance from Mr. David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer of Loew's, Inc., comes a telegram:

Congratulations on your splendid editorial on the screen. It is my opinion that the ideals as outlined by you are essential to the future of the theatre. The screen will live only by offering wholesome entertainment to all, with offense to none.

DAVID BERNSTEIN
Pass-A-Grille, Florida

And at hand is a letter from an attorney of contact and experience in the amusement world, saying:

Your editorial in Thursday's "Daily" and the current issue of the "Herald" concerning the March of Time's "Inside Nazi Germany" is a courageous expression of a sensible and level-headed viewpoint.

S. ROBERT KUNKIS
New York City

Also at hand, probably inevitably, is another of those expressions of the state of mind and order of thinking which would make the theatre screen a forum of causes, a home of controversy. The example, practically a stereotype of the special pleaders, is afforded in the motion picture column by Mr. William Boehnel, in the New York World-Telegram, in the course of which he sets down:

. . . Martin Quigley let out a blast . . . calling on exhibitors to tell "The March of Time" that it is welcome when it behaves itself, but only then. He suggests that exhibitors deny their screens to controversial subjects, forgetting that although exhibitors may own the screens physically, they are actually the property of the public, which has a way of its own of determining what it likes and dislikes and, further, forgetting that if the screen is ever to be anything but an escapist medium it must present subjects that are topical and controversial.

This comment was forwarded to the attention of Mr. Quigley, now in California, who addressed a letter to Mr. Boehnel, saying:

I am not forgetting that if the screen is ever to be anything but an escapist medium it must present controversial subjects.

I have no quarrel with the presentation of a controversial viewpont via the motion picture medium, or by any other method. My objection is to the use of the theatre screen, which is dedicated to entertainment, for purposes of vexatious argument.

I do believe that theatre screen should be, as you put it, "an escapist medium"—that is what the millions who pay the admission price are seeking. They go to the theatre in search of momentary escape from the trials and tribulations of everyday existence.

You may think that these millions should have their theatre hours expropriated for propaganda.

I think they should be given what their box office ballots demand—entertainment.

MARTIN QUIGLEY
Hollywood, California

The millions who ballot at the box office and what they demand are rather well understood, and have been these many years, by the established motion picture industry. This has become a world industry by reason of that understanding.

It is perhaps of significance that there have been negligibly few instances of screen material of propagandistic or controversial nature taking their origin within the experienced institution of the amusement screen.

There is no instance of significant box office success, which means approval by the amusement seeking public, based on controversial screen material. When Mr. Boehnel so poignantly remarks that the public "has a way of its own of determining what it likes and dislikes" it is a safe conjecture that he is writing from an impression not too well informed about the record of the line of product about which he is at the moment militantly concerned. Attention and the dins of the impact that seek attention are not necessarily evidences of complete triumph.

Forty-two years of the evolution of the motion picture theatre under the ministrations of a widely diverse array and succession of showmen have considerably explored the public reaction and demand. The showmen who have brought the motion picture into dominance as a medium of entertainment have been persons largely untrammelled by preconceptions,

This Week

For Conciliation

A proposal that conciliation or arbitration boards be established to hear disputes between exhibitors and distributors, and that the experiment be tried first in Philadelphia, was made this week in a statement issued by Lewen Pizor, president of the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware.

"It is submitted," Mr. Pizor said, "that Philadelphia has always been a pioneer in every salutory action, the goal of sane, constructive and sensible progress in this business or ours. Under the law, problems cannot be considered if they do not come within the four corners of the contract, for the courts are bound by the terms of the contract and cannot go beyond this. Even the enforcement of exhibitor or distributor rights, as set by the contract, too often is not the relief sought or the solution of the difficulty."

"WITH OFFENSE TO NONE"

social, economic, or political. Their success has been won in approval by the mass man and his family. A discovery today that this policy of entertainment for all, and, as Mr. Bernstein observes, "offense to none," is a mistake is in the nature of extremely improbable.

New minds may and must bring to the screen an ever renewed flow of creative endeavor, new enterprise, but that does not presume that they are to discover a new public which wants to convert its national theatre into a debating hall, or a Union Square.

One may hold a considerable sympathy with the ardent young men who consider the world less than perfect, and feel the while an urge to have things done about it. Facilities for expressions in such purposes seem to be afforded amply under the existing order by the press, assorted rostrums, and for some, the soap boxes. Within reasonable, or even rather unreasonable, limits customers for controversy can get what they want, and are therefore without warrant in invading the pleasant "escapist" hours of the overwhelming majority.

The bitter waters of controversy, no matter how medicinal, should not flow from the town pump.

TERRY RAMSAYE

Monopoly Warning

A warning against any form of monopoly in the radio industry was given by Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, and Frank R. McNinch, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, when they spoke this week before the 16th annual convention of the National Association of Broadcasters in Washington. A resolution providing for the election of 17 district heads and six directors at large and the appointment of paid president to occupy a position similar to that held in the film industry by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was approved.

The broadcasters also heard from Frank McNinch, Federal Communications chairman, that the FCC is going to recommend a federal investigation of radio, and a message from President Roosevelt reminding radio of its "responsibilities."

Developments in the radio field this week also included the release of results of a survey conducted by Dr. George Gallup, director of the American Institute of Public Opinion. The poll showed that a majority of the radio audience in the United States is opposed to Federal censorship of radio programs.

Stories are on page 13.
